IN MEMORIAM.
McDOUGALL—In loving memory of my darling grandma, Mrs. Hugh McDougall.
Just a thought of you, dear Grandma,
Just a memory, fond and true,
Just a token of affection
That I often think of you.
—Sadly missed by little granddaughter, Eva Leather.

IN MEMORIAM.
McDOUGALL—In loving memory of Mrs. Hugh McDougall, who went to rest one year ago to-day.
A wonderful mother, woman and maid,
One who was better, God never made,
A wonderful worker, loyal and true,
One in a million, that mother was you.
Just in your judgment, always right,
Honest and liberal, ever upright,
Loved by your friends and all whom you knew,
A wonderful mother, that mother was you.

Oft we think of you, dear mother,
And our hearts are filled with pain,
And this earth would be heaven
Could we but hear your voice again.

Days of sadness still come o'er us,
Tears of sorrow often flow,
Memory keeps our loved one nearer,
Whom God claimed one year ago.
—Sadly missed by loving husband and family.

IN MEMORIAM.
McDOUGALL—In loving memory of our darling mother, Mrs. Hugh McDougall, who went to rest one year ago to-day.
We are thinking of you today, dear mother,
Thinking of the past,
Picturing you in memory,
Just as we saw you last.

You left behind some aching hearts,
Who loved you most sincere,
That never did nor never will
Forget you, mother dear.

The dearest mother, the truest friend,
One of the best whom God could send.
She was loving, thoughtful, gentle and true,
Always ready a kind act to do.
Safe in the arms of Jesus.
—Ever remembered by her loving daughter and son-in-law, Lucila and Bert.

BOARD REDUCES PRICE OF BEER

New Schedule Brings Cost Per Glass Below 4 Cents.

EFFECTIVE FRIDAY.

TORONTO, June 23.—After several hours of continuous conference a settlement was finally reached last night between the brewers and the Ontario Liquor Control Board, by which the brewers are given the right to sell draught beer by the half-barrel at a prices which approximates 4 cents a glass, while the individuals may now go direct to the breweries for their purchase if they so desire. A reduction has been made in the price of beer, which amounts to 10 cents on every six pints, if purchased at the store or brewery, and something lower than this if delivery is made. The price on the individual bottle remains the same for the present. "We hope to make these prices effective on Friday," Chief Commissioner Hanna announced.

Draught beer may be purchased up to the quantities of one-half barrel, which contains 16 gallons, the price of which has been set at $15.50, with a rebate of $6.00 for the keg. The price on the one-eighth barrel keg containing four gallons, is $3.90, with a rebate of $1.50, and on the one-quarter barrel keg, containing 8 gallons, $7.85, with a rebate of $3.00. This brings the price to a little less than 4 cents on an eight-ounce glass.

The three main changes that have been effected by the new agreement, according to Commissioner Dr. R. J. Manion, are the greater facilities for obtaining beer, the cheaper price and the relief from the congestion at the liquor stores, occasioned by the permission given to the brewers to sell direct to customers. The Commission have at the same time extended the limit upon the quantity of beer which may be purchased at one time to five cases of pints and five cases of quarts.

In making the announcement last night Mr. Hanna was careful to point out that under the new price list the Commission was selling at a margin which simply covered cost of handling. "These prices, as between ourselves and brewers, allow for a very low percentage of overhead to cover wages for our men in the breweries and the cost of handling in the liquor stores," he declared. "If there is any profit at all, it will be so small that it will not be worth counting."

CANADIAN PROBLEMS SERIOUS DIVERSITY OF OPINION DEEP BUT PEOPLE REMAIN UNITED

John W. Dafoe Delivers Three Lectures To Members of Chicago University.

EXPLAINS PROBLEMS.

Confederation Resisted Absorption By United States, Says Speaker.

CHICAGO, June 24 (Canadian Press).—It is evident that Canadian problems are serious. Our differences of opinion go deep; but they are not likely to become dangerous because modifying agencies come into action as the flashing point is reached, John W. Dafoe, editor of The Manitoba Free Press, told his lecture audience at the University of Chicago today. He was speaking on Canada's political and economic problems, in the first of a series of three lectures which he will deliver at the University at the invitation of Norman Wait Harris Memorial Foundation.

"Diversity of economic interest, he said, as well as diversity of race form the background for Canada's problems. Sixty years ago Confederation had embarked on an effort to create an entity strong enough to resist absorption by the United States, involving defiance of economic and geographical realities." The method by which the whole country had been brought into the Dominion, he said, involved the country into vast commitments which have brought their harvest of problems.

Race Against Fate

"There was a time," Mr. Dafoe said, when circumstances seemed to indicate that geography could not be defined, but this was past. Canadians were now celebrating their sixtieth anniversary which is proof of the fact that Canada had taken an assured place among the nations. He reviewed the history of the birth of Confederation. It was achieved in a hurry in what was believed to be a race against Fate, he said. It was the fear of serious trouble following the conclusion of the American Civil War that brought home to the statesmen of both great Britain and Canada the need of creating out of the British Colonies a British American nation.

Racial Problem

Touching on racial and religious controversies he mentioned the constitutional guarantees given to the French - Canadian minority in the Dominion, and the educational minorities in the provinces. These controversies while quiescent at the moment were in constant danger of revival. He foresaw no likelihood of the forswearing by the French-Canadians of their claim to the official recognition of the language and the establishment of French religious schools, nor of concession of these claims by the English-speaking provinces, but he thought the English-speaking majority was assuming a more tolerant attitude.

Maritime Grievances

Reviewing the grievances of the Maritime Provinces which led to the appointment of the Duncan Commission, Mr. Dafoe said "That is was beyond the power of the Commission to deal with the heart of the Maritime problem; the existence of a fiscal system was oppressive to them. That remained a problem for which a political remedy must be sought.

Undoubtedly the Maritime Provinces had not hitherto employed their political power in defence of their material interests. This was not likely hereafter to be the case."

Fiscal Difficulties

With refernece to the fiscal difficulties of the Western Provinces, Mr. Dafoe said, "That in the matters of banking credits, tariff, taxation and transportation rates, they came into conflict with the fixed ideas of the financial and manufacturing centres of Central Canada. The rise to power of the Progressive party in the interests of the West had created a political situation of which the high Protectionist advocates found themselves obliged to take note."

Sectionalism in matters of taxation, transportation, banking and other business interests was mentioned by Mr. Dafoe, who descanted on the rise of manufacturing in the central provinces of Ontario and Quebec and the concentration of banking power brought about by the absorption of territorial banks by their larger competitors. Only banks with national scope could live, he said. Bankers looked forward, he continued, to a situation not unlike that in Great Britain, where five banks do the country's business. Praising the Canadian banking system for its stability, flexibility and universality, the speaker said, that there was an increasing body of opinion behind the belief that radical changes were necessary, among them the creation of a national bank of rediscount with possibly full note issuing powers.

THE WEATHER

The temperature took another decided drop last evening, and this morning the thermometer was down to 41 degrees. Several gentlemen told me that white frost was visible this morning. It is hardly likely, however, that it did any damage. Showers and thunderstorms are again prevalent in the west, and by way of variety an occasional hail storm appears on the Humane Society President Frees Entangled Horse

Information laid by the engineer of the Canadian National train from Port Hope at noon yesterday that a horse was caught in a barbed wire fence in the Monaghan district was passed on to T. Johnston, president of the local branch of the Humane Society, R. C. Smith, the Society inspector, being out of town.

Accompanied by George Johnstone, the president set out on the errand of mercy, and located the animal, which they managed to release after some labor. The horse belonged to a man named Seeley.

ADDITION TO COURT HOUSE ALMOST READY

Has Already Cost Ratepayers the Sum of $29,382.27.

GRANTS MADE.

Much Discussion About Grants To Different Exhibition Boards.

The cost of the new addition to the Court House, as reported to the County Council by Reeve Montgomery, chairman of the property committee, has been recently totalled at $29,382.27 with a few accounts still to be paid. Of this amount the county's estimated share is $13,956.58 and the city's share $15,425.69. The county's part of the cost could be covered by a rate of 1.4 mills.

The report continues as follows:

The grounds to the front and side of the new addition have been levelled and seeded; and the extra earth removed to the bank at the head of Victoria Park. The short distance the earth was carried, not only lowered the cost of the work, but added greatly to the appearance of both the park and the court house.

Although all the bills have not as yet been paid in connection with the new addition, the cost of same can be fairly accurately estimated as follows:

Paysheets and accounts paid to date	$24,201.76
Cameron & Co., furniture, etc., contract	650.00
Office Specialty Co., Vault equipment	3,000.00
W. Saxby, balance to plastering	100.00
Higgins Hardware Co.	1.20
Alf. McDonald Lumber Co.	499.25
G. H. Wise, contract, levelling grounds	399.00
Jas. Finnie, balance of fees	475.46
A. W. Connor & Co., balance of fees	55.60
Total amounting to	$29,382.27

The office and vault equipment has been purchased, but not yet installed.

The extension of the north wing of the court house harmonizes in design, material and general appearance, and not only incorporates the latest ideas in construction work of that kind, but also appears to be really fire-proof. It is a splendid job that should very favorably impress any of the city and county ratepayers who see it.

New Implement Shed

Reeve Smithson presented the following report of the special committee which had charge of the construction of the new implement shed at the court house property:

House of Lords Pass Measure of Reform

LONDON, June 24 (Canadian Press).—The three-day's debate in the House of Lords, during which the Upper Chamber of the British Parliament held the spotlight in public attention as it has not for many years, ended last night with the Peers voting, 208 to 54, in favor of a "reasonable measure" of reform.

Opposition to the government's plan is developing rapidly, however, on the ground that the Conservative government is attempting to entrench itself in power. The Marquis of Reading, the last speaker in the debate, declared that the Baldwin government had no mandate to carry out any such reform as was proposed.

CODE MESSAGES ARE ELIMINATED BY NEW SYSTEM

Facsimile of Whole Wireless Message May Now Be Reproduced.

NOTABLE RESULTS.

Will Be Possible To Transmit Whole Pages of Newspapers.

LONDON, June 24.—Recent experiments by G. M. Wright, research worker of the Marconi company, have brought appreciably nearer the day when messages will be sent by wireless and cable in exact facsimile of the whole message instead of dots and dashes, letter by letter, as at present.

The process is an adaptation of that by which wireless photographs are being transmitted, and by this method it will be possible for whole pages of newspapers to be filed at one end of the line and received in the form of facsimile photograph at the other end.

Sent Few Miles.

Under Mr. Wright's experiments, messages of this kind have already been sent a few miles in facsimile. He is now working to extend it over great distances and eventually expects to operate across the Atlantic.

The expenses of operating under this system has naturally not yet been worked out, but if the cost permits the day is not far away when, for instance, a newspaper in Montreal can photograph its whole edition, page by page, and telegraph it to Vancouver for reproduction there.

London newspapers could produce Canadian editions by simply wirelessing or cabling photographs of the completed pages to a printer in Canada, who by photographing process, could speedily reproduce the pages there.

Wartime Use.

Under this system an aerpolane observer in wartime would be able to transmit from the plane to his army headquarters instantaneous pictures of enemy country and enemy activities. It is obvious that the new system will revolutionize telegraphy.

Turkey Enters Lists For Ocean Air Honors

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 24.—(Canadian Press.) — Turkey's leading aviator, Vedjihi Bey, plans to attempt a non-stop flight from Constantinople to New York using a Turkish plane. His project has been approved by Mustapha Kemal Pasha.

The date and other details have not been fixed, but the aviator believes the distance can be covered in 50 hours.

Aviator, All Night In Sea, Swims to Safety; One Drowned, Another Is Reported Missing

LAGUNA BEACH, Cal., June 24 (A.P.)—While planes and scores of boats, including two destroyers, searched the waters off Laguna Beach yesterday for two men passengers of a seaplane that crashed into the ocean five miles off shore Wednesday, the body of one of the victims, Charles Robbins of San Diego, was washed ashore yesterday at Newport Beach.

Lieut. Commander William S. Hector, naval officer attached to forces stationed at San Diego, was the missinger passenger of the seaplane, whose pilot, Lieutenant Thomas G. Fisher, also of the naval forces of San Diego, swam ashore bringing news of the sinking of the aircraft.

The plane was flying from Seattle to San Diego. It made a stop at Crescent City, Cal., then proceeded southward. When he struck a heavy fog bank, Lieutenant Fisher, the pilot, dropped to a low altitude, hoping to get beneath the fog. He miscalculated, however, and the ship nosed into the sea, sinking quickly.

Lieutenant Fisher, reaching shore, stumbled into a camp of women and children. His haggard appearance frightened them and, thinking him a tramp, they refused aid. He went to another camp and was taken to Laguna Beach. Later a seaplane picked him up and took him to San Diego.

Lieutenant Fisher staggered ashore weak and suffering from cuts on his hand and over an eye. He told how the three men, all wearing life belts, had started to swim to shore from the place where the seaplane sank within five minutes after it struck the water about 9 o'clock.

NORWOOD BOARD OF EDUCATION APPEALS TO COUNTY FOR GRANT

BRIDGE IS CLOSED

Wallace Point May Be Abandoned—Pier Has Shifted.

John F. Elliott and T. B. Cutcliffe, of the Norwood Board of Education, told the County Council yesterday that their fifth form work may have to be discontinued unless a grant is received from the county.

"Three or four years ago you gave us a grant," Mr. Elliott said, "and we are appealing to you again to help us out on our finances."

It transpired that students from the village of Hastings who had attended the Norwood High School were this year attracted to Campbellford. For these 20 or 30 students Norwood had obtained a grant of $1,100 from Northumberland and Durham.

This year the County Council has been billed for more than $2,200 from the Campbellford Board of Education for the Peterborough County students on its High School register.

"I know a terrible lot of them are going down there," Deputy-Reeve McIntyre, of Otonabee, remarked.

Mr. Elliott informed the Council that the Norwood school's cost for each pupil was one of the lowest in the Province. The cost for local students is $108, and $87 for outside students. Mr. Elliott emphasized this difference, which was largely in favor of outside students.

Reeve Lillico said the grant from the county had been made for only one year. He considered it unfair that money be given to the Norwood school when 60 or 70 ratepayers are paying individual fees into Peterborough.

The Norwood request was referred to the Finance Committee.

Wallace Point Bridge.

The Wallace Point bridge over the Otonabee River will be temporarily closed forthwith pending examination by A. W. Connor, of Toronto, County Engineer, to ascertain the cost of refitting the bridge for traffic.

"I took a diver down there, as the committee directed," Mr. Connor said, "and found that the cribs, on which the pier is built, have collapsed. The west corner of the west pier has shifted 4½ inches and dropped 3½ inches. The crib appears to be a mess of stone and timbers, which make it more difficult to repair, and to put up a coffer dam to unwater it. It might cost $10,000 to rebuild that pier. If you ever think of abandoning it now is the time to do it. The bridge needs new joists and planks. I understand that people in that district can get to Peterborough by way of the Bensfort bridge or the highway."

To Mr. Smithson, the Engineer said the Council was taking a chance by leaving the bridge open. It had moved seriously in the last four or five weeks.

Mr. Smithson declared that there had never been any decision to close the bridge permanently, although such a notion had got abroad several years ago. Ordinarily the bridge carries only local traffic, but at present it would affect many persons. Two hundred vehicles crossed it last Sunday. On the Otonabee side is Cardwell's summer resort, which would be seriously affected if the bridge was closed, Mr. Smithson said.

The Roads and Bridges Committee, with Reeve D. Brown presiding, decided to close the bridge and post signs and red lights until Mr. Connor reported to the joint committee of the two counties an estimate of the cost of rebuilding the west pier. This motion was made by Reeve Smithson and seconded by Reeve T. Cavanagh, of Ennismore.

Galway Bridges.

Acting upon a report by Reeve John Clark, the committee recommended the assumption of Sheehan's bridge by the county, and also a grant of $400 for stone piers and a wooden top for Buckley's bridge.

Reeve Montgomery moved, seconded by Reeve Smithson, that Mr. Connor prepare plans for Boland's bridge in Asphodel.

A grant of $150 was made to Smith Township for McManus' bridge on motion of Reeves Middleton and Clark.

Reeve Breckenridge moved, seconded by Reeve Curtis, that $200 be granted to Belmont and Methuen to spent on a road through Methuen Township.

Reeve Caldwell, of Chandos, was given $200 for a road through his township to the Hastings boundary in the expectation of an allowance of $500 from the Colonization Roads Department; and Reeve Brown was given $50 for a road which he said needed repairs. In 1925 a grant had been made, but $39 was refunded to the county. "I'll guarantee there'll be no refund," said Mr. Brown, "and I'll see the money is well spent."

Reeve Hawthorne moved, seconded by Reeve Montgomery, that $200 be granted to Dummer Township for maintenance of the 9th line.

GASOLINE LEFT ON HOT STOVE

NO DAMAGE.

At 5.58 last night a lady living at 376 Water Street left a bottle of gasoline sitting on a hot stove without a cork. The heat almost immediately ignited the fumes of the gas, causing it to burst into a flame. The woman threw the bottle out of the window and then telephoned for the fire department. The flames were extinguished soon after the arrival of the brigade and no damage was caused. Chief Gimblett once again warns citizens against the use of gasoline near heat, for serious loss of both life and property is bound to result from the use of this chemical mixture.

HAVELOCK, June 24.—Peter McMullen of Belmont, aged sixty-five years, was instantly killed this morning when attempting to mount a horse. McMullen, in an effort to jump on the back of the animal, fell over on the other side on his head. When he fell he lit on a rock and died instantly.

Mr. McMullen's wife predeceased him last February. One stepson, Theron McMullen, is his only remaining relative. The accident occurred at eight-thirty when the farmer was in the field.

Byrd to Hop-Off Early This Morning

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N. Y., June 24 (Associated Press).—Poised at the top of its elevated runway with wings spread like some great night bird, the Fokker monoplane was ready last night to hop off for Paris at the first streak of dawn today.

Shortly before 9 o'clock, the plane was hauled out of the hangar and taxied to the top of the runday under its own power. Before being taken to the runway, the plane was weighed, but the weight was not made public.

After seeing the plane in position, Commander Byrd and the three members of his crew, returned to their hotel to get a few hours rest before the hop-off, which is scheduled for four a.m. today.

CORNER STONE IS LAID FOR KEENE CHURCH

Impressive Ceremony Marks Very Important Occasion in Presbyterian History.

MANY PRESENT.

Rev. James Grier, Moderator of Presbytery, Delivers the Address.

KEENE, June 24. — Fully an hour before the announced time for the beginning of the ceremonies in connection with the laying of the corner-stone of the new Presbyterian Church at Keene, people began gathering from all quarters of the country. The larger delegations came from Centreville, Norwood, Hastings, Campbellford, Birdsall, Millbrook, and Westwood. Peterborough and Havelock, besides numerous smaller places, also had delegations in attendance.

Promptly at the hour previously announced, the members of Presbytery present took their places on the platform erected for the occasion, and Rev. Walter McCleary, B.A., minister of the Keene congregation, extended a warm welcome to the hundreds who crowded every available point from which the laying of the corner-stone coul dbe viewed.

Large Crowd.

The large gathering, easily 40 per cent. of which were over the 60 mark and many in the 80th and not a few in the 90's, took up the singing of the 74th Psalm selection, and rather spoke it than sang it, so deep was the feeling with which every syllable was enunciated. One could almost hear the heart-throb and it was not hard to discern the moistness of the eyes as the third verse of this fine old paraphrase was reached and slowly and brokenly came the words: "Through each perplexing path of life,

Our wandering footsteps guide;
Give us each day our daily break, and raiment fit provide."

Then came the reading of the Scripture lesson by Mr. Leslie McLean, in the absence of Rev. John Riddell, of Millbrook, who had not yet arrived; after which Rev. William Allan, minister of St. Paul's Church, Peterborough, offered prayer, invoking God's richest blessing upon the exercise of the day.

Lays Stone.

In announcing Rev. D. A. Thomson, of Hastings, the chairman stated that they were pleased to have him as he had been a warm friend to the congregation at Keene. It was then announcedthat in the box about to be deposited in the foundation were a copy of The Peterborough Examiner, a copy of The Globe, a copy of the Mail and Empire, Records of the church, Glad Tidings, a copy of the Westminster Confession of Faith, a copy of the printed programme of the day's proceedings, and stamps and coins.

Then Rev. Mr. Thomson, after placing some mortar on the bed upon which the stone was to rest, said:

"I declare this stone well and truly laid. We lay this stone in the name of the Presbyterian Church in Canada; and in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, we lay this corner-stone of a house to be erected under the name of Keene Presbyterian Church, and devoted to the worship of Almighty God: 'Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious; and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded.'"

Paramount Cuts Salaries 10 Per Cent.; Entire Industry Expected to Follow Suit

LOS ANGELES, June 24 (A.P.).—The first economy move in the motion picture industry, which is predicted ultimately to have far-reaching effect, came yesterday in the form of a 10 per cent. cut in all salaries which now exceed $50 a week, announced by Jesse L. Lasky for the Paramount-Famous Players-Lasky organization.

The 10 per cent. salary cut reported from the Paramount-Lasky studio in Hollywood is in line with a movement for economy in motion picture production started here recently. At a meeting of producers held in New York earlier this month Jesse L. Lasky, Vice President of the Paramount-Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, emphasized the need for a reduction of expenses throughout the industry and announced that his company would start the movement by cutting salaries and carefully supervising all expenditures.

Shortly afterward, according to report, the highest paid Paramount executives were asked to consent to a 25 per cent. reduction in their salaries, and employees receiving less were subjected to a smaller reduction.

Adolph Zukor, President; Vice President Lasky and Sidney R. Kent, general manager, each of whom received an annual salary running into six figures, it is said, voluntarily accepted the 25 per cent reduction and the others followed. It has been reported around Broadway that salary cuts in Paramount's home office have been general. Also, it is said, the number of employees has been reduced.

WINNIPEG CONVENTION WILL HERALD BACK CONSERVATIVE PARTY TO POWER SAYS MEMBER

Liberal-Conservative Party of Hastings-Peterborough Meets in Convention.

OFFICERS ELECTED.

Three Names Are Being Considered For Leadership of Great Party.

MARMORA, June 24.—That the forthcoming Conservative convention to be held in Winnipeg would be the starting point of the Conservative party's return to power, was the belief expressed by W. E. Tummon, Conservative member for South Hastings at the annual convention of the Hastings-Peterborough Liberal-Conservative Association held in the Town Hall, Marmora, on Thursday afternoon. Mr. Tummon asserted that the King Government had been on the defensive throughout the whole of its last session and that it held together by mere straws, closely escaping defeat on more than one occasion.

George West of Madoc, the retiring president, opened the meeting at 2.30, a goodly representation being present from all parts of the riding. He briefly explained the main purpose of the convention to be the election of officers and appointing of delegates to the Winnipeg convention.

He then called Dr. A. T. Embury, M.P.; W. E. Tummon, M.P., and J. Sexsmith, ex-M.P., to the platform. Following Treasurer Thompson's report, the secretary, R. A. Elliott, read a telegram from Col. Johnson expressing regret at non-atetndance.

Officers Elected

Next on the agenda was the election of officers. The following were elected for the ensuing year:

Hon. Presidents — Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Hon. Howard Ferguson, and Hon. J. R. Cooke, M.P.P.

2nd Vice President—Mrs. F. McDonald, Stirling.

3rd Vice President—F. Curry, Madoc.

Treasurer, C. Thompson, Madoc.

Secretary—R. A. Elliott, Deloro.

Delegates Appointed

Acting upon suggestion of Dr. Embury, following wide discussion, four delegates and five proxies were appointed to the Dominion convention to represent the four sections of the constituency.

Mr. Tummon explained that there was the possibility after the committee meeting on July 4th of proxies becoming full delegates. After fifteen minutes' adjournment the following were appointed delegates: Col. R. A. Birdsall, Walter Wiggins, James Moore and Mrs. F. McDonald. Proxies: Mrs. E. J. Mathieson, Isaac Barlow, Charles Rollins, James Haggarty and George Bailey.

Unique Position.

Dr. Embury, on rising to speak, was given an ovation. He congratulated the men of the Conservative party in the riding on the way the election of delegates had been carried out, which he said showed to a great extent the fine harmony prevailing. He mentioned the absence of Hon. J. R. Cooke. Mr. Cooke sacrificed an important engagement to be present, but whilst on the road was detained by business making his appearance at the convention impossible. Dr. Embury declared that it was the first time in Canada's history that a Conservative leader would be chosen by a gathering of delegates from the whole of the Dominion. If that choice does not prove satisfactory the party itself cannot be held responsible, he urged.

Three Names Considered

Three names were being considered for the leadership, Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Hon. Howard Ferguson, and R. B. Bennett. No one knows, said the speaker, who will be the choice. The need for the Conservative party is just as important now as before Confederation. We believe the two-party system will again prevail. Canada is too small numerically for a third party to be a success.

Sends Wreath

At the conclusion of his speech the member read a circular from Hon. Arthur Ross, soliciting a token of remembrance from the riding for the honoring of the memory of Sir John A. Macdonald on July 1st at Kingston. The local association by way of response, decided to send a wreath.

Prepared for Emergency

W. E. Tummon, called upon to address the gathering, remarked that the election of the afternoon had shown him that Hastings-Peterborough Conservatives were prepared for any emergency. I do not think, he continued that we are set for four or five years without any election. It might come at any time. The Government is only holding together by mere straw. Expressing his optimism on the forthcoming convention, he said: "I have hope and confidence in those stalwarts who are paying their way to Winnipeg to stand by the party's caucus." Referring to the last election, he said, the saddest part was the loss of their leader, Hon. Arthur Meighen. One of the leading Liberal Cabinet Ministers had concurred with him in his re-

Youthful Cyclist Escapes Accident On Crowded Street

A youthful cyclist was fortunate to escape injury when he lost his nerve and fell from his machine among a crowd of motor cars at the corner of George and Charlotte Streets just as the traffic reached its peak a few minutes after 12 to-day. Many cars were swinging from Charlotte into George Streets, under the direction of Constable W. Piercy, and the lad, riding his machine, suddenly dropped on the car tracks right in the centre of the street. He recovered himself, and remounted his machine so quickly that he was off before many of the spectators realized what had happened and without causing a single motorist to apply his brakes.

ORANGEMEN TO CELEBRATE IN COBOURG

Peterborough Lodges Will Go To Lakeshore Town For Twelfth.

PARADE HERE.

Annual Church Service To Be Held in George Street United.

On Tuesday evening the Loyal Orange County Lodge of West Peterboro met in the Orange Hall at Lakefield in semi-annual session. A large representation of the County, District, and Primary Lodges was present and the general routine of business transacted. Some of the main business of the evening had to do with the arrangements for the celebration in Cobourg this year, on July 12th, in which the County of West Peterborough intend taking part. It was also decided to hold a parade in Peterborough after their return from Cobourg. This parade will leave the Market Square at 8 o'clock and take in some of the principal streets, giving the citizens who are unable to go to Cobourg a chance to see at least a part of the parade as it took place during the afternoon.

It was also arranged to have a church parade on Sunday, July 10th, when the members will meet at Victoria Hall at 6 p.m. and attend divine service in George Street United Church, where Rev. J. E. Todd will be in charge of the service.

U.S.-JAPANESE PACT FORECAST

Alliance To Supplant London-Tokio Agreement Foreseen By Writers.

OPPOSE BRITISH PLAN.

GENEVA, June 24 (United Press).—Possibility of an American-Japanese alliance, replacing the old Anglo-Japanese alliance, was foreseen by some continental political writers yesterday as the outgrowth of the present naval disarmament conference.

The Geneva newspaper Le Genevois, speculating on the chances of such an alliance, points out Gibson's activity in seeking the support of the Japanese delegation against the British proposals, especially the one that seeks to reopen the Washington agreement regarding the size and life of ships.

During the negotiations Tuesday between Hugh Gibson, head of the American delegation, and Admiral Saito, the newspaper remarks, Saito expressed willingness to support the American argument against discussing or changing the Washington provisions for capital ships, provided that Japan was granted a 5-5-4 ratio for auxiliary craft, only total global tonnage being fixed instead of the size and number of each category of ships as Britain proposes.

It may be recalled that the Japanese Wednesday intimated their inability to accept a 5-5-3 ratio regarding cruisers, destroyers and submarines and opposed the battleships and battle cruisers.

mark that the late ladr was on ofetl mark that the late leader was one of the brainiest and ablest of parlimentarians.

As a successor, Hon. Hugh Guthrie had not been thought about, but it came about. Mr. Tummon referred in turn to the government being on the defensive in connection with the Georgian Bay demand, old age pensions and the imperial conference.

Big Farce.

Concerning old-age pensions, he remarked that it was the biggest farce placed upon the statute books for the Provincial Government had to pass a similar law and bear half the expense of its operation before it could become effective. Concluding, the speaker referred to the children so soon to receive their Jubilee commemoration medals who, when they grew up, would doubtless find the old Conservative party back again in power and its principle of obtaining work for all, they would not have to go across to the States to earn their living. Votes of confidence in Hon. Hugh Guthrie and Hon. Howard Ferguson having been passed, the convention closed with the National Anthem.

Laborite Suspended From British House

LONDON, June 24 (Associated Press).—James Maxton, Laborite member for Bridgetown, was suspended from the House of Commons for five days yesterday for calling Attorney-General Hogg a "political blackguard and liar."

The Trades Union Bill passed its third reading after a motion for its rejection introduced by J. H. Thomas, deputy Labor leader, was defeated 354 to 139.

Maxton, who was imprisoned in 1916 for his speeches on the Glasgow Green, made his remarks during the debate on the Government's bill to curb the powers of the trade unions. He declared that the Attorney-General in sponsoring the measures had degraded his high Parliamentary ability and profound legal knowledge "on behalf of a body of rich men to deny to its common working people the merest and barest existence—that is political blackguardism and political treachery."

NEW CRIMES LAID TO THE STRANGLER

WINNIPEG, Man., June 24 (Canadian Press). — The discovery of a jack-knife with a big knick in the blade, in the clothes sold by Earl Nelson, charged with the murder of two Winnipeg women, to the proprietor of a second-hand store here, has led the police to believe that Nelson was responsible for the murder of two women on June 1, in Detroit. The knick in the knife blade was burned around the edges, and as the "Strangler" is said to have cut an electric cord in the home of one of his victims, the police are convinced that the knife was used by the prisoner in Detroit.

"It is a definite link with the Detroit crimes," detectives said, "one of the most definite we have uncovered."

At Nelson's preliminary trial yesterday he was closely scrutinized by Sergeant J. A. Hoffman, of the Detroit Detective Bureau, who arrived here to identify the alleged murderer. The American official plans to make a closer inspection of Nelson in hopes of connecting him with the Detroit outrages.

The victims of the American tragedy were Miss Marie Oswald and Miss Fannie C. May. The electric light cord was used to strangle Miss May. The bodies of both the victims were found under their different beds.

Stating that the evidence connecting Nelson with the Detroit murders seems rather conclusive, Sergeant Hoffman said: "The methods of the Detroit murder tallied exactly with those of the man who slew women in Buffalo." The latter city has identified the Winnipeg strangler as the man who perpetrated crimes there.

EXCHANGE NAVAL INFORMATION AT DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

Informed Conversations Between Delegates Continue at Geneva.

MAKE REPORT TO-DAY.

Navy Experts Are Laying Basis For an Accord.

GENEVA June 24. — The tri-power arms limitation conference seemed temporarily becalmed yesterday by negotiations over routine organization and exchange of information regarding tonnage of warships of all classes possessed by Great Britain, Japan and the United States.

The technical commission was expected to complete its first task of exchanging technical information yesterday. It was scheduled to make a report to the executive committee composed of the heads of three delegations to-day, after which the work of the conference may proceed with less delay.

Hugh Gibson and Baron Saito, respectively heads of the American and Japanese delegations were understood to have discussed the British proposal to reduce the size of capital ships. That would reopen questions settled in the Washington armament treaties and for that reason is opposed by the United States It was authoritatively reported Saito had refused to pledge positive opposition to the British proposal.

Japan is Firm.

Saito told Gibson, Japan was unable to accept the proposal to extend the Washington 5-5-3 capital ship ration to cruisers destroyers and submarines. He intimated however his country was disposed to make concessions along other lines. It was understood Japan was inclined to favour the American viewpoint that armed merchant ships presented an important factor in modern warfare. British delegates have contended the arming of merchantmen is unimportant.

Japan seemed generally disposed to war dthe Americn viewpoint rather than the British on most important points.

No apparent progress has been made toward reaching a compromize between the British proposal for specifying the number and tonnage of ships each nation should be permitted in each class and the American plan for limiting only the total tonnage in each class.

Gibson and Admiral Jellicoe of the British delegation, took their troubles to the golf links and played 18 holes without a decision. The score ran evenly throughout.

Tokio Comment.

TOKO, June 24. — While there has been a firm stand here against application of the 5-5-3 ratio to cruisers, destroyers and submarines, the opinion appears to be gaining ground that a compromise satisfactory to all concerned will be reached between the proposals of the three powers at the naval limitation conference now in progress at Geneva.

Although not entirely agreeing with the British proposals, the newspaper Mainichi Shinbun regards them as quite admirable in their statesmanlike breadth."

"By proposing a reduction in the size of guns and warships as well as increasing the age limit of capital ships," it declares, "Great Britain may be said to have gone deep to the root of the disarmament question."

WOMEN'S INSTITUTE HOLDS OPEN MEETING

Mrs. Lowe, of Toronto, is Special Speaker for the Occasion.

NORWOOD, June 21. — An enjoyable open meeting of the Norwood Women's Institute was held Thursday afternoon in the Council Chamber of the Town Hall with an attendance of about thirty-five. Mrs. Lowe, of Toronto, was the special speaker sent by the Department. The meeting, which was in charge of the president, Mrs. Oliver Buck, was opened by singing the Institute ode, followed by the Lord's Prayer in unison.

The speaker was then introduced to the meeting. Mrs. Lowe spoke for a short time on the work of the Women's Institute. The work was begun at Stoney Creek, Ont., on February 19, 1897, by Mrs. Hoodless, who was the first president of the organization. In 1915 Mrs. Watts went to the old land to organize and organized in England, Scotland and Wales. The canny Scotch said if it had done so much for Ontario they wanted it. Mrs. Lowe mentioned several lines of work the Institute might do. She told of one organization in England who had put on a pageant at Buckingham Palace and reminded the ladies that the Queen was a member of the Institute.

Takes First Place.

Mrs. Lowe said the Women's Institute takes first place among all societies. "It is non-political and undenominational. What does it stand for? For home and country." She asked: "If it hard to get officers?" One answer she received in asking this question was, Yes, I wouldn't be an officer because I wouldn't be criticized. The speaker said those who take office and do the work are generally those who have the most work to do at home. Those who criticize those who do not help in any way.

Mrs. Lowe emphasized the power of a good clean joke and also of a hearty laugh. She said, "Get every member at work, have a lot of committees, endeavor to help the schools and stand behind the teacher. Form a Home and School Club. Help the children." There is nothing quite so wonderful as children, the speaker said. It is our privilege to live in Canada, then why not buy in Canada, buy Canadian magazines, read English and Canadian literature.

In your Institute don't forget to do little things, a smile, a flower, a visit to the sick or new residents may often accomplish a great deal.

A short discussion was held on the needs of the village and district. Some suggestions thrown out were: Demonstration lecture courses, two weeks' course, first aid and home nursing, sewing, cooking and millinery courses.

Great Privilege.

Women have great privileges now. Fifty years ago, the speaker said, there was only three things a girl was supposed to do. These were teach school, teach music, and get married. Now every door is open for them. One young lady recently graduated as an architect. When asked by a man if she were now going to build a house, she answered, no, the men can work on the outside. Women on the inside. Nothing is accomplished without perseverance and patience. At this juncture three verses of "The Maple Leaf Forever" was sung, after which Mrs. Lowe gave a very interesting and instructive address by quoting the verse of Scripture: "He who conquers his own soul is greater than he who taketh a city." A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the speaker from the ladies. Dainty refreshments were served by the members and a social time spent.

She spoke of the temperance issue and said "Now we have whiskey back, what are we going to do?" She advised training the children from the time they are born. "Don't begin to dangle them or you will have to keep it up." We feel we want to make our children Canadian children, the smartest, bravest, cleanest in the world. Our greatest enemy is self. Whether we gain or lose depends on ourselves. Try to live better and more useful lives. No one can make or break a habit in a moment.

MUST SERVE FULL TERM

Percy Cowan, Convicted of Manslaughter, Must Stay in Jail.

CASE REVIEWED.

PORT HOPE, June 24.—Percy Cowan, Bowmanville man, who was convicted and sentenced to twenty-three months' imprisonment in connection with the death of Ruby Phair of Courtice, must serve his full term, according to a communication received from the Under Secretary of State at Ottawa.

Cowan, while driving his car east from Oshawa to Bowmanville some months ago struck and instantly killed Miss Ruby Phair, who was walking along the Highway near her home and was convicted at Assizes at Cobourg and sentenced to 23 months in the penitentiary. During his sojourn in the Counties jail at Cobourg, Cowan's health was very poor and at times, his life was despaired of. A petition for his release was widely circulated by his counsel, D. A. J. Swanson, Oshawa, and other friends and submitted to the Department of State.

The Under Secretary of State in his letter, states that the case had been fully reviewed and that the Department of Justice had decided not to interfere with the sentence.

OLD MASTERS

There's a whisper down the field where the year has shot her yield,
And the ricks stand gray to the sun,
Singing: "Over then, come over, for the bee has quit the clover,
And your English summer's done."
You have heard the beat of the off-shore wind,
And the thresh of the deep-sea rain;
You have heard the song—how long? how long?
Pull out on the trail again!

Ha' done with the Tents of Shem, dear lass,
We've seen the seasons through,
And it's time to turn on the old trail, our own trail, the out trail,
Pull out, pull out on the Long Trail—the trail that is always new!
It's North you may run to the rime-ringed sun,
Or South to the blind Horn's hate;
Or East all the way into Mississippi Bay,
Or West to the Golden Gate;
Where the blindest bluffs hold good, dear lass,
And the wildest tales are true,
And the men bulk big on the old trail, our own trail, the out trail,
And life runs large on the Long Trail—the trail that is always new.

CANADA HONORED

The selection of Canada as the country in which the third World's Poultry Congress will be held is a marked tribute to the prominence which this Dominion is attaining among the nations of the world. Only two previous Congresses have been held; one at The Hague, and one at Barcelona, Spain. The showing of Canadian poultry at the Barcelona Congress was so outstanding that the invitation extended by the Canadian Government to hold the next Congress in Canada was accepted, notwithstanding keen competition for the honor by other countries.

The preliminary announcement of the Third World's Poultry Congress has just been issued from headquarters at Ottawa. It is a very attractively prepared and illustrated booklet which will carry into all civilized countries not only the congress announcement, but a better conception of Canada and things Canadian. The information contained is concise but complete, and the illustrations reflect the various aspects of Canadian life. Agriculture, naturally, plays a large part, but the scenic beauties of the country, and glimpses of its industrial and artistic development, have not been overlooked.

The Third World's Poultry Congress will be held at Ottawa, July 27th to August 4th, 1927. Full information may be obtained from the Minister of Agriculture in each Province, who is chairman of the congress provincial committee, or from Ernest Rhoades, Congress Secretary, Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

New postage stamps issued during the last twelve months number 2,099, bringing the world's total up to 45,378 standard varieties, exclusive of shades, perforations, and so on.

Dear Miss Hinton,—We, your pupils of Westwood Public School, have gathered here to express to you our regret of losing our teacher, who has taken such a deep interest in our three years together. As we look back over the past, we have many pleasant thoughts of what you have done for us, with such goodwill and whole-heartedness.

As a little remembrance, we wish you to accept this parasol, not for its value, but for the goodwill and the love it represents. Our prayer is that as you go to your new school, the grace of God may accompany you, and may you have good health, strength, and happiness.

Our friendship we seal as a lasting memory of what the past has been between you and us.

Signed on behalf of your pupils:
Mary Brackenridge,
Reta Dickson,
Bruce Graham,
Margaret Walsh.

Miss Hinton was further honoured by a second address and presentation, read by Mrs. William Wilson and presented by Miss Margaret Boland.

Dear Miss Hinton,—Once again the mid-summer vacation season has rolled around, and with it has come to our youth the usual changes through the public school promotions, and the happy knowledge that "school's out."

But to the ratepayers and parents in our section has come the time when we find ourselves compelled to play the losin game, where our most excellent teacher is concerned; and we desire to-day to express to you our sincere regret that such things must be.

We feel, Miss Hinton, that you have not only been a public school teacher in our midst, but have succeeded in instilling in the minds of your pupils those principles which are so essential as a basis toward the making of good future citizens.

Your daily life, both in the school and outside of it, has been an example of fine Christian character, and your teaching of patriotism has undoubtedly gone far towards making better British subjects among our boys and girls.

The progress of the pupils during the last three years while under your tuition has been most satisfactory, and a marked feature of that time has been your untiring patience and kindness shown throughout.

As a slight token of our appreciation of the same, we ask you to accept this electric table lamp and silver candlesticks, along with our sincere good wishes for continued success in your new surroundings. We hope your sojourn of three years in our midst may have left none but the happiest of recollections for you.

John E. Boland, Chairman of the Trustee Board.

Mrs. Charles Brackenridge, Secretary-Treasurer.

Wm. D. Wilson, Ratepayer.

"I think you will agree with me that it is a striking recommendation for your wonderful preparation Virol, and I am pleased to have this opportunity of stating that during my nursing experience of over 20 years in Hospital, I have considered it to be my greatest standby in the treatment of all delicate children under my care.

CORNER STONE

Delivers Address.

The Rev. James Grier, B.A., of Campbellford Moderator of the Presbytery of Peterboro, delivered the address. The reverend gentlemen assured the gathering that it was a great day of rejoicing; that we were there to lay the corner stone of a church in which God may be worshipped in the way our fathers were wont to worship Him. The church, said the speaker, would be a beautiful symbol of the loyalty and faith of the congregation. The Moderator then stated that he conveyed to them congratulations from the Presbytery of Peterboro. To-day, said the speaker, you are here manifesting your faith. We have laid a foundation, said Mr. Grier, and I am pleased that you honored the senior member of the Presbytery of Peterboro What is there basic in our Christian faith asked the speaker, that this ceremony symbolizes? And then proceeded to enumerate the different things, such as creeds, sacraments, the Bible etc., upon which stress is sometimes placed. With reference to the creeds, Mr. Grier said that there were those who wanted to throw aside the great creeds. I am glad you do not belong to those, continued the speaker. You are those who have held to the historic attitude showing that the church had not lost its historic line and that the church was not established upon its form of government.

Is the Bible a lasting foundation for the Christian church? asked the speaker. There is no book in all the world, said Mr. Grier like the Bible. The spiritual story of the revelation of God in which He reveals His heart. As I read the Bible I find it tells me of something else that is basic. Jesus Christ is the foundation. "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church. On this rock stands all the evangelical churches of the church to-day.

This is the rock upon which I would counsel you to build. Let us ask: Is He pleased with my life. Is it made to fit the plan. This foundation is high enough to have your hope in heaven; broad enough to build on it a great missionary police, and deep enough to spring from your own soul's experience. The proof of the supremacy of Jesus Christ is: Is it doing anything for me? Are you going to build up the church and thereby build up your own personal character?

At the conclusion of the address telegrams, expressing regret at inability to be present, were read from School Inspector Lees, William Anderson, and the Secretary of the Presbyterian Church Board. At this point, Mrs. H. F. Doig of Peterborough rendered an appropriate vocal solo.

Supper Served.

The ladies of the congregation served a delightful supper in the Town Hall, and that large auditorium was filled several times before the visitors were all provided for.

Boyd Renwick, Sinclair Comrie, Malcolm McFarlane, Will Wood, and Dick Skinner handled the programme very nicely, seeing that every visitor was handed a programme when arriving at the gate, and doing it pleasantly.

Mrs. Short, Sr., received the thanks of the clergymen for the use of the organ she so kindly placed at their disposal.

Mr. Archie Davidson of Peterborough, who has the contract for the building of the church, was present at the time of the laying of the stone.

Mrs. J. H. McFarlane presided at the organ.

James Dutton of Peterborough took a large number of photographs of the clergy, and the elders and managers of the Keene congregation. The elders are: W. E. Renwick, John Renwick, John Drummond, David Hastie, Richard Short and Robert Adamson. The managers are: William Campbell, Harry Short, James Drummond, Gardener Thomson, Charles Hunter, William Renwick, Percy Donaldson, James Wilson and William McNevan.

One of the oldest gentlemen present was J. H. S. Dickson, 89 years and 6 months. Mr. Dickson was born in Roxburyshire, and has heard Drs. Chalmers and Candlish preach. He has lived in Keene for 56 years. He said he was born a Presbyterian and is still a Presbyterian.

As we look back over the past, we have many pleasant thoughts of what you have done for us, with such goodwill and whole-heartedness.

As a little remembrance, we wish you to accept this parasol, not for its value, but for the goodwill and the love it represents. Our prayer is that as you go to your new school, the grace of God may accompany you, and may you have good health, strength, and happiness.

Our friendship we seal as a lasting memory of what the past has been between you and us.

Margaret Walsh.

Miss Hinton was further honoured by a second address and presentation, read by Mrs. William Wilson and presented by Miss Margaret Boland.

Dear Miss Hinton,—Once again the mid-summer vacation season has rolled around, and with it has come to our youth the usual changes through the public school promotions, and the happy knowledge that "school's out."

But to the ratepayers and parents in our section has come the time when we find ourselves compelled to play the losin game, where our most excellent teacher is concerned; and we desire to-day to express to you our sincere regret that such things must be.

We feel, Miss Hinton, that you have not only been a public school teacher in our midst, but have succeeded in instilling in the minds of your pupils those principles which are so essential as a basis toward the making of good future citizens.

Your daily life, both in the school and outside of it, has been an example of fine Christian character, and your teaching of patriotism has undoubtedly gone far towards making better British subjects among our boys and girls.

The progress of the pupils during the last three years while under your tuition has been most satisfactory, and a marked feature of that time has been your untiring patience and kindness shown throughout.

As a slight token of our appreciation of the same, we ask you to accept this electric table lamp and silver candlesticks, along with our sincere good wishes for continued success in your new surroundings. We hope your sojourn of three years in our midst may have left none but the happiest of recollections for you.

John E. Boland, Chairman of the Trustee Board.

Mrs. Charles Brackenridge, Secretary-Treasurer.

Wm. D. Wilson, Ratepayer.

Delivers Address.

The Rev. James Grier, B.A., of Campbellford Moderator of the Presbytery of Peterboro, delivered the address. The reverend gentlemen assured the gathering that it was a great day of rejoicing; that we were there to lay the corner stone of a church in which God may be worshipped in the way our fathers were wont to worship Him. The church, said the speaker, would be a beautiful symbol of the loyalty and faith of the congregation. The Moderator then stated that he conveyed to them congratulations from the Presbytery of Peterboro. To-day, said the speaker, you are here manifesting your faith. We have laid a foundation, said Mr. Grier, and I am pleased that you honored the senior member of the Presbytery of Peterboro What is there basic in our Christian faith asked the speaker, that this ceremony symbolizes? And then proceeded to enumerate the different things, such as creeds, sacraments, the Bible etc., upon which stress is sometimes placed. With reference to the creeds, Mr. Grier said that there were those who wanted to throw aside the great creeds. I am glad you do not belong to those, continued the speaker. You are those who have held to the historic attitude showing that the church had not lost its historic line and that the church was not established upon its form of government.

Is the Bible a lasting foundation for the Christian church? asked the speaker. There is no book in all the world, said Mr. Grier like the Bible. The spiritual story of the revelation of God in which He reveals His heart. As I read the Bible I find it tells me of something else that is basic. Jesus Christ is the foundation. "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church. On this rock stands all the evangelical churches of the church to-day.

This is the rock upon which I would counsel you to build. Let us ask: Is He pleased with my life. Is it made to fit the plan. This foundation is high enough to have your hope in heaven; broad enough to build on it a great missionary police, and deep enough to spring from your own soul's experience. The proof of the supremacy of Jesus Christ is: Is it doing anything for me? Are you going to build up the church and thereby build up your own personal character?

At the conclusion of the address telegrams, expressing regret at inability to be present, were read from School Inspector Lees, William Anderson, and the Secretary of the Presbyterian Church Board. At this point, Mrs. H. F. Doig of Peterborough rendered an appropriate vocal solo.

THE DRUNKEN DRIVER.

According to a judgment by Mr. Justice Masten in an appeal case, magistrates have the power to suspend judgment in the case of motorists convicted of driving a car while intoxicated, instead of automatically sending such drivers to jail.

That decision should not give motorists too much hope, however.

The magistrates of the Province realize that the presence on the road of drunken drivers is a menace to public safety, and there will be few suspended sentences in cases of this kind in Ontario Police Courts.

The man who attempts to drive while he is under the influence of liquor can expect nothing from the court, if he is found guilty, but a jail sentence, even though Mr. Justice Masten has decided that it is within the power of the magistrate to suspend sentence.

LEARN TO SWIM.

The schedule of classes arranged by the Rotary swimming instructor, D. S. Wood, is published elsewhere in tonight's issue, and parents of local children who have not yet learned to swim should see that their youngsters take advantage of this unusual opportunity to master the art under qualified and expert instruction.

As will be seen, Mr. Wood has arranged daily classes for girls ten years and under and for girls eleven and over, and similar classes for boys of these ages.

There will be classes for older boys and girls in the evenings, while arrangements can be made with him for private lessons in the morning and early afternoon.

All these classes and lessons are absolutely free, the expense involved being met by the Rotary Club as a contribution toward a safer city.

It should be understood, of course, that these classes are only for non-swimmers; those who already know how to swim cannot expect to be taught racing strokes or other details by the instructor, who is on duty only to assist children and others who have not yet learned the art.

The Rotary campaign is the best opportunity that has yet been offered to learn to swim.

WANT CANAL COMPLETED.

The Peterborough Chamber of Commerce succeeded at the annual meeting of the Eastern Ontario Chamber of Commerce, held here on Tuesday, in having that body approve of a resolution from the Trent Waterway Development Association calling upon the Federal Government to speedily complete the Trent Canal.

This endorsation of the efforts of the Trent Waterway Association and of the local Chamber of Commerce is of importance.

The Eastern Ontario organization does not pass resolutions merely for the fun of doing so.

Composed of representatives of most of the centres in this end of the Province, it endeavours to consider what will be in the best interests of this part of Ontario, and the fact that such a body regards the speedy completion of the Trent Canal to be desirous in the general interest should carry considerable weight at Ottawa.

The resolution passed by the Eastern Ontario organization will at the same time encourage all advocates of the Trent Waterway to redouble their efforts and to press on until the Government has seen the justice of their plea.

Another important resolution, fathered by the Peterborough Chamber of Commerce, that met with approval was that in reference to hawkers and peddlers, a matter of considerable interest to Ontario merchants.

IT SHOULD BE CUT.

Mr. J. W. Murphy, of the J. W. Murphy Company, Windsor, is appearing before the Tariff Advisory Board at Ottawa today in support of the Imperial Tobacco Company's protest against the present Canadian excise tax on cigarettes. It is now $6 per thousand. The company asks that it be cut to $3 in order to permit the material lowering of Canadian retail prices and the elimination of much of the smuggling of American cigarettes that now goes on. So great is the smuggling, Mr. Murphy estimates, that even with a 50 per cent. reduction in the Canadian excise, our Federal treasury would secure $420,000 more every year, if the "fags" now smuggled into the Border Cities were purchased on this side. And corresponding increases in revenue would occur all over Canada, Mr. Murphy says.

In addition, there is the important point of protecting the Canadian tobacco grower and enlarging his market, and providing for the greatly increased manufacturing advantage that would come if all the cigarettes now brought in illicitly were made in this country.

The situation is wide open and as plain as the nose on any man's face. If Ottawa cannot see it, Ottawa must be very dumb. Speaking in the House of Commons three or four years ago, the Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, then leader of the Opposition, pleaded with the Government to reduce the tax in order to keep business at home. There may have been some reduction since that time, but it is very apparent that the excise is still far too high to achieve the desired result—consumption of Canadian cigarettes from Canadian tobacco by Canadian smokers.

Under present conditions, no one can really be blamed for bringing in American cigarettes if he is in a convenient position, as our people are, to get his smokes elsewhere. When cigarettes sell at two packages for a quarter in Detroit and the same article costs 35 cents for a single packet on this side, one is hardly human if he does not do a little smuggling. The Imperial Tobacco Company and other manufacturers and dealers recognize this point and are entitled to public support in their efforts to remedy an unjust ,unfair and totally impossible situation.—Border Cities Star.

CANADA AS THE PROVIDER.

The London Daily Express foresees a world shortage of wheat this year and rising prices of flour and bread.

A visit to the Canadian prairies would reassure our contemporary. There may be a shortage compared with last year, and prices have already risen in anticipation, but the world need not be hungry for bread. The Express founds its estimates on the late season, heavy rains and lessened wheat acreage in Canada, the floods in the Mississippi valley, and the fact that European crops will only be medium. "Unless the rains cease at once," it says of the Canadian West, "this season's crop will be the poorest in years." This was written a fortnight ago, but since then the weather has greatly improved and the crop prospects with it. The wheat acreage has decreased by 10 to 15 per cent., but the growth is so promising that a yield equal to last year's is not impossible. The Express emphasizes the importance of the Canadian harvest:

> "Canadian wheat is the key to the situation. Millers cannot do without it, however plentiful other supplies may be. Bread made solely of Australian or Russian flour is unpalatable, and a good supply of Canadian wheat is necessary if bread is to be cheap."

Canada indeed holds the key to the situation. She has become the world's largest exporter of wheat and apparently is destined to increase her lead over all competitors in the world's market. This year her ascendancy is likely to be specially pronounced. The Express says that European consumption of flour is increasing because of a reviving trade activity, and last year rose 15 per cent. It looks for a still higher demand in 1927. The Canadian Trade Commissioner in Central Europe, L. D. Wilgress, makes a similar observation in the Commercial Intelligence Journal in commenting on the growing sale of Canadian flour in Austria. The Austrian bakers have discovered, he reports, that they can make more and better bread by mixing Canadian flour with the locally milled product. Before the war the Austrian Empire was supplied almost exclusively with wheat flour milled from Hungarian or Austrian wheat, but the Hungarian product is suffering from soil exhaustion due to excessive growth during the war, and Austrians have turned to Canada for supplies. An even greater proportion of Canadian flour is used in Czecho-Slovakia.—London Advertiser.

DOES NOT ALWAYS WORK OUT.

The Citizens' Research Institute is inclined to doubt the theory that taxation can be lowered by increasing the population.

Everybody, of course, has heard the argument, "Let us get in more people to help pay the taxes," and it sounds reasonable.

But in the case of a community with facilities adequate for its present population but requiring large capital expenditures for any great addition to its population, getting in more people may not cut down the per capita tax burden.

The Research Institute in a recent bulletin covering this question says:

"The city has 100,000 population. Its taxes annually are $4,000,000, or $40 per capita. If 25,000 were added to the population the tax per person would be $32. Therefore 'Watch us Grow.'

"But is an addition to the population of a community necessarily all or mostly 'velvet' from the standpoint of the taxpayer? Let us see what happens or what may happen. When 25,000 people come into a city about 4,000 are probably children, who will require schooling. If schools are not overbuilt, school buildings must be provided for them. At $10,000 per standard classroom capable of housing 40 children, this will mean a capital expenditure of $1,000,000, necessitating annual debt charges of say $65,000. These children will require about 100 teachers, involving an annual expenditure on salaries of say $180,000. In addition to this, there will need to be expenditure for caretaking service, heating, lighting, upkeep, etc. Allowing for the proper proportions of children in elementary and secondary schools the total annual costs may be say $80 per pupil, or $320,000.

"Again, 25,000 people will require say 5,000 houses to live in. If the community is not overbuilt residentially, or does not possess vacant land already provided with pavements, sidewalks, watermains and sewers or, having these, permits new sections, not provided with services, to be exploited, there will be large additional capital costs for these services, with accompanying annual debt charges. The capital expenditure involved might easily reach $750,000. The debt charges on this would be partly borne by the property owners. But local improvement rates are taxes and make up a real part of civic expenditure. The annual debt charges might approach or even exceed $80,000 annually.

"The addition of a population of 25,000 would mean additional constables and firemen, with the buildings and equipment required by them. Possibly 35 additional police and 30 additional firemen would be required. An annual charge of $100,000 might well be added thereby.

"Then there would need to be provided additional services under health, parks and recreation, street cleaning, etc. It is quite possible that it might be necessary to add another $100,000 for these and other services.

"If $600,000 were to be added to the annual taxation, the per capita would be $36.80, not $32.00. It is true that this is less than the original $40 per capita, but allowance has not been made for the fact that as cities grow larger they demand more and more expensive services and that as cities grow larger and more congested the cost of all improvements per unit tends to increase."

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Celebrate the Diamond Jubilee right by celebrating it in Peterborough.

The biggest three days in the city's history are assured for the jubilee. All that is needed now is the co-operation of the public.

"Beer going down" in a heading didn't suggest anything new until it was disclosed that the article meant going down in price.

Canada's Diamond Jubilee is attracting the world's hero of the moment. Lindbergh and his "Spirit of St. Louis" are going to visit Ottawa for the celebration.

Motorists should be notified that the relay runners who are going to carry a message from Toronto to Ottawa are protected by the game laws.

Anyway, we've got by a few days of Government control without having to enlarge the jail.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, June 24 (Canadian Press).—There was an improved demand from foreign buyers for grain here yesterday and some business was worked in Manitoba Spring wheat for nearby shipment, and in addition to this a few loads of American oats were also sold.

There was some demand from exporters for Manitoba wheat in the domestic market and sales of Tough No. 2 Northern were made at 3c per bushel under the Winnipeg July option, and Tough No. 3 Northern at 7c per bushel under. Local buyers also showed a little more interest and sales of several fair-sized lots of oats were made at c.i.f. prices, and sample barley sold at 90c per bushel, c.i.f.

Owing to the further weakness in the Chicago future market for corn and in the Winnipeg market for oats spot prices for these grains at the close of the day were reduced 2c per bushel. Car lots of American Sample corn were quoted at $1.04½, Argentine corn at $1.03½.

In sympathy with the weakness in the cash wheat situation at Winnipeg the undertone to the local market for Spring wheat grades of flour was weaker and millers generally lowered prices 10c per barrel. The export trade was reported very slow, but the demand from domestic and country buyers showed a slight improvement.

There were no new developments in the market for Winter wheat flour the undertone being firm on account of the small offerings on spot and the light supplies coming forward from Ontario millers for which there was a steady demand.

A fair amount of business was done in most lines of millfeed and the undertone was steady. A steady trade continues to be done in standard grades of rolled oats and prices were unchanged.

The market for baled hay was without any new feature to note, prices being steady with a small trade passing on spot for domestic requirements.

Further weakness developed in the local trade for old crop Canadian potatoes and prices scored another decline of 20c to 30c per bag with every indication of them going still lower in the near future on account of the liberal offerings for which the demand was somewhat limited. Only sales of odd cars of Quebec White B grade were made at $1.65 to $1.75 per bag, and Reds at $1.40 to $1.50 per bag of 90 pounds in bulk, ex-track, while American new crop No. 1 potatoes sold at $7.50 to $7.75 per barrel.

Owing to the much warmer weather prevailing, the consumptive demand for eggs has decreased some of late, and in consequence business in a jobbing way was quieter, but prices were unchanged. The receipts were 1,406 cases.

The butter trade was without any special feature to note, prices being about steady, but the demand showed no improvement and the volume of business was again small. It was reported that a sale of 1,200 packages of No. 1 pasteurized creamery butetr was made at 33¼c per pound, f.o.b. Saskatoon for shipment West. The receipts were 2,545 packages.

There was no improvement in the foreign demand for cheese and in consequence business was again quiet and the undertone to the market was easy, with Western No. 1 white and colored quoted at 17½c per pound. The receipts were 6,835 boxes.

Sheep steady; fat ewes $5.50 to $6.25; feeding lambs unchanged; good to choice range feeders held at $13.50 to $13.75.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

CHICAGO, June 24 (Canadian Press).—Faced with indications that the crop movement southwest will be heavy by the first of next week, wheat prices yesterday underwent a sharp setback. Closing quotations on wheat were weak, 2⅛ to 3¼c net lower, with corn 1⅛ to 1⅞ down, oats ¾c to 1c off, and provisions showing 10c to 17c decline.

Increased selling pressure in the wheat market was evident from the outset, and it was equally apparent that power to rally from downturns was lacking. Word was at hand that 24 cars of new wheat had arrived in Kansas City, and that harvesting was making progress throughout much of southern Kansas, with weather ideal. Besides, field advices regarding winter wheat west and as to spring wheat northwest was favorable, and export demand very slow. The northwest indicated a splendid present prospect with ample moisture to carry the crop well into July.

Corn and oats went lower with wheat. Provisions were depressed by setbacks both in hog values and in grain.

ABOUT THE FLYING FIELD.

The Financial Editor,
The Saturday Night,
Toronto, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Harold P. Ayres of this city has handed me a copy of your issue of June 18, 1927, in which is contained an article, entitled "Learning to Fly." In this article appears certain statements regarding Mr. Ayres and the Canadian Air Services Company. The facts in connection with this matter are as follows:

Mr. Ayres established his aviation school in this city at the first of the year. The two aircraft mentioned in your article were owned by him and actually in his possession at this date. Flying was commenced on June 14, and has been continuing ever since. There are thirty-four students actually enrolled and in residence at the present time, with new arrivals practically every day. The aviation field has been inspected and passed by Government officials and is now a registered airport. Mr. Ayres is a pilot with eleven years' flying experience, having between four thousand and five thousand flying hours to his credit. He enlisted in the Royal Air Force in March, 1916, and served overseas, being attached to the Grand Fleet, until the end of the war. On his return he joined the Ralph C. Diggins' School of Aviation at Chicago and was later connected with the Canadian Airways Company.

As your article was no doubt prepared some time previous to the issue it appeared, I would be very glad if you would publish this letter. I am handing a copy of this letter to The Peterborough Examiner for purposes of publication.

Yours very truly,

A Thought For To-day

A POOR JOKE.

When some woman blushes with embarrassment,
When some heart carries away a sting,
When something sacred is made to appear common
When a man's weakness provides the cause for a laugh
When profanity is required to make it funny
When a little child is brought to tears.

FRAZERVILLE UNITED CHURCH CELEBRATES DIAMOND JUBILEE

Early Methodist Church History of Cavan and Monaghan Townships.

STARTED IN 1817

Included Territory Between Young Street and Trenton, 30 Preaching Stations.

The history of the Fraserville United church, read at the Golden Jubilee Re-Union on Monday, June 20, is interwoven with the beginnings of Methodism in Cavan and Monaghan townships, the items of chief interest being as follows:

The Smith's Creek (Port Hope) circuit was started in 1819, and extended from Yong street (Toronto) to the Carrying Place (now Trenton); it included 12 townships, with 30 preaching classes but in those days it was not unusual for one circuit to have as many as 30 appointments, a wide territory having to be covered by a limited number of ministers and their colleagues.

In 1824 Rev. Anson Greene was appointed as assistant minister, and made his way on horseback through the woods from Cobourg to Smith township, and a settlement which is now Peterborough.

He preached at a home in Hope township, and on the invitation of a Mrs. Thompson, who had walked fifteen miles to hear the sermon, he visited Monaghan, accepting the call which he believed this act on her part to be. One day, some time later as Mrs. Thompson was returning to her house, she saw the print of a horse's shoes in the mud, and knew the man of God had come. Rev. Mr. Greene preached the first sermon in Monaghan in Mrs. Thompson's home that night to a good congregation.

The next year the Rice Lake circuit was started with 110 members, taking in all of the townships mentioned. Within the following two or three years there were divisions made until finally this big circuit became two—Cavan and Rice Lake. Those were the days of the pioneers when the church had revival and camp meetings everywhere, and as the membership increased new circuits were laid out in the newer townships. It was in 1831 that Cavan became a double circuit with Rev. Conrad Vandusen as superintendent, and a colleague 'to be sent.' Two years afterward the Rice Lake circuit was completely changed, and in 1835 the Peterborough circuit was organized including Cavan, and the townships round about, though in three years' time this territory was again divided making Peterborough circuit on the north, and that of Rice Lake on the south.

The New Connection Methodists started work in Upper Canada with other branches of Methodism coming out from England during the years 1830 to 1837, and reached Cavan in 1851, the Reverend Joseph Oates being the first minister.

The building of the railway from Port Hope to Peterborough in the fifties made great changes in the townships of Cavan and Monaghan. The wagon road from Smith Township passed along the boundary between the two townships mentioned, winding through an immense cedar swamp, known as the "Long Swamp", where Fraserville now stands. It was really the coming of the railway that created Fraserville, named for a Mr. Fraser, a prominent resident of Port Hope who owned much land in the vicinity. Where the railway crossed the corduroy road (the latter now the Provincial highway), a railway "stop" was located, and soon people began to locate near the "station." Old settlers say that a spark from a locomotive in a very dry season set the wiping out of the dense swamp ed effort was every made to extinguish the flames; the fire continued to burn intermittently for two years, the wiping out of the dense swamp growth being considered not a loss but a blessing.

When the New Connection Methodists started on the Cavan circuit the minister gathered the families of this new village, and the neighboring farms, in the Smythe school house for worship, in 1857. Here they continued to worship for 23 years, under 11 ministers and their colleagues, until the Methodist Union of 1874. By this Union Fraserville appointment was made a part of the South Monaghan circuit, and the membership Roll Book shows that there were then five classes: Bensfort, Might's, South Monaghan, the Frame Church, and Smythe's. Rev William Buchanan was the first minister, the Rev. Daniel Henry McDowell succeeding him in 1876. The class at Smythe's decided that the time had now come to arise and build a house of the Lord, the people responded with a will, a site was secured on the edge of the village, and in the fall of 1876, everyone helping, the present church was built.

Dedicatory services were held in February, 1877, Rev. R. N. Willoughby, chairman of the Peterborough district presiding, and Rev. Coverdale Watson preaching the sermons.

The church at Might's on the Fifth Concession of Cavan (where the gravel pit on the Might farm is now located) becoming unnecessary it was closed, and finally torn down, the members uniting with those at Fraserville. Class leaders at Fraserville when the church was built were the late Samuel Might, and Thomas Smyth.

A few of the names on the roll, eight in all, are still found among us, but not one of the church then is now on the roll. Here are some names of members of fifty years ago. Smythe, Might, Berry, Greer, Clarke, Burns, Lockie, Reynolds, Cunningham, Whitely, Latimer, Fanning, Bothwell, Hutchison, Goodfellow, Brown.

Rev. Henry McDowell was the first minister to reside at Faserville, living for a time in the house occupied by the family of John Bothwell. The present parsonage was bought during the pastorate of Rev. Francis Johnston about the year 1835, and Fraserville became permanently the head of the circuit.

During the half century Fraserville has had 16 members, who moved on in the course of the Methodist itineracy, the names in order being: Reverends Henry McDowell, Thomas Manning, Benjamin Greatix, D. N. McCamus, Joseph Kilgour, Thomas McKee, T. P. Steele, N. D. Drew, J. E. Robinson, W. J. Wheatherill, M. W. Leigh, R. M. Patterson, H. W. Foley. Six of these were present for the Golden Jubilee.

The present membership of the church is 80, exactly the number on the roll fifty years ago. In the half century the members of this congregation had scattered over the continent, two hundred and twenty invitations being sent out for the Jubilee occasion, the territory covered being from Montreal to California. Some have distinguished themselves as laymen, while no fewer than eight have gone from these pews to the ministry, namely: Revs. William and David Smythe, George W. McCall, M. E. Wilson, A. J. Harvey Strike, R. E. Finlay, H. W. Foley, and J. Gladstone McKee.

Thanking God for His mercies of the past, and hallowing the memory of His servants, the pastors and other workers, during the years, realizing the obligation and privilege of the future, the present congregation, with an effective organization in all departments, enters upon the second half of the century in faith and confidence

John O'Connor, a native of county Clare, Ireland, now an inmate of the House of Providence, Toronto, who celebrated his 105th birthday this week by walking to the market, getting a troublesome tooth pulled out and observing that the world is getting "wickeder, faster and wiser."

A.Y.P.A. HOLDS ANNUAL PICNIC

Races Were Run Off and Prizes Presented to Winners.

LAKEFIELD, June 23. — The A. Y. P. A. held its annual picnic on Thursday last to Kidd's Park, on the Otonabee River, a delightful spot within easy distance from the village. Those who were able to go in the afternoon spent a pleasant time playing softball.

Tea was served about 6.30 before the mosuitoes had come out for their evening revels, and following immediately was the real event of the day, the softball match between two all-star teams. Owing to all the available people needed in the team, the duties of umpires were coupled with those of scorekeeper, and in the minds of many of the players were doubts as to the possibility of both positions being properly filled. The score being most important the umpire gave decisions in a rather casual manner that frequently evoked protests. The team, captained by Miss Winnie Payne, was declared winner and the prize, a box of chocolates, was presented by Mr. Walter Chappell, president of the branch, and winners and losers and even the umpire was invited to share the spoils of victory. The races were run off and prizes presented to the winners as follows:

Married ladies' race—Mrs. (Rev.) W. J. Creighton.
Girls' race—Miss Winnie Payne.
Boys' race—George Hutt.
Time race—Miss Mae Mahood.

For the first time in many years Mr. Stenner was absent from the picnic owing to being summoned to Peterborough to serve on the jury.

Tennis.

On Thursday last Dr. Sutton and Messrs. Grove, McDermid and Kempt motored to the village and played a friendly game of tennis with several of the enthusiasts of the village, the home aggregation winning two events out of three. Lakefield was represented by Messrs. Langley, L. Lawless, Hudson, and Macrae.

Mrs. O. A. Langley was tea hostess to the visitors.

Picnic Held.

The Mission Band of Knox Church held a very pleasant picnic at the park on Saturday afternoon. The weather was threatening, but no rain fell, and the children had the time of their young lives, playing games. Several mothers were present, and they acted as tea hostesses.

Band Concert.

The Citizens' Band held their second open-air band concert on Thursday evening, June 16th. The following was the programme rendered:

March—"Ranger."
March—"Newcastle."
Andante Waltz—"Hawthorn."
Overture—"Tryone."
March—"Goodfellow."
Waltz—"April Showers."
"God Save the King."

Owing to the pressure of work entailed by the engagements of the next few weeks, there will not be another concert until after July 1st.

Shower.

About sixty ladies of the Regent Street Church gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Northey, Reid Street, for a miscellaneous shower for Miss Hazel Darling, who is to be a bride of June. The gifts were numerous and varied, but the accompanying wishes were uniform, all being for years of happiness. Miss Darling thanked her friends for their kind thoughts and good wishes in so generously remembering her.

NORHAM NEWS

NORHAM, June 24.—The annual Sunday School convention for Percy Township was held in the United Church here on Wednesday afternoon and evening. Rev. Manson Doyle, of Toronto, Secretary of Religious Education, was the special speaker. All the Sunday Schools were represented, excepting the Warkworth Free Methodist. According to the international standard efficiency grading test, the schools ranked as follows: Norham, 85 points out of a possible 100; St. Paul's United Church, Warkworth, 80 points; Warkworth Presbyterian Church, 60 points, and Dartford United Church, 50 points. Special singing was rendered by Mrs. Bert West and Miss Lulu Mitchell, and an instrumental on the organ that was much appreciated by Master Harold Maycock.

President—Fred. H. Huycke, re-elected.

First Vice-President—Gordon McCubbin.

Second Vice-President—Mrs. Warren Atkinson.

Secretary and Treasurer — Orval Kelly.

Children's Work—Mrs. George B. Bowen.

Girls' Work—Mrs. (Rev.) W. W. Jones.

Adult Work—Mrs. Fred. Laver.

Home Department — Mrs. Minnie Atkinson.

Teacher Training—Mrs. Lorne Evans.

Missionary—Mrs. W. H. Harper.

Temperance—Robert Walker.

Young People—Miss Gregory.

According to the reports given, the average attendance at the various schools is: Dartford, 23; Warkworth Presbyterian, 40; Warkworth United, 66, and Norham, 54. There are no organized C.G.I.T. groups in the township, but a number of organized classes; three Mission Bands and three Young People's Societies. Norham is the only Sunday School that conducted a teacher training class, and here three received credits with an honor standing.

After a close review of the work in all departments, it was discovered that the Sunday School work in Percy Township is well equipped with active and interested workers who are making a worthy effort in the cause of the church.

In the evening Mr. Louis Fowler, a student supply in the Warkworth Presbyterian Church, spoke on the "Necessity of a Friendly Intimacy with Boys and Girls," and made clear to his hearers the great advantage of learning the bent of the child and helping him accordingly. Through the teacher and the friend's life, the child is made to see God and brought in touch with his message for them which is the chief task of the Sunday School.

Rev. Manson Doyle addressed the gathering on the importance of the work done by schools that were small in number. Mr. Doyle stated that there is no proportion between numbers and spiritual forces set at liberty. Country folk can do great things if they only catch a vision of their possibilities. The majority of the officials in the city congregations came from country places where they received their first help. Seventy-one per cent. of all Sunday Schools have an attendance of less than 125. The business of the Sunday School is to make Jesus real to the scholars. It stands for religious development and moral training. It makes the Sabbath day safe for the home by supplementing the work done and training given by parents. To save one's own boy we must save our neighbor's boy. The positive side of Sunday School work is the creation of standards, while the negative side of its work is the removing of traps from the pathway of children and young people.

Every weakness of the human race is increased by the introduction of liquor. Because the Sunday School loves childhood, it must take up the cudgels and work for the destruction of the enemies of childhood. Boys and girls will never believe in our Christ so long as adults officially or otherwise put things in their way that mean their destruction. Teachers must know about Christ and must know Him personally before they can make Him real to others.

The new officers were installed by Rev. W. W. Jones, of Warkworth, and the meeting closed by Rev. C. D. Daniel, of Campbellford.

Personals.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilmont Walker, of Prince Albert, and Mr. and Mrs. Fair and young son, of Uxbridge, were guests of Rev. and Mrs. Everson on Wednesday.

Rev. Manson Doyle was entertained at the parsonage during his visit here to attend the Percy Township Sunday School convention.

NORHAM, June 24.—About 75 ladies and several men from the Ladies' Aids and congregations of Norham circuit, including Norham, Bethany, Mount Olivet and Meyersburg, each of which was well represented, gathered on the church lawn at Meyersburg, on Tuesday afternoon for a social time and for the purpose of having a farewell visit with Rev. The National Anthem.

Prayer by the pastor.

An address by Mrs. Albert Bertrand, President of Meyersburg Ladies' Aid, in which she welcomed the visitors and made kindly reference to the work of Mr. and Mrs. Everson during the three years which had elapsed since they came to the circuit. At the close of the address Mrs. Alfred Merrills presented Mrs. Everson with a silver tomato and fruit server with a Mother of Pearl handle and a Pyrex pie plate in a silver frame, on behalf of the Meyersburg Ladies' Aid. Mrs. Everson made a suitable reply and thanked the ladies for their kindness.

Mrs. Oscar F. Laver, a reading, "Mrs. Solomon Smith Attends a Sunday School Convention."

Mrs. Thomas Poyser, a solo, "There is an Old Fashioned House in an Old Fashioned Street."

Mrs. John Dinner, a reading, "No Room for Mother."

Mrs. William Campbell, a solo, "As the Golden Sun is Setting."

Mrs. Lloyd Ames, a reading, "A Wife's Strategy."

Lulu Hazelwood, a recitation, "Nothing Suited Him."

The Lord's Prayer in unison.

A sumptuous lunch was served by the ladies of Meyersburg.

Mrs. William Goodfellow and Mrs. Stanley Brenton expressed briefly the thanks of the visitors for the delightful afternoon, and Mrs. Albert Bertrand thanked the visitors for the splendid program given.

MAGISTRATE TO USE HIS OWN DISCRETION

TORONTO, June 24. — Canadian Press).—That intoxicated motor car drivers need not go to jail, although an amendment to the criminal code provides a term of thirty days imprisonment, is the effect of a decision by Mr. Justice Masten at Osgoode Hall. It was in a stated case presented by the Attorney-General, concerning the action of Magistrate W. C. Mikel of Belleville in suspending sentence on a man convicted of driving while intoxicated. The Attorney-General appealed unsuccessfully.

LOCAL REPRESENTATIVE EXPLAINS WEED ACT

Gives List of Noxious Weeds Which Come Under Provisions of Act.

J. B. Nelson of the local Department of Agriculture has just given out the following information regarding the new Weed Control Act which was passed at the recent session of the Legislature and has been widely advertised around the province. The weed situation in the province of Ontario has become so serious that the Minister of Agriculture has deemed it necessary to have more stringent regulations passed regarding the control of noxious weeds.

The weed control act of 1914 has not been as efficient as it's sponsors had hoped so the new Act has been brought forward this year. The outstanding features of the Act are as follows:

Every occupant or owner of land must destroy all noxious weeds as often every year as is sufficient to prevent the ripening of their seed.

Every municipality must appoint a weed inspector whose duty shall be to see that all noxious weeds are destroyed.

If a municipality neglects to appoint such an inspector the Minister of Agriculture will appoint one in that municipality.

Any expenses incurred by the inspector in destroying weeds on property will be chargeable against that property, along with the regular municipal taxes.

Overseers of highways are responsible for the cutting of weeds on their highways.

Penalties of from $20 to $50 are incurred upon those who refuse to carry out the provisions of the Act.

Noxious Weeds.

List of noxious weeds which come under acts are as follows:

Bladder Campion, Field bindweed, Ox-eye Daisy, Perennial Sow Thistle, White Cockle, Wild Mustard, Wild Oats, Blue Weed, Canada Thistle, Chicory, Couch Grass, Dock, Ragweed (common), Ribgrass, Russian Thistle, Stickseed, Stinkweed, Tumbling Mustard, Wild Carrot, Wild Barley, Cinquefoils, Burdocks, Hawk weeds, Field peppergrass, Sow Thistle (Annual) Sow Thistle (Spiny leaved), Prickly Lettuce.

According to Mr. Nelson, this is the start, of the determined policy, on the part of the Department of Agriculture, to get some control of the weed situation in the Province of Ontario. At the present time, weeds alone, are lessening crop values in the Province of Ontario by millions of dollars.

An excellent synopsis of the chapter in the study book entitled "Publishing the ood Tidings," was given by Mrs. W. F. Thurston.

Mrs. N. L. Thurston and Mrs. W. P. Thurston were appointed on the programme committee for the next two months.

CONGREGATION GIVE PASTOR A CLUB BAG

Madoc People Remember Faithful Services of Rev. Foster and Wife.

MADOC, June 24.—A congregational surprise party visited the home of Rev. A. H. and Mrs. Foster on Friday last to spend a social evening with them before they leave for their new home in Parkhill. Over a hundred members of the congregation were present and spent a delightful evening in conversation and music. The evening was also made an occasion on which to show appreciation of Mr. and Mrs. Foster's work during the years they had been in Madoc, by presenting a tea wagon to Mrs. Foster and a club bag to Mr. Foster. The presentation was made by Mrs. E. Tumelty, and the following address was read by William McMechan, Sr., chairman of the elders of the United Church:

"Dear Mr. and Mrs. Foster:

"We, the members and adherents of Madoc United Church, have met here this evening to express our sincere appreciation of your services in our church during your sojourn among us. We know that your active interest in every department of our church work has imparted a stimulus, the seed of which will bear most beneficial results in the future development and welfare of our congregation.

"Your clear, eloquent and helpful addresses from Sunday to Sunday have served to inspire your hearers to a higher spiritual life and have given us a broader outlook, not only as individuals, but also in the call of the church in its great labor at large.

"Not alone in our church and Sunday School work but in the community as a whole has your influence been felt, especially in ministrations to the sick and infirm. Your cheerful presence and words of comfort have assisted many to patiently and cheerfully bear the ills of this life. Distance and personal convenience did not deter you from rendering spiritual aid to those confined in the hospitals of Belleville and Kingston.

"Your active interest in the welfare of the young life of our church, is best exemplified by the prosperous condition of the Young People's Society, in the increased enrolment and attendance of our Sunday School, and in the development of increased attendance of the young people at the regular church services. The position which the Young Worshippers' League has assumed in our church life bears a living testimonial to your interest and unselfish devotion to our youth.

"For Mrs. Foster, we will always have the kindliest remembrances of her devotion to every branch of our church work. Her assistance in the choir has added much to the success of the church work, and her labor in the ladies' organizations was rendered in the most sympathetic and unselfish manner. Her work among the young people also stands forth, as shown both in her active leadership in the Y.P.S. and as teacher of the Girls' Class. These sterling talents, so freely given, have endeared her to all our people.

"Thus, as you are soon leaving to enter upon new fields of labor in the Master's cause, we feel that we must show in some tangible form our sincere appreciation of your labors among us. We would, therefore, ask you to accept these gifts as tokens of the many, many firm friendships that you have formed in Madoc.

"As you form new friendships may the old ever remain green and fragrant in the garden of memory.

"Signed on behalf of the congregation—T. E. Burnside, Chairman of Stewards; W. McMechan, Chairman of Session."

Mr. and Mrs. Foster both replied, expressing their sincere thanks for the beautiful gifts and their regret at leaving their many friends here.

Short addresses were given by those who are at the head of the various departments of the church, and musical numbers were supplied by Misses Helen and Kathleen Ludbrook, Lucy Foster and Verna Phillips.

Less meat was eaten per person last year than in any year since 1921. The growing interest in diet is said to be responsible.

NEW SHOES.

Some are born to greatness, some achieve it, and some have it thrust upon them. The same with misery. The problems of the unfortunate descend upon him or her like rain from above. No one knows the why and the wherefore. Possibly some secret misdemeanor in the past is the raison d'etre (to be foreign and upstage about it), for the minor disagreements of life. Perhaps this is the way we are punished for small transgressions against our fellowmen. Who can say?

Take the estimable gentleman in the picture, for example. He appears to be a worthy individual. True, he has a liking for vociferous hatbands and he may be of an inquisitive turn of mind. Else why the lengthy proboscis? But still, all in all, he seems to be well enough in his way. And yet see how he suffers. He has gone into some shoe store and bought himself a nice new pair of shoes, at least, he thought they were nice when he surveyed them in the clerk's hands. And look what has gone and happened! They have become noisy. They don't want to be seen only. They wish to be heard.

If he wishes to, he may take them home and hammer small nails in the soles, in a well-meant effort to reduce their elocutionary powers. Or he may even soak them in warm water over-night and take a chance on the leather swelling disagreeably. Or rub them with fat. Chances are however, that they won't lose this squeak until they wear out, and then it won't matter. It has been thought by enquiring people that it is in this way that the unfortunate animal who provided the leather for the shoes in the first place, is avenged for an untimely death. His spirit lives on and protests volubly at being walked on.

JOLLY JINGLES By Graham Hunter

FOUL BROOD

American foul-brood is responsible for more losses in beekeeping than any other single factor. Not only does it destroy bees, but crops are reduced and equipment is lost because of it. Its seriousness lies in the fact that the cause of the disease may live for many years in any infected material and may bring about a return of the disease at any time unless the material is thoroughly disinfected or destroyed. Once a colony becomes infected, its powers of production are soon lowered; it becomes weaker and weaker and finally dies. Moreover, such a colony is easy prey for robber bees and may become the source of infection for every other colony in the district. While the various provincial departments employ a number of apiary inspectors, it is impossible for these men to examine every colony during any one season, therefore, every beekeeper should, to a certain extent, become his own inspector and be on the watch for disease at every examination of his colonies. While it may be true that many beekeepers are unable to distinguish disease, most of them know the appearance of healthy brood and are able to tell if any abnormality is present. In such cases, a piece of comb, about two inches square and containing some of the abnormal brood, should be packed in a cardboard box and sent to the Provincial Apiarist or to the Bee Division, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, where a diagnosis of it will be made free of charge. As soon as the weather becomes warm enough in the spring so that a colony may be kept open for a short time without chilling the brood, examine the combs carefully for disease. As there are comparatively few bees in the hive at this time of the year, any abnormality of the brood can be detected much easier than later in the season. Watch for it at every examination and for further particulars write to the Bee Division at Ottawa.

An aviator in a single-seater British plane flew upside down for four minutes and 45 seconds recently, setting a record.

In the seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries family Bibles were kept in oak boxes kept especially for that purpose. Many of the boxes were elaborately carved.

An air mail pilot recently dropped a flare upon a farmer's barn, burning the structure. He landed by the light of the burning building and helped the farmer to rescue the cattle.

LAKEFIELD NEWS

LAKEFIELD, June 23. — Mrs. W. E. Gillman was the hostess of a bridge party on Tuesday afternoon in honor of Mrs. A. M. FitzGerald, who is leaving with her husband this week to make her home at Fort Erie. The prize was won by Mrs. . D. Leonard, who had the highest score.

Miss Angela Osborne assisted Mrs. Gillman at the tea hour, and immediately following the tea, the hostess carried in a miniature orange tree loaded with bright hued fruit, and presented it to Mrs. FitzGerald. The "oranges" were handkerchiefs of various hues and styles, wrapped in crepe paper of orange color, and each packet containing the best wishes of the donor for good luck and a speedy return. Mrs. FitzGerald made a graceful reply thanking her friends and assuring them of her appreciation of kindness.

About fifty friends and neighbors gathered at the home of Mr and Mrs. Percy Darling, Douro, June 10, and surprised Miss Hazel Darling with a miscellaneous shower of beautiful gifts accompanied by numerous good wishes for her happiness. Miss Darling who is to be a bride of this month, and her fiancee, Mr. Stanley Millage, replied suitably, thanking their friends for their gifts and good wishes and assuring them of their appreciation of them

Slowly but surely the arrow is showing the financial feeling that is behind the local celebration of Canada's Diamond Jubilee Mr J. S. Montgomery, manager of the Standard Bank is chief of the finance committee, and no effort has been spared to make the celebration "go over the top" as Lakefield's best and biggest day. It needs the financial and personal effort of every good citizen, and the spirit of co-operation, without which there can be no success.

The annual excusion of the Lakefield business men is announced with a strong committee boosting it: H. C. Fitzerald, G. G. Connell W. H. Casement, C. Thomson and Dr. Gibson, with J. W Ridpath as the secretary-treasurer. Buckhorn is the destination and the usual ball game will be played

AGREEMENT IS REACHED AT MEETING

10,000 Ton Cruiser Matter is Settled at Naval Conference.

REDUCE TONNAGE.

Expected To Settle Submarine Question as to Size and Number.

GENEVA, June 24. Canadian Press. —Great Britain will accept parity with the United States in the matter of 10,000 ton cruisers, Right Hon. W. C. Bridgeman, First Lord of the Admiralty, said to-day. The question of parity on the other cruisers was still under discussion, he added. If British project is agreed to 10,000 ton category would disappear when the time comes for replacement of the vessels and the maximum of all would then be 7,500 tons

To-day's session produced a feeling of expectation that agreement may be reached on submarines not only regarding size, but number and total tonnage. One of the most hopeful signs was the disposition shown by the British delegates to discuss figures on the total submarine tonnage, which subject they previously had avoided.

Hope is expresesd that a way may be found for the British delegates also to accept the United States tonnage proposals on the cruisers and destroyers.

Reducing Tonnage.

The conference commission on cruisers will study the British scheme for reducing the tonnage of cruisers built hereafter from 10,000 to 7500 tons. The British proposal necessarily involves the question of the competency of the conference to reopen questions decided at the Washington conference The maximum tonnage for cruisers was fixed at Washington at 10,000, which figure the United States delegation is seeking to maintain

The Associated Press was informed to-day that the Japanese delegation has officially notified the British group that the reopening of the Washington agreements would exceed the mandates of the present conference.

It was agreed to-day that any formulas drawn up by the sub-committees will be subject to review by the executive commission

DISTRICT CHURCHES

HAVELOCK UNITED.

HAVELOCK, June 22.—The Havelock Lodge A. F and A. M. No. 435 attended divine service at the United Church on Sunday, when about seventy, including visiting brethren, from Campbellford, were in attendance.

The minister, Rev. W. R. Archer, B.A., who is a member of the Stirling Lodge, preached a very impressive sermon on the historical aspect of the temple. Mr. Archer began his address with the Tabernacle in which the Israelites performed religious exercises in the wilderness, followed by a history of Soloman's temple describing its unparalleled magnificence, its destruction and its rebuilding by Zerubbabel in 500 B.C. The second temple, having stood more than five hundred years, was in a dilapidated condition in Christ's time, and was rebuilt again by Herod. It was equal in magnificence to the original temple and it was honored with the presence and ministry of Christ. At this time tabernacles began to appear in the Jewish cities, and these tabernacles have grown into what is now the modern church throughout Christendom. The Jews' attitude toward the temple is the same as the attitude toward the churches. The character and conduct of men can be read by their temple attitude. Mr. Archer also spoke on the Masonic activities, namely, brotherhood and belief.

'KILLER' KIMES IS IN CUSTODY

Famous Bandit Leader Is Captured By Cowboy Officers.

IN ARIZONA.

GRAND CANYON, Ariz., June 24. (Canadian Press).—Matthew (Killer) Kimes, notorious but youthful outlaw, who has terrorized the south-west for five years, has met his peers in a six-gun game, and to-day was in the custody of Arizona cowboy officers.

Trapped when he dropped over the rim of the Grand Canyon into a thicket covered by the rifles of the forest rangers and steep cliffs that presented the alternative of suicide or surrender. Kimes surrendered without much show of fighting at close range, and admitted his identity. He is credited with the leadership of a gang which has robbed scores of banks in the south-west, and is said to be sought in connection with a number of killings.

GREAT ENTHUSIASM OVER ELECTIONS

Manitoba Electors Go To Polls On Tuesday, June 28.

WINNIPEG, June 24.— Four more days and the electors of Manitoba will go to the polls to select the personnel of the 18th Legislature.

Tuesday, June 28, is election day, and throughout the province the 153 candidates are waging an intensive campaign, especially in rural districts. Scores of meetings are being held nightly and the electors of the country districts are filling the little school houses, the town hall and community buildings to hear the various party speakers. In the cities the electors have not shown the same interest ,though the leaders of the various parties have attracted large gatherings.

2100 Miles in hottest Weather ~Without adding a Pint of Oil

ONE of the finest bits of claim-proving for Marvelube Motor Oil reported to date is a record-breaking run of 2100 miles made last summer by Mr. G. J. Rathbone, Manager of the Brown Wire Specialty Co., of Hamilton.

Mr. Rathbone, using Marvelube Heavy in his 1926 Oldsmobile Coach, completed this long trip under very trying conditions, without changing or adding to the oil in his engine.

He describes his experience as follows:

"I filled my car with Marvelube when starting on my vacation, and travelled 2100 miles, mostly in the States, where the heat was intense, at some points as high as 110° in the shade.

"I added no oil whatever during the 2100 miles, and when I finally drained the oil it was in such splendid condition that the Service Station didn't want to take it out."

This steady grind of over two thousand miles through intense atmospheric heat offered a searching test of Marvelube's ability to "stand up" and retain its lubricating body. An ordinary oil would have "broken down" and caused serious inconvenience to the driver and damage to the motor.

The success with which Marvelube passed this test is proved by Mr. Rathbone's report on the condition of the oil when the crank case was finally drained.

You do not need to break records to prove Marvelube's high quality. Breaking records is a hazardous pastime—dependent as much upon the perfect mechanical fitness of your car as the quality of the oil you use. But you can be sure of satisfaction and economy of upkeep from your car under normal conditions by using Marvelube regularly and changing oil every 500 miles, as recommended by most lubrication experts and car manufacturers.

COUNCIL EXPRESSES THANKS TO WARDEN

Committee Replies To Address Made By Warden Middleton.

Reeve C. S. Tanner of Lakefield, chairman of the special committee appointed to deal with the Warden's address, read the following report at this morning's session of the County Council:

The committee appointed to consider the Warden's address, begs to express the appreciation of its members at the careful attention given by the Warden to the county's affairs and to assure him of their continued co-operation.

The committee joins with the Warden in acknowledging the blessings which have been bestowed upon our country, its great productiveness and immense resources, and the approaching Diamond Jubilee of Confederation should be an occasion for an expression from all our people of sincere and earnest gratitude.

The addition to the Court House to which the Warden refers is necessarily required for the proper administration of the county's business, and the committee is pleased that this building is now ready to be put to use.

Other matters in the Warden's address dealing with highways, bridges and finance will no doubt be dealt with fully by the respective standing committees of the Council.

The committee joins with the Warden in expressing deep regret at the illness of the clerk and treasurer, and trusts for his full recovery at an early date, and the committee desires to express acknowledgment to the faithful service he has rendered the county for nearly a quarter of a century.

DRESS
By MARY MARSHALL

The selvage of the material is used for hem and cuffs in this sport coat of beige homespun

The old idea was that the selvage of cloth or silk was like the rind of bacon or the pod of green peas—something that had to be removed before serving. All three served their purpose. The rind served to keep the bacon clean while it hung in the butcher shop, the pod kept the peas fresh and succulent, and the selvage kept the silk or cloth from fraying at the edges. The thrifty housewife of France might have told you that the rind of the bacon might be saved to use to grease the skillet, and that pea pods made the foundation for a palatable sort of soup—and it must have been a French dressmaker who first realized that there was no real reason why the selvage of dress goods might not be turned to account.

Sometimes pleated skirts are made crosswise of the material and the selvage is used instead of a hem at the lower edge. Makers of woolen materials have co-operated with the dressmakers and have made materials with a decorative sort of selvage that might be turned to account in the making of sport frocks, skirts and coats.

Wide woolen materials are sometimes made into coats cut across the material and then the selvage may serve as a hem. The selvage may also be used as a border for the sleeves. When the coat is cut lengthwise of the material then the selvage may be used to form the front edges of the coat, turning back to form revers. Sometimes the goods is used the other way around and the selvage forms an attractive line at the under-arm seam.

There is an increasing demand for fine linen handkerchiefs which a number of well-dressed women are now using instead of the colored silk and georgette handkerchiefs that have been in fashion. After all there is nothing more attractive in the way of a handkerchief than a snowy white square of the finest linen finished with fine hand hemstitching and a neat initial or monogram. White linen handkerchiefs with colored hems or borders are sometimes chosen to go with the tailored costume and the border then matches the color of the ensemble or the contrasting color used in the buttonhole flower or other accessories.

SAINT and SINNER
By ANNE AUSTIN

Probably it was because Faith suddenly found herself with an almost embarrasing amount of leisure on her hands that she began to brood over her marriage.

It was Mrs. Lundy now, and not Faith, who wielded, furiously, large cloths dark with oil over the handsome furniture that Bob Hathaway had provided for his bride and his bride's family. Faith sometimes felt jealous of Mrs. Lundy's fiercely possessive pride in the spick-and-span house.

"You'd think it was her home," she told herself resentfully. But if she stole out a dust cloth and drew it lovingly over the baby grand piano, Mrs. Lundy appeared, the now familiar thunder cloud on her face, to conceal with heavy sarcasm and ill-concealed hurt:

And then Faith had to pacify her, as only Faith knew how, because Faith's heart was of the kind that encompassed all living creatures, understanding them, feeling that which hurt them almost as keenly as that which pricked her own heart.

Almost the only household duties which Mrs. Lundy left her were the planning of the meals and the cleaning of her bedroom. She would not allow alien hands to perform even menial tasks in that sacred chamber, in which she had found the greatest happiness of her life. There was sheer joy in making up the lovely little painted twin beds with fragrant fresh linen daily, a luxury which she determined that no necessity for economy in the future could make her forgo. It was a delight to touch Bob's military brushes, his comb, the pile of neckties he had left upon his chiffonier after his inevitable quandary as to which to wear. Folding his clothes was almost as sweet as touching his dear body.

And after the room was set to rights, beautifully, there was the heart-swelling joy of writing out menus for the day's meals, Bob's preferences taking precedence over even Cherry's.

"Let's see," she would muse, the little coral-colored metal pencil that Bob had given her tapping against her teeth. "Bob just loves veal cutlets, but we had them night before last. And since he doesn't like lamb—says he can hear the poor little lamb bleating piteously—I suppose it will have to be sweetbreads tonight. They're so expensive—for five—but Bob adores them—"

There was the housewifely, important feeling too that came when she edited household accounts, carefully adding totals, pouncing upon errors, and then writing checks, drawn upon the account which Bob had opened in her own name, and to which he deposited her generous monthly household allowance.

But not even her sewing for herself and Joy and Cherry could utilize all her quiet, inexhaustible energy. Her hands, which had been so full of work for nearly ten years—since she was a tall, healthy girl of twelve, suddenly elected to the post of housekeeper and cook for the family because of the failing health of her mother after Joy's birth—now felt a little futile and lonely:

It was no wonder that, empty as they sometimes were, they began to clench upon real and imaginary pain and doubt and heartache. She had been presented with leisure in which to brood, and probabaly Bob's happiness would have been better insured by a little less generosity.

Not two whole weeks had passed before Faith asked Bob Hathaway the inevitable question, a throb of fear and hurt love in her voice:

"Darling, don't you love me any more?"

And Bob, pain and reproach, both of himself and her, darkening his now rather tired blue eyes, swept her into his arms and held her hurtingly tight against his breast, as he answered, huskily:

"Love you? Why, you foolish darling. I love you so much I can't work comfortably without torturing myself with the need for a glimpse of you."

"You haven't told me so for two days," Faith gasped, but a smile shone luminously through her tears.

"Honey-girl, if I don't tell you so again for six months, the truth itself will not be changed an iota. I love you for keeps, sweetheart. With me it's the great principle that makes the world go round."

That had kept her tremulously happy for a day, but the next day and the next she listened for the words and wept a little after Bob had gone to sleep at night because he had not uttered them. She told herself, sorrowfully, that during those first three heavenly days Bob had uttered them a hundred times, as if the sound of the words could never grow motonous, as if they were new each time he said them.

Of course the omnipresence of the family had a great deal to do with his more casual attitude. Bob was reserved, she kept reminding herself. He could not give her one of those long, dizzying kisses with her father or Joy or Cherry looking on.

The first time that Bob left for his office without kissing Faith goodbye was a day of stark tragedy. He did not love her any more, or if he did, the flame had died down, and he loved her coolly, as all husbands did. She did not want kindly affection, absent-minded tenderness; she wanted passionate love, leaping in his eyes and tingling in his fingertips when he carressed her hair adoringly.

Those three days, when love had been so gloriously realized, had made her greedy. These staider, calmer days made her fearful, a little desolate, her heart oppressed with tears she was too proud to shed.

Fear that it was her fault that love had become a less flaming thing goaded her into nervous little attempts to charm him.

"Is it new? Of course it's pretty, but honey-girl, you look beautiful to me in anything you put on."

She wished, with a pang of envy, that she had Cherry's irresistible lure, her inborn coquettishness, her adorable femininity. She could not imagine any man's growing tired of Cherry—if Cherry chose to love him. Even now, though she knew Bob loved her with all his heart, Faith could not help noticing that his eyes glistened with appreciation when Cherry appeared. Cherry was a constant feast to the eye, with her copper-and-gold curls rioting babyishly over her small head, with her sweet, sulky, red little mouth, her rose-petal skin palling and flushing under censure or praise. His eyes seemed to miss none of the feast, even when disapproving, resenting her taking up so much of his wife's time, for being an inevitable third when they two wanted to be alone together.

And then one evening Cherry was mysteriously missing, and Faith's and Bob's pleasure in their unusual privacy in the living room of the new home was tarnished with anxiety as to what Cherry was doing and with whom she was doing it.

HOROSCOPE

The Stars Incline, but do not Compel.

(Copyright, 1927, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

Threatening aspects dominates this day, which should be employed as a time for recreation, astrologers declare.

Changes of business or residence location made today may be unlucky and for that reason it is well to pursue beaten paths, even in the way of amusement.

There is a sinister sign for travel, the stars presaging accidents and delays.

Business matters are subject to a sinister direction of the stars, making for unwise policies and generally bad judgment.

Under this sway the mind may be unusually sensitive to wrong impressons of persons. Suspicion and deceit are supposed to be engendered by the adverse aspects, which are numerous today.

In choosing companions for trips or parties today the wise course will be to avoid superiors or those more fortunate than oneself, since envy and jealously are easily engendered while this configuration prevails.

Women should be especially circumspect under this rule of the planets, which may incline them to romance and may increase their desire for flattery.

This is believed to be an unlucky wedding day since it presages lack of understanding and a wide breach in interests.

Places of amusements may have unprofitable performances under this government of the stars, which makes for outdoor recreations.

Sudden changes in the weather may be expected in all parts of the country and especially in the region of the Great Lakes.

Fanaticism will be revealed among sects of religionists, it is prophesied, and new leaders will obtain many followers, especially in the middle west.

A London astrologer declares that the recent conjunction of Jupiter and Uranus rules the destiny of nations and presages the rise of new military dictators.

Persons whose birthdate it is may be too much inclined toward amusement to realize fully on talents or opportunities.

Children born on this day may be too kindly for their own good. Under this sign boys and girls may incline too much toward helping friends who are unworthy.

One way to retain every bit of the juice in a beefsteak is to brush it with blended butter and flour before you stick it on the broiler.

DON'T HURRY COOKING

When ever you are cooking custards or any mixtures in which eggs are the main ingredient, a low temperature is most satisfactory.

WOMEN JOIN IN UNITED MEETING

Mount Pleasant Institute Meets With Cavan Ladies.

CAVAN, June 24.—Cavan Women's Institute held their June meeting at the home of Mrs. C. Carr on Wednesday afternoon.

Mount Pleasant Institute, by invitation, was present.

The Cavan Institute held a business session for half an hour before the time for the regular meeting. The president, Mrs. D. J. Hunter, presided.

The roll was called and nineteen members responded.

Correspondence was read by the secretary and the business disposed of.

A committee consisting of Mrs. Hunter, Mrs. Matchett, Mrs. Sutton and Mrs. Staples, to consider what prizes should be offered at the school fair. Ten dollars was voted to be used as prizes.

The July meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Archie Kennedy. The lunch committee for that meeting will be Mrs. Howden, Mrs. Sisson, Mrs. Rowen and Mrs. R. S. Staples.

The business meeting was adjourned by the president.

The Mount Pleasant Institute then conducted the regular meeting.

The president, Mrs. Ira Lowes, was in the chair. The meeting opened by singing the Institute Ode; all remained standing while the Lord's Prayer was repeated in unison.

After a few remarks by the President, the secretary, Mrs. G. Shields, read the minutes of their last meeting. She then called the roll, the members responding either by repeating a favorite proverb, or giving a hope chest suggestion.

The programme committee for this meeting were Mrs. H. Lowes, Mrs. G. Shields, and Mrs. T. Graham.

Mrs. Eggleson read a number of definitions for "Home." These contained many thoughts worthy of thinking over, with a view to keeping up the standard of our homes.

Mrs. Henry Lowes contributed a fine paper on "Friendship."

Mrs. Paragreen sang a solo, her daughter, Miss D. Paragreen, who accompanied her on the piano, joined in singing the chorus.

Mrs. George Jamieson read "Tom Sawyer treated for love sickness."

Mrs. Bland read a good paper on 'How to' make our institute a success."

Mrs. C. Morden read an excellent paper on "A Country Woman's Problems."

Mrs. Eggleson played an instrumental solo.

Mrs. G. Shields contributed a humorous recitation, "The Widder Green's Farewell."

Just before closing the meeting Mrs. Lowes requested each lady, commencing at her right, to rise, give her name and the Institute to which she belonged. This was done until all were aware of the names of all in the room. The meeting closed with the National Anthem.

A social time was enjoyed while a committee of eight ladies assisted the hostess to serve lunch.

There were forty-nine present and the afternoon proved a very enjoyable one. The programme was enjoyed by the Cavan ladies, who thought it a treat to listen to such a good programme as was given by the Mount Pleasant ladies. It made a pleasant change in their usual routine.

The social side and the opportunity of making the acquaintance of the neighboring society was much enjoyed.

Miss Finlay and Mrs. Bland moved a vote of thanks to the Cavan ladies for their invitation and the hospitality enjoyed.

IMPRESSIVE SIGHT OBSERVED AT DOURO

Open-Air Service Celebrates the Feast of Corpus Christie.

DOURO, June 24.—The procession in connection with the solemnity of the feast of Corpus Christie took place on Sunday after High Mass at St. Joseph's. A beautiful arch of evergreens and a beautifully decorated temporary altar was erected in the field east of the cemetery, and thither the procession wended. First in the line of march were the men of the Holy Name Society, next the boys, then the girls, who made a splendid picture all in white, and wearing white veils; next came the altar boys, then the splendid gold canopy under which walked Rev. M. J. McGuire, carrying the host, and accompanied by Rev. J. McGuire and Rev. Mr. Welch of Peterborough, a student at St. Augustine's Seminary, Toronto. Then followed the remainder of the congregation. When the temporary altar was reached solemn benediction of the blessed Sacrament was given to the kneeling throng. The choir sang continuously during the march each way, hymns in honor of the blessed Sacrament. Four tiny flower girls cast blossoms in the path over which the host was carried. The weather was ideal, rain commencing to fall only when the procession was over. A more picturesque and more deeply religious scene would be hard to imagine. At the solemn High Mass Rev. M. J. McGuire, pastor, was celebrant, Rev. J. McGuire was deacon, and Rev. Mr. Welch sub-deacon.

The banner of the Holy Name Society was borne in the procession.

The Sacrament of Confirmation will be administered by His Lordship Bishop O'Brien on Sunday afternoon, July 3. There is quite a large class preparing for the reception of the Sacrament.

CAPTAIN AYRES TALKS FLYING

Discusses Progress of Aviation in Address to Kiwanis Club.

SAFETY IN AIR.

The recent exploits of internationally known fliers, especially Lindbergh's cross-Atlantic flight, have given a great impetus to the science of flying and have crystallized the ambitions of youth, was a statement made to-day by Captain Ayres of the Aviation School, who was the speaker at the weekly luncheon of the Kiwanis Club.

The publicity attending these flying exploits has served to recruit the ranks of the local school. There are now 34 students in the school, and the average rate of increase is about three per week.

Stressing his point that general transportation by air was coming just as surely as the locomotive, the steam ship and the motor car came into vogue, Captain Ayres told of a recent trip in Northern Quebec, in which airplanes carrying 1,000 pounds of freight made a trip 400 miles beyond the limit of civilization in 3½ hours, while the Indian paddlers coming on behind in charge of a much smaller load required six weeks to cover the distance.

The Government of Quebec, said Mr. Ayres, now accepted the aerial sketch map in lieu of ground surveys.

Captain Ayres is firmly of the belief that travelling by air is as safe as any other mode of locomotion. Personally, he said, he had never even barked his shins in 12 years of flying experience. Up in the air, he said, one had no conception of speed, and in the hands of a competent pilot, the airplane could be made the pleasantest mode of travelling.

There were, he said, no such things as pockets in the air. Air, like water, was a continuous medium.

Answering a number of questions, Captain Ayres said that engine troubles by no means mean a fall from the heights. In the case of a breakdown of the engine, the pilot could bring his machine safely to earth. Five acres, he said, were sufficient to permit of a safe landing, although a large space was required for taking off.

In answer to another question, Captain Ayres stated that, in his opinion, the demand for trained pilots within three years would exceed the supply.

Two solos, "Melisande in the Woods" and "Lassie o' Mine," sung in fine style by Miss Alma Blanchard, were enthusiastically applauded.

On behalf of the Club, Harry Huffman presented a beautiful bouquet of flowers to Miss Blanchard.

The thanks of the Club to Speaker and soloist were voiced by J. A. McNabb.

Walter Kidd was the booster for the day. Prize-winners were Herb McCannon, C. Cooke and J. J. Craig.

Among the most ardent admirers of Commander Richard E. Byrd, who flew to the North Pole and who is now awaiting favorable weather for an attempt to break trans-atlantitc air records in his tri-motored Fokker plane "America," are his three children, Eva, Katcehine and Richard Jun.

MURRAY STREET CHOIR PICNIC

AT CHEMONG.

The final rehearsal for the season of Murray Street Choir took the form of a picnic last evening. Members and their friends gathered at the church at 5 p.m. and motored to Chemong Park, where a sumptuous supper awaited them at Dr. Morgan's cottage, under the supervision of Mrs. Walter Fitzgerald, convenor of the social committee.

Softball, along with games, childish and otherwise, kept the fifty picnickers entertained till darkness drove them back to the cottage for less strenuous sport. Mr. Walter Kidd, president, conducted indoor games and community singing, then found difficulty in suppressing the outburst of oratory on the part of members who were loud in their thanks and praises of Dr. and Mrs. Morgan, as well as themselves.

With the singing of "Auld Lang Syne" the crowd returned to Peterborough.

CHOIR MEMBERS MAKE PRESENTATION

Miss Velma Davidson Receives Gift From United Church Choir.

HAVELOCK, June 24. — In honour of Miss Velma Davidson, whose marriage takes place on Saturday to Mr. Harold Buchanan, of Toronto, the members of the choir of Havelock United Church gathered at her home on Mathison Street on Wednesday evening and presented her with half a dozen silver knives and forks as a slight token of their esteem and appreciation of the services she has rendered as contralto soloist in the choir. The following address was read by Miss L. Morrison, the presentation being made by Miss E. Haig:

Miss Velma Davidson.

Dear Velma,—We, your friends, members of Havelock United Church Choir, are gathered together to do you honour. We desire to offer you our felicitations on the happy event so soon to take place. We are glad for you, but sad at the parting. This village is your home, this church your home church and you will be greatly missed in all departments of church work, but perhaps more than anywhere else you will be missed in the choir. Your rich and rare contralto voice has been greatly enjoyed by us, and we are sure by all the members of the congregation. You have ever been willing freely and fully to assist the choir not only in its chorus work but frequently at the request of our director you have rendered beautiful solos, and to-night we want to tell you that we appreciate all that you have done. But even more than we love your voice, Velma, we love you and that is what we want to make you to realize to-night. Your personal qualities have greatly endeared you to us all and to all who have come to know you.

We know that our loss will be others' gain, and we trust that the ties that bind you to us, though elastic enough to permit you to roam as far as Toronto, may nevertheless prove strong enough to bring you often back to Havelock and the friends you leave behind you.

Not for its intrinsic value, but as a token of our love, we beg you to accept this silverware, and may its use ever serve to remind you of us and we may all come some Exhibition time, perhaps all at once, to visit you.

Signed on behalf of the Choir,
L. Morrison, E. Haig, H. Hooper,
Havelock, June 15, '27.

On Tuesday evening, about forty girl friends and neighbours also met at Miss Davidson's home to honour her by a miscellaneous shower arranged by Mrs. T. W. Quinn and Mrs. R. Covert. THE MARKETS

New High Levels Follow Resumed Pool Operations

NEW YORK, June 24 (Canadian Press).—The stock market gave another good demonstration of recuperative power to-day after yetserday's late break, but trading turned dull on the rally. The relatively small volume of overnight selling encouraged a resumption of pool operations which sent more than a dozen issues to new high levels for the year.

There was nothing in the day's news to influence the price movement. General Motors, Mack Trucks and Hudson, which were freely sold yesterday, came back in impressive fashion.

General American Tank was run up nearly five points to a new peak on talk of a higher dividend. Fertilized shares gathered strength on reports of improving business. There were several soft spots, with Inspiration Copper, Kelsay Hayes Wheel and National Department Stores sinking to low ground for the year.

Leaders Partially Regain Losses Of Yesterday

TORONTO, Ont., June 24 (Canadian Press). — In very heavy trading, leaders on the Toronto Stock Exchange to-day recovered some part of the losses of yesterday. International Nickel touched 62¾, and at the noon mark 61¼, was a point above yesterday. Hiram Walker touched 48¾ and later at 47½ was still more than two points above yesterday's drop. Uncle Wiggily

To-day's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

(Copyright, 1927, McClure Syndicate.)

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE STRAWBERRIES

Hopping one day down a sunny hillside in search of an adventure, Uncle Wiggily suddenly tripped and fell flat on his face. His tall, silk hat fell off and rolled until it struck a stone, when it turned a somersault and stayed there, upside down.

"Oh, my goodness! I'm caught in a trap set by the bad chaps!" cried Mr. Longears, when he felt something tight around one ankle. But when he looked up he saw no one. Glancing at his ankle, he noticed that a wild blackberry vine was twined around it.

"Ho! Ho!" laughed the bunny, no longer frightened, "it was the clinging vine that tripped me. I'm all right! No bad chaps have me!"

He was picking himself up and looking for his hat when he noticed the gleam of something red amid the leaves and grass on the sunny hill.

"Wild strawberries!" cried Uncle Wiggily in delight as he noticed the berries trying to hide themselves under the green leaves. "I did not think they would be ripe so soon. Ho, for a shortcake! I'll hop home, get a basket, pick these wild strawberries and my wife will put them in a cake."

Then, as the leaves rustled, Mr. Longears thought perhaps he had better say something to the berries about the matter.

"My dear, wild strawberries," spoke the rabbit gentleman politely, "do you mind if I pick you for a shortcake?"

"Not in the least!" answered the berries. "That is what we are for, to gleam redly in the sun, to sweetly perfume the air and then to be put into cakes or eaten with cream and sugar. That is our mission in life. We shall be pleased to have you pick us, Uncle Wiggily."

"And it will give me happiness to pick you," answered the rabbit, no less courteously. "Wait here for me."

It might seem queer for him to say that. What else could the strawberries do but wait where they grew on the sunny hillside you may ask. But you see these were wild berries and there was no certainty what they might do all sorts of funny tricks, you know.

Uncle Wiggily picked up his hat, put it on backward for good luck and then hurried to his hollow stump bungalow, where he asked Nurse Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy for a pail.

"I know where I can pick some wild strawberries," said the rabbit gentleman, "and you shall make a shortcake, my dear," he added to his wife.

"Very good," she answered.

"Oh, Daddicums!" cried Tooter and Scooter, two little boy rabbits who were playing marbles around the corner of the woodpile, "please take us with you strawberrying!"

"Come along!" invited Uncle Wiggily, and a little later he and the two small bunnies were on their way to the sunny hillside where the wild strawberries grew.

There they were, still waiting for the rabbit gentleman, and he began to pick them, showing Tooter and Scooter how to part the leaves and vines to find the gleaming, red fruit nestling on the soft grass. It seemed a little sad, at first, to take the berries away from their home on the hill. But, as they said, it was their mission in life to be picked, made into cakes or eaten with cream and sugar, or perhaps made into ice-cream, so why worry?

Slowly the tin pail which the rabbit gentleman had brought with him began to fill with the lovely, wild strawberries. And then, all of a sudden, when all was peace and happiness, the sly weasel popped himself up from a hole beneath a stone and hissed:

"Ah! Now I shall have a fine meal—three rabbits!" For though a weasel is not so large as a rabbit, yet he is such a fierce animal that he can easily kill one. So it is no wonder that Uncle Wiggily, Tooter and Scooter were frightened. There was no time to run away and no place to hide. But, all of a sudden Mr. Longears picked up a large, very ripe strawberry and, squeezing it, let some of the red juice drip on the Weasel's fur.

"Hi! You're making me all red! You're spoiling my fur! My friends will think I'm all red paint!" hissed the Weasel. "Now, I've got to go to the brook and wash myself!"

"Go to the brook and stay there for all I care!" cried Uncle Wiggily. And when the Weasel slunk away the rabbit gentleman and the two little bunnies finished picking the strawberries. Nor did they wait for the Weasel to come back from the brook. Instead they ran on home. And what a lovely strawberry shortcake they had for supper!

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

PETER'S LIFE AND WORK

The International Uniform Sunday School Lesson for June 26: Peter's Life and Work. A Review of the Quarter's Lessons. — 1 Peter 5:1-11.

Text: 1 Peter 5:1-11.

The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed:

Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind.

Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock.

And then the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder; yea, all of you be subject one to another, and be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble.

Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time:

Casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you.

Be sober, be vigilant; because your adversary the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour:

Whom resist, steadfast in the faith, knowing that the same afflictions are accomplished in your brethren that are in the world.

But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you.

To him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

BY WM. E. GILROY, D.D.
Editor of The Congregationalist

Peter, from almost every point of view, is a figure of unfailing interest. As a man one is attracted to him because of his impetuous and passionate ways. He was a leader of men, fearless and foremost, always equal to every emergency but not always quite achieving the part that he attempted so that the periods of passion and impetuosity were closely related to periods of discouragement and failure.

Jesus understood Peter a great deal better than he understood himself. Jesus knew his strength, but he knew also Peter's great weakness even when Peter was hardly conscious of his own shortcomings. It was the saving of Peter that Jesus understood him and that Jesus loved him and was patient with him.

Peter as a Christian.

As a Christian Peter is fully as interesting as in his basal human character. Even when his life had become sanctified by Christian faith and purpose, he revealed still something of these strange and contradictory elements. His old prejudices died hard.

In the vision on the housetop he reminds God that he has never eaten anything common or unclean, and in his wakening hours he needs the distinct rebuke and inspiration of the vision to induce him to be Christ-like and brotherly toward Gentile converts to the Christian way.

His impulsive strength made him a power on the day of Pentecost as his preaching convinced men and women and brought many into the Christian church. But, apparently, Peter was more successful as an evangelist than as a great upbuilder of converts into their new-found faith. Paul was, apparently, much more successful in the needed task of Christian education.

The story of Peter is the story of the triumph of the Gospel. Peter is a great and conspicuous case study in what the love of Christ can do for the transformation of a man's character when he lays hold of Christ and Christ lays hold of him. The message of the life of Peter is one that appeals to the average man, for in what befell Peter every man can find hope of a better life.

His Life Lesson.

The lessons that we have been studying have been full of human quality. They mark the stages of Christian progress in human life, and they symbolize the story of the Church's beginning and progress in the world.

From all his weakness and vacillation Peter became strong and steadfast. Jesus had playfully referred to the meaning of his name, a rock, but under the power of Christ Peter became more like a rock, well grounded in faith, righteousness and Christly purpose.

One of the outstanding lessons from the life of Peter is the need of openmindedness and patient discipline of one's life as well as the need of sincerity and zeal. It ought to be a part of every honest man's spiritual habit to examine himself and his opinions that he may be constantly bringing everything in his thoughts and actions under the dominance of truth and may be ever giving the spirit of truth and the love of God the opportunity to destroy his bigotries and his prejudices.

What Peter had to Learn.

It took Peter a long time to discover the meaning and the richness of love, but we who read the New Testament have the opportunity of profiting by the experiences of the saints. There is not the excuse for our narrow-mindedness and bigotries that there was for Peter. Peter had to learn the lesson of humility, and not merely humility of soul but that humility of mind which made him more receptive to new light and truth.

It is these things chiefly in which modern Christians fail as did the early Christians, and it is this failure that weakens the power of the Church even as it has done in the past. It is much harder to learn in patience than to be up and doing, but in the highest expression of religion patience and discipline, promoting the growth of the soul, go hand in hand with activity and service.

Heavy Hitting Features Leafs Win at Rochester

LEAFS TAKE FINAL GAME

Make It Four Out of Five by Defeating Rochester 5-3.

HOMERS FEATURE

NEW YORK, June 24.—(Canadian Press.)— The Toronto Leafs made it four out of five by winning the final game of the series with Rochester yesterday afternoon by a score of 5 to 3. A home run by Hargrave in the seventh inning with one on was a feature. Manger also hit a home run for Rochester. Alexander, hard hitting Toronto first baseman, closed the series by gathering three hits, bringing his total for the series to twelve in the twenty times at bat.

The Stars took the Syracuse series from the Bisons, three games to one, by winning yesterday, 9 to 3. Sylvester Johnson passed out only seven hits and in the eighth inning he hit a long home run against the wind with Morrow on second.

By pounding out 21 hits, the Baltimore Orioles won their third straight game at Newark by the score of 13 to 3. All the Newark pitchers looked the same to the Birds.

Jersey City and Reading divided a double header, the visiting Pretzels winning the first game by a two run rally in the ninth, 6 to 4, but losing the second, 5 to 0. Lefty Williams whitewashed the Pretzels with ease in the second game.

YANKEES TAKE NINTH STRAIGHT

Lou Gehrig Makes Three Home Runs in 11 to 4 Victory.

CUBS IN THIRD PLACE

NEW YORK, June 24 (Canadian Press). — Lou Gehrig made three home runs to-day as the Yankees defeated the Red Sox at Boston 11 to 4, and won their ninth straight, including the entire five game series against Boston. Gehrig now has made 21 home runs, three less than Babe Ruth.

This was the second time this year that three home runs have been hit in one game in the Majors. On June 11 Tony Lazzeri, of the Yanks, made three circuit counters against the White Sox at the Yankee Stadium.

The first homer for Gehrig came in the second inning with Ruth on the base, and cleared the left centre field fence. Lundgren then was pitching. As first man up in the sixth and eighth innings, Gehrig drove MacFadyen's delivery into the centre field bleachers. It was the first time three home runs ever have been made in one game at Fenway Park.

The record in the big leagues for home runs is held jointly by Robert Lowe and Edward Delahanty, both of whom hit four. Playing against Cincinnati in 1894, Lowe socked four helping the Braves win by 20 to 11. In 1896, Delahanty also registered four against Chicago, but his team, the Phillies, lost by 9 to 8.

Drop Cubs to Third.

Detroit won at Chicago 6 to 5 in a thrilling eleven inning battle, and dropped Chicago to third place. Erratic support coupled with daring base running by the Tigers, defeated Ted Lyons, although he allowed only six hits.

The game was featured by the first triple play of the season in Chicago, which was made by the Tigers in the third inning. With Lyons on third and Metzler on second, Hunnefield grounded to Gehringer, who threw Hunnefield out at first. Blue pegged to Tavener to catch Metzler off second. When Lyons attempted to score, Tavener's throw to Woodall made the third out.

Driving Van Gilder from the box under a barrage of singles in the third inning of the first game of the series with St. Louis, the Indians scampered away with a 7 to 2 win. The game was called in the first half of the sixth on account of rain.

The Athletics won the odd game in five from Washington by taking the final play to-day, 4 to 1, and winding up their home stay. Charley Willis, youthful southpaw, started his first game of the season for the Mackmen, and after the first inning kept the Senators' hits well scattered. Al Simmons led the attack on Marberry with a perfect batting average of three hits in three times up. He hit his tenth home run of the season and his third in two successive games when he broke a tie in the fifth inning.

GIANTS WIN DOUBLE BILL

Defeat Braves by Scores 6-2 and 9-6—Boston Hurlers Hit Hard.

REDS LOSE OUT 4-3

NEW YORK, June 24 (Canadian Press). — The Giants captured both ends of a twin session with the Braves yesterday by 6 to 2 and 9 to 6. The two pitchers recently traded by New York to Boston, Hugh McQuillan and Kent Greenfield, were roughly treated. McQuillan retired after four innings of the first game, during which the Giants scored all their runs.

Greenfield was sent to R. Smith's relief in the eighth inning of the second game with Boston a run ahead and a man on first. Devormer, the first man to face him, hit a home run, putting New York in front.

Brooklyn set back Philadelphia yesterday by 3 to 1, Bobby Barrett's home run and a triple proving large factors in the home team's victory. The triple fell in the third and Barrett came on on a sacrifice fly by Henline, Barrett's four-bagger in the fifth decided the issue. Petty yielded seven hits against four for Mitchell.

Timely hitting and good base running enabled the Cardinals to defeat the Cincinnati Reds at St. Louis, 4 to 3, thus running their string of victories to four and putting them just two games behind the league-leading Pirates.

McGraw and May, who pitched the entire game, were both stingy with their hits.

Only four games (including a double-header) scheduled.

STARR STERLING'S PROBLEM

A Serial for Boys - By BERT REED

In the last half of the ninth the score remained unchanged. Beamville still held an edge of two runs. Sterling had held Beamville but, on the other hand, the Riverview boys had been unable to get a man across the plate.

"Our last chance, fellows," urged Star on the bench. "If we are going to win we've got to do it now." Halliday was up. Being somewhat erratic, he had been placed low in the batting order. The boys groaned as they saw him advance to the plate. If the batting list were only up again—but there was still another man up before that could happen.

It was over in three pitched balls and Halliday walked slowly back to the bench. Conceding the game to Beamville, people were already leaving the field. Anderson followed. Bascombe, over confident, grew careless and Jim took his base on balls.

"Now, fellows, here's where we get going!" exclaimed Starr, confidently. "Don't kill the ball, Fred," he added as Fraser left the bench to select his bat. "A nice single will turn the trick."

On the first ball pitched Fraser drove an erratic grounder in the direction of short. Just as Moyer was about to scoop it up it struck a stone and was deflected. Fred reached first while Anderson took second.

Larkspur took his place on the coaching line at first.

Price came to bat. It was quite apparent that he was nervous. Bascombe threw wide and Chester made a foolish swing. "The game's all yours, Beamville," barked a voice in the crowd, "this bird won't even chirp." Price grasped his bat, pale yet determined.

A home run would win the game. The next ball was, apparently, like the first and Chester refused to swing but, with a swift inshoot, it cut the corner of the plate and the umpire declared a strike. With two strikes declared and on the third pitched ball he popped an easy infield fly that was gathered in by Moyer. Two men were out.

Sterling was the next man up. He had not faced Bascombe before but, as he sat on the benches, he had been endeavoring to solve his delivery. To give him credit, Bascombe had pitched a remarkable game but as he saw Starr step up to the plate he lost some of his confidence. Here was a fellow who had in a physical encounter beaten both Beaver, the Indian guide, and himself and later he outwitted them again. How Sterling had escaped from Beaver he could not tell. It not only puzzled him—it also unnerved him. Sterling's eyes seemed to penetrate his very soul as they faced each other. Then all the hate and rage that he had nurtured toward Starr blazed out and with a quick motion, the ball with the speed of a bullet, left his hand—straight toward the boy he hated.

With a lightning-like movement Sterling flung himself on the ground. There were those who believed for a moment that Starr had been injured but he was on his feet in an instant. Stanner had been unable to get Bascombe's apparently wild throw and both the men on the bases advanced a sack. In the third attempt that day Bascombe had been beaten.

"All the hate and rage that he had nurtured toward Starr blazed out."

Then the truth dawned on Bascombe. He was afraid of Sterling. He would give him his base on balls. On three more pitched balls, that were so transparently intentional that the crowd in the stand jeered, Starr took first.

By his action in deliberately attempting to injure Sterling, and now in an exhibition of pure cowardice, Bascombe lost the sympathy of even his own supporters. He knew this and as he stood on the mound listening to the jeers from the Beamville rooters, he writhed inwardly. Sterling was responsible for all of it, so this mistaken boy thought. If Sterling had not interfered with Beaver and with him the day before this would never have happened. So a man in the wrong always argues, always attempts to justify his conduct, however unscrupulous it may have been.

With the bases full and the people who had been leaving crowding back onto the grounds again, Northway came to bat. Harry Northway was a clean-cut type of chap, and all-round athlete and one of Riverview's best men at bat. He realized that what he could do in the next few minutes would decide the outcome of the game. With a slight smile on his lips that betokened a self-confidence he had always schooled himself to possess at such critical moments, he advanced in an almost leisurely manner to the plate.

On the other hand the attitude of the Beamville supporters toward Bascombe completed that rascal's downfall. On the first ball pitched, Northway caught the sphere on the end of his bat. There was a sharp crack as horsehide and elm met. Like the thunder from some miniature Niagara the grandstand and bleachers roared their approval, as amid a barrage of dust, Anderson, Fraser and Sterling, followed by Northway, raced around the diamond. Harry had knocked a home run and Riverview had won the first game in the Silver River League.

Around the campfire that night Starr told his story. "After Bascombe and Beaver made me captive they hurried me away. That's why Larkspur and Holloway could find no trace of me when they arrived on the scene.

"After traveling for almost half an hour we reached an old hut that Beaver evidently uses in the shooting season. Bascombe left Beaver in charge but there was one thing he overlooked. That was a bottle of liquor in the hut. Beaver got drunk, went to sleep and I escaped."

The boys were hot. "We'll go to town tomorrow and lodge a complaint. Gray, let's go tonight," suggested Larkspur.

"No, fellows," interposed Starr, "we won't. While I have every reason to believe that it was Beaver who fired that shot I couldn't prove it and, in any case, the whole story sounds like a wild concoction from the brain of some youngsters, and would probably be treated as such. In the second place, if we're going to win the pennant this Summer we'll play the game and offer no alibis. There's be more satisfaction in beating Bascombe on the diamond than turning him over to the authorities."

Baseball As Night Sport May Soon Be the Rage Two Teams Tried Out Under Electric Light

LYNN, Mass., June 24 (United Press).—Artificial light tantamount to 500 full moons illuminated the diamond here last night when, for the first time, two professional baseball teams will meet after dark.

The game between the Salem and Lynn nines, of the New England League, was scheduled for 8.30 p.m.

Babe Ruth now in Boston with the New York Yankees was invited to come to the brilliantly-lighted field to see if he could whack out a nocturnal homer, or two. Six banks of light, each composed of twelve flood light projectors, mounted on 50-foot poles around the diamond flashed the rays of 26,640,000 candle power of artificial light upon the field.

Twenty-five of the industrials projectors shoot their beams of light skyward, forming a canopy of light 500 feet high, thus flying balls will be visible to players at all times.

Champs Will Meet In the Semi-Finals

BUFFALO, June 24 (Canadian Press). — Semi-finals in the annual women's invitation golf tournament at the Buffalo Country Club to-day will bring together the two remaining champion entries, Virgina Wilson, 1926 holder, and Virginia Van Wie, tournament medallist. Louise Fordyce, of Youngstown, Ohio, four times champion of her home state,, will meet Peggy Watts, only remaining Buffalo player, in the other match to-day.

The only close match in the quarted finals yesterday developed when Miss Wilson remained in the running for repeating her championship victory of last year by defeating Eileen Kinsella of Montreal, 1 up. Miss Kinsella fought hard so that Canada might have one player in the semi-finals, but her opponent annexed the match by dropping a 40-foot putt on the 18th green, for a par four, while the Montrealer was forced to take a five.

With a brilliant finish, scoring birdies on the last three holes and doing the last nine in two under par, Arthur Havers, former British Open golf champion, led the field in the 72-hole match between the British Ryder Cup players and a team of Canadian pro golfers, a contest which started at Toronto last Saturday and ended with the second 36 holes at the Royal Montreal Club on Tuesday.

Featureless Card At Blue Bonnets

MONTREAL, Que., June 24. — A featureless card was run off at Blue Bonnets yesterday afternoon the sixth day of the summer meeting. Popular facies were for the most part winners. In spite of the absence of any outstanding event, however, some excellent racing was served up. A slight accident occurred in the fifth race when Mohammed Jamel lost its rider J. O'Brien. Mohammed Jamel was the favorite.

SCHOOL GIRL WINS HONORS

WIMBLEDON COURTS

WIMBLEDON, England, June 24.—(Canadian Press.) — Betty Nuthall, English school girl, smashed her way into the tennis hall of fame on the centre court at Wimbledon yesterday. Mrs. Molla Mallory, the champion of the United States, was the victim and the score was 2-6, 6-2, 6-0. Miss Nuthall, who is sixteen years of age, struck an astounding blow for the younger tennis generation in her defeat of the powerful veteran. Fighting an uphill battle she out-generalled and outstroked Mrs. Mallory ,using her youthful vigor in wearing down the once invincible star and in clinching the victory with net rushing tactics.

"She will be heard from in world tennis," said the wise old experts.

Mrs. Mallory and Miss Nuthall presented a sharp contrast as they entered the courts and batted a few balls across the dirt. The spectators cheered. The English girl, joyful and apparently carefree, did not look like a dangerous opponent, who inside of a short hour would send the once ranking number one Amereican player down to defeat. But the score at the end, 2-6, 6-2, 6-0 in favor of the girl.

In force of driving the first set was one of the best ever seen among men players. From the very start the battle was a fierce one, and after going to deuce four times, Miss Nuthall captured the first game. But Mrs. Mallory came back and by forceful stroking won the set.

Took Early Lead.

Then came the inspiration that may indicate the probability of the 16 year old girl becoming a great champion. She realized that she was unable to cope with Mrs. Mallory's magnificent drives of the forehand and backhand ,and suddenly remembering that she herself was a good volleyer, came up to the net. That won the match for her. She took an early lead in the second set and won out 6 to 2.

Then in the last set, which decided the contest, she captured the first four games by resuming her campaign from the baseline; then went to the net again and volleyed and smashed her way to victory.

Mrs. Mallory was badly tired physically as the third set began, but her spirit was indomitable and she tried to return every shot. Always grim visaged and usually unsmiling she smiled sadly yesterday and gamely in defeat, and shook hands heartily with the American girl, who looked young enough to be her daughter. Tapping the blushing girl gently on the shoulder, she remarked: "You are a great player."

Miss Elizabeth Ryan was in her element on the first centre court, playing hard and well, her game was very effective against Mrs. H. C. Broadbridge ,whom she defeated 6-2, 6-3. She used a sliding chop stroke, both forehand and backhand, rushing up to the net whenever opportunity presented and volleyed with remarkable accuracy.

AT THE CAPITOL.

"THE MYSTERIOUS RIDER."

One of Zane Grey's colourful stories of the West forms the feature picture at the Capitol Theatre for this week-end, in "The Mysterious Rider." Jack Holt has the stellar role as Benton Wade, Betty Jewell is the very pretty heroine, Dorothy King, and David Torrence is Mark King, the Eastern magnate who buys the ancient Spanish grant to Desert Valley and drives off the squatters who have made homes there. The picture has a curious type of production in the conflicting atmosphere of realism given by the minor actors in the piece, who make a very impressive episode out of the eviction of the squatters, and the rather theatrical impersonation of the hero and heroine.

The Californian desert forms the background for "The Mysterious Rider," and there is plenty of excitement in the filming of the intrigue which gives Harkness, a shyster attorney, hold over the squatters. He buys the ancient Spanish grant for $1,000, sells it to the squatters for $20,000, gives their leader, Benton Wade, a receipt in disappearing ink, and then re-sells once more to Mark King for $100,000. Harkness is just on the point of making a clean getaway, leaving all the blame attached to Wade, when the latter apprehends him, and, in a fake "torture" scene, makes him tell the truth about the imposture.

The smaller reels include a comedy starring the versatile and very cross-eyed Ben Turpin.

AT THE REGENT.

"JIM THE CONQUEROR" NEW KYNE FILM HIT

William Boyd and Elinor Fair in Excellent Photoplay

That delightful romancer, Peter B. Kyne, seems to have a particular penchant for writing stories that register effectively on the screen. The latest photoplay based on a Kyne story, "Jim the Conqueror," which opened auspiciously at the Regent Theatre last night, maintains the record of screen successes made from this popular writer's books.

"Jim the Conquetor" is a melo-drama of modern ranching and modern romance. It starts in Italy and culminates on the great American plains, with William Boyd in the role of a hard-fighting, fast-shooting conqueror of hearts and tamer of bad cattlemen of the West.

The crux of the drama is a battle for land and water hole rights—a never-ending feud between the sheepmen and cattle barons of the plains. Through this vital melodrama, punctuated with exciting situations and whizzing bullets, there runs the tender romance of a boy and a girl whose happiness is jeopardized through their heritage of feud traditions. It all ends happily, however, when the opposing forces are finally reconciled to the fact that "right is might."

William Boyd, who is rapidly rising to stellar heights, scores heavily in a role that fits him admirably. Boyd is a rugged and handsome type who registers strongly with all classes of movie audiences, and in the role of Jim Burgess he adds another notable characterization to his growing list of screen impersonations.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

OTHER'S FAULTS.

We have two cats, and both are white,
Or both are white at times;
But sometimes one stays out at night
Until the morning chimes.
And then comes in so dirty that
We hardly know that he's our cat.

And, after he has had his milk,
There what does Tarzan do,
If he's the one whose coat of silk
Needs prompt attending to?
Does he proceed to wash his ears,
And other places dirt appears?

Oh, no. He spies a dusty spot
On Skeezix's coat somewhere,
And starts right in, as like as not,
To wash him here and there;
Yes, right away that cat begins
To think about his brother's sins.

It's rather foolish, don't you think;
To fuss about the rest
When your own coat is black as ink,
The spots on your own vest?
Yes, isn't he a foolish cat?
But aren't people just like that?

Gas In the Stomach Is Truly Dangerous

Gas, Pain, Bloating and a feeling of fullness after eating are almost certain evidence of excessive hydrochloric acid in the stomach.

Too much acid irritates the delicate stomach lining, frequently causing chronic Gastritis and dangerous Ulcers. Food ferments and sours, forming a gas that distends the stomach and often seriously affects the Heart.

It is genuine folly to neglect such a condition or to treat with artificial digestive aids that cannot neutralize the stomach acid. A better way is to get from your druggist a few tiny tablets of Bisurated Magnesia and take three or four of them after each meal. This famous but simple and inexpensive stomach sweetner and anti-acid can be depended upon to prove its value in less than five minutes. In most instances relief comes instantly! Pleasant and perfectly harmless to use—Bisurated Magnesia tablets do give wonderful relief in nine out of ten cases. Ask your Doctor or Druggist.

The first omnibus was built by Gregory Shillibeer in 1829. It was drawn by three horses and carried 22 passengers.

WHAT ABOUT SALT?

In these articles I speak so much about organic salts, and readers are frequently confused, thinking that I mean common table salt.

Chlorid of Sodium, or common salt, is a compound of sodium and chlorin, but in the human body it can only be used in an organic form. There is no way the body can change the mineral Sodium Chlorid into the organic kind; only plants have that ability. The minerals of the soil are all used in the growth of vegetation, and Man can secure these minerals only through eating the vegetables containing them.

The lime which the plasterer uses, the potash used in lye, and the iron used in the steel mills, cannot be taken up by the body and converted into cell structure. This is likewise true of common table salt. It is true that it imparts an agreeable flavor to food which has been improperly cooked. When vegetables are cooked for too long a time, the organic Sodium Chlorid is finally changed into an inert substance or into waste minerals which the body cannot convert back into an organic form.

As salt is eaten with food it does not get into the blood circulation and, through the chemical action, really deprives the cells of other minerals with which it comes in contact and with which it forms new compounds. At no time can it become a real part of any of the cell structures of the body. It is always a waste product and always an irritant.

The irritation of salt starts at once in the stomach and, when large quantities are used, excessive thirst is created. This is the reason why so many people find they must drink liquids with meals. The body is calling for extra liquid to wash out the irritating salt or other irritating unnecessary additions to the diet, such as condiments, pickles, spices, etc.

When cattle are fed salt they will drink large quantities of water. This is a good thing for the dairyman when he wishes the cow to produce more milk. When salt is distributed around the ranges, cattle, after licking the salt, will go great distances to find water where they otherwise would be indifferent to thirst for so long that they finally become sick for the lack of it. Many observers have pointed to the fact that animals all like salt, and cite this as a reason for more use of it, but you must remember that animals will eat anything which has a good taste, and cannot be depended upon for giving us our scientific lessons in dieteties.

I am sure that a small amount of salt will not injure the average person who has been used to so much, but it is a good plan to try to gradually decrease your salt intake until you will find you can get along almost entirely without it.

If you season vegetables with salted butter and do not cook them too long, you will find they will have sufficient seasoning and you will soon learn to enjoy the real flavor of different foods which you have so long spoiled by excessive seasoning.

THIS HAS HAPPENED

Attempts have been made on the life of ELISE MARBERRY, an American girl who owns and lives on property adjoining the queer little jungle-bordered town of PORTO VERDE, in west central Brazil.

Several mysterious deaths have occurred, including that of one of her foremen. Her two-year-old orphaned nephew is kidnapped but is found again, largely through the efforts of VILAK, her cousin and protector, who is known in Porto Verde as ATTORNEY DAVIS. Elise's lawyer. Vilak has sent for LINCOLN NUNNALLY, elderly American chemist, to help him get at the bottom of the mystery.

They are ignorant of the cause of this hostility toward Elise but suspect that a man named GAYLORD PRENTISS, a reticent and forbidding character, is somehow involved.

Word is brought to Elise that WILSON, the manager of her property at VILLAPA, is desperately ill and must see her at once. Vilak suspects a trick and he insists that he and Nunnally accompany her.

On the road to Villapa they are ambushed by a band of ruffians in the uniforms of soldiers. They tell Vilak that he and his companions are wanted for murder. The charge is obviously a fake. Vilak is convinced their captors are in the pay of Elise's enemies.

He and Nunnally are trussed up and thrown into a room, but the shrewd Vilak lets the termite ants swarm over his body and they soon eat nearly through his bonds. It is an easy matter for him to snap them. Releasing Nunnally, he overpowers his guard, points a gun at the leader and sets Elise free. They stampede the enemy's horses and escape. At Villapa, Wilson says he had not sent for them.

NOW BEGIN THE STORY

CHAPTER XXV.

He was sorry, terribly sorry the thing had happened. Wilson went on. He hoped Elise wouldn't hold it against him. Wouldn't she take his two pistols? Though they would leave the fazenda without a weapon, he'd be delighted to give them to her. And of course she needn't worry about Villapa now. He was perfectly able to take care of everything.

She refused a loan which would have seemingly left him helpless, expressed her delight that his condition had so improved, and made ready to return to Porto Verde.

Wilson ingratiatingly insisted on sending a bodyguard for at least a part of the journey in order to prevent a repetition of her mis-adventures during the afternoon. Accordingly he sent for twenty of his laborers, armed them with machetes, clubs, and axes, gave them horses and ordered them to accompany the travelers. "Sorry I can't go with you," he said obsequiously, his great drawn eyelids opening and shutting quickly as though they were too weak to bear the light of the torches flaming in the laborers' hands. "Terriblysorry. Feel I'm shirking. But you know how it is . . . you know how it is . . . after fever . . . after fever."

The cavalcade set off, the torches outlining men and horses in fantastic lancing red against the black and threatening sky. Uphill, down-hill they rode, through the ravine where they had been ambushed, then through the swollen creek which formed the road to Porto Verde. The three travelers constantly searched the darkness for some evidence of renewed activity on the part of their attackers of the afternoon. But their efforts were wasted. They heard nothing, saw nothing. A short distance from the Porto Verde fazenda Elise, after consulting Vilak, sent their escort back to Villapa. The rain, which had ceased for a few hours, began to fall again in torrents. Elise tightened the raincoat about her slim neck. Suddenly she drew a sharp breath.

Vilak turned. "What's the matter?" he asked quietly.

"Nothing. Only I've just thought about Tinky." Nervously, unconsciously she quickened her horse. "A thousand things can have happened to him while we've been away. Anything can have happened."

"But nothing has happened. Be sensible. You've been a good soldier all day, a perfect soldier. I couldn't have asked for a better. Don't weaken and start being . . . feminine . . . at the last minute. Tinky'll be all right. Here. You'd better have a cigaret."

She took a light from his shielded hand and let her fingers linger gently upon his a moment. Then she put the cigaret to her lips.

She smoked pensively a moment. "I'm not a good soldier," she said at length. "You're only trying to keep up my spirits. I'm a bad soldier. So wretched that I'd be given a dishonorable discharge in any respectable army. This morning you told me not to go to Villapa. I went. You were right. I was wrong. Then, when we were captured, I did nothing but sit on a log and stare weakly into a fire. You, though bound hand and foot, first freed yourself and then freed me.

"Tomorrow I'm going to be a still worse soldier. I'm going to run away from the battle. And frankly, as far as Tinky is concerned, you were right when you said I'd be glad to get away before. I want to get him to some place where things can't happen with the ease they did today. If there were a boat out to-night, I'd take it. Yes, it seems to me, all in all, I'm a pretty poor sort of Amazon."

The rain had extinguished Vilak's cigaret. He struck a match to light it. By the flickering flame Elise saw that the bandage was no longer on the wound he had received in his wrist two days before. She snatched his hand and before he could prevent was binding it gently and effectively with a clean handkerchief. "I'm a grateful Amazon, at least," she murmured, brightening. "Even you can't keep me from being that."

They reached the fazenda. Elise hurried to find Tinky. He was in her bedroom, sleeping soundly. The jovial Hannah was sitting in a chair beside him. In the next room sat Schwartz, smoking a vast meerschaum pipe. He looked up and greeted Elise as she entered.

Assured that the child was safe, though it was close onto midnight, Elise hurried to have supper prepared for her two guests and herself. The three of them quickly changed their wet clothes for dressing gowns. They ate heartily, then played a single rubber of bridge, the wearied and sleepy old man making blunders that would have driven serious-minded bridge players into a passion. Vilak, with his monotonous regularity, won.

Elise shook her dainty head. She had completely recovered her usual sprightliness. "You're getting to be really unbearable," she said. In mock despair she threw her cards onto the table. "You're always right: you always win. No matter how good a hand I have, you always manage to make me play second fiddle somehow. I've half a mind to send you home. You're terribly hard on my self-esteem. I can't have such a clever person as you around."

She rose from the table. "After all perhaps it isn't that you are any clever, for being a man. Perhaps it's that you've merely got a long tradition behind you which we women haven't—sort of fooling the public for hundreds of centuries, you know and that gives you confidence. Anyway, I'll comfort myself by saying it's that. Good night, Mr. Nunnally. Good night, manly and superior relative," she said. She moved toward the door.

"Just a minute, Elise." Vilak's bantering voice checked her.

She halted. "Yes?"

"Just wanted to ask you a question. Was that . . . kiss you gave me this afternoon a sign of homage, a tribute to your superior, was it cousinly, or was it . . . a proposal?"

She whipped the dressing gown tighter about her. "Pardon me if I tell you to go to the devil, my conceited friend," she flashed and whisked out of the room.

After bidding the old man good night, Vilak made his customary tour of the house, then retired. The pouring rain continued throughout the night, but ceased after a murky dawn.

Elise busied herself in completing preparations for her departure. Vilak, wishing to go to town to make a few purchases, sought out the old man, in order that they might make the journey together, but finding him deep in a sleep of exhaustion, did not wake him but set off alone. He reached Porto Verde, to see the usual groups of natives clustered in the road along the windows of the flimsy dilapidated shops. Today they were gazing ominously at the puddles of water which lay everywhere and predicting disaster.

"Eet is bad, ees it not all thees rain, Meester Davis?" he murmured. "Eet will make for us a flood. Yes, a most bad flood. Never before have I rain like thees see in Porto Verde. Never. Though I have live here twenty years. The dam at Avilos cannot but break. Any moment maybe will it break. Myself, Macedo, I am ready. To run fast, yes, ver' fast. And this morning I weel go see the priest an' make white my soul."

How to make a
Bovril Sandwich

Just spread a little Bovril between two thin slices of bread and butter—it's the easiest and and tastiest sandwich you can make.

Excellent for afternoon teas, parties, or for any occasion where time is lacking for the preparation of a heavier meal. Bovril Sandwiches are particularly admirable when something more sustaining than "just the ordinary sandwich" is needed.

As an addition to the Traveller's lunch basket there is nothing to beat Bovril Sandwiches.

Bovril is the Cook's best friend at all times.

Hamilton this week welcomed Lord and Lady Willingdon on their excellencies' first visit to the Ambitious city ,which gave them a royal reception. They unveiled the memorial fountain presented the city by Miss Eugene Gage in memory of her father. The fountain is in the new park, land for which was provided by the pioneer Gage family. This illustration shows Lady Willington (left) and Miss Gage in an informal chat. Standing at the right may be seen Mayor F. F. Treleaven, (left), and Chairman Brooks of the reception committee.

"This committee is composed of Mr. H. Gainey, Chairman of the Suburban Area Commission; Warden Middleton, and Reeve Middleton, Chairman of the County Roads Committee.

According to arrangements made at last November session, cost of this shed was to be divided as follows:

Suburban Area Commission, ⅝; County Roads Committee, ⅜; County ⅜.

Your committee engaged Mr. Jas. Finnie to do the construction of shed 50 feet by 36 feet. Your committee also had Mr. Finnie close in the gap between the old wall and the shed, and the gap between the new addition to the court house and the old wall.

Mr. Finnie's estimate on the cost of the shed alone was $1,375.00. The cost of construction of the shed plus the cost of bricking up the two gaps and putting a roof over the two connecting gaps will be approximately $1,600.00."

$1,000 to Fair Board

The Finance Committee this morning, with Reeve Smithson presiding, recommended that the grant to the Peterboro Industrial Exhibition be increased from the $600 given last year to $1,000.

Reeve Curtis of Havelock moved an amendment, seconded by Reeve Scott of Asphodel, that the grant to the county fairs be the same as last years. The amendment was supported by Reeves Scott, Montgomery, Curtis, Leahy, Breckenridge and Hawthorne.

The other members voted for the motion.

The other fair grant are the same as follows: Norwood $300, Lakefield $200, Galway $150.

The discussion reflected an opinion that the small rural fairs are steadily declining, and that effort should be concentrated behind the county fair.

Mr. Curtis of Havelock asked whether any farmer would think of spending $1,000 on a barn to house cattle for one week.

Mr. Tanner.—I feel we should do what we can to make the Peterborough County Fair a banner one.

Reeves Scott and Montgomery urged the claim of the Norwood Fair and spoke of its usefulness in East Peterborough.

Mr. Lillico, Mr. Smithson; Warden Middleton and other members advocated a grant that would materially held the Peterborough Fair Board to build the cattle barn it needs.

Mr. Curtis said Peterborough's Fair Board were trying to move faster than they can pay for.

Mr. Cavanagh argued that breeders would not show valuable cattle if proper shelter and accommodation was not provided, and Mr. Lillico declared that he could guarantee that every cent would be well spent.

$1,000 to Children's Aid

The County's grant to the Children's Aid Society was recommended by the committee to be $1,000, the same as last year. In the brief discussion on this item, members were inclined to criticize the society's salaries to officials. It was remarked that the Society might invoke legislation to obtain financial help from the County. This statement brought out the comment that in that case the Couny would have "something ot say in where the Society's money goes."

The Trent Waterways Development Association received $100 from the County, the same amount as last year; but the usual grants to the Peterborough and Lakefield branches of the G.W.V.A., now the Canadian Legion, were deferred to December for further consideration.

The Peterborough Poultry Association is granted $25, the same as last year; the Plowmen's Association $150.

In the Roads and Bridge committee Reeve Lillico moved, seconded by Reeve Breckenridge, that Warden Middleton, Reeve Brown and Reeve Parker be a committee to act with the engineer in repairing the South Squaw River Bridge concrete work.

Deputy - Reeve McIntyre moved, seconded by Reeve Smithson, that the County assume one-half the cost of taking levels to ascertain the possibility and cost of draining the swamp at the Base Line Bridge, Otonabee, and if found practicable, to have the ditch opened to let the water away from the swamp.

IN MEMORIAM.

WALSH. — In loving memory of little Walter, who passed away June 24th, 1922.
Oh, how we miss him! Words cannot tell,
The bright, happy face, we all loved so well.
The sweetest of memories is all that is left,
In life and in death he was one of the best.

The blow was great, the shock severe,
We little thought his death so near,
And only ones who loved can tell
The pain of not saying the last farewell.

Barrie's

IN POLICE COURT.

The desire of a young man, contemplating matrimony, to provide his bride-to-be with a new dress, led him to take an unwise step which resulted in his appearance in court this morning before Magistrate O. A. Langley, when he was given suspended sentence, on a charge of obtaining.

In payment of the purchase, the intending benedict presented a cheque to a Peterborough retail merchant. There was no account behind the cheque, but, as the young man explained to the Magistrate, he had previously written to his father, who was working in the north country, asking him to send the money in time to cover the cheque. The money did not come, and the dishonoring of the cheque led to the prosecution.

Restitution being made in full and all expenses being paid by the accused, the Magistrate, after some sage counsel as to the future, allowed the offender to go on suspended sentence.

When Albert Daley, who was remanded on Wednesday of this week came up this morning on a charge of vagrancy, all hope of his gaining his liberty speedily was blasted when Inspector James F. Reid produced a reply he had received from the Board of Parole in answer to a communication sent after the case was considered on Wednesday, which stated that Daley was wanted by the Board.

It was announced that a Provincial warrant for the detention of Daley in the county jail was in the hands of the Deputy-Sheriff. The local case against Daley was dismissed, and he will be returned to the Provincial authorities.

A resident of the city was sent down by Magistrate O. A. Langley for one month after pleading guilty to assaulting his wife.

HYDRO ISSUES ULTIMATUM TO LIGHT USERS

Residents in Smith Township Asked To Sign 20 Year Contract.

SOME COMPLAINTS.

Officials of Township Not Yet Given Notification of Proposal.

Something in the nature of an ultimatum has been issued by the Hydro Commission of Ontario, to users of electric light supplied by the system in Smith Township. The notice calls for the signing of a 20-year contract, failing which, light will be cut off on July 15.

Up-to-date only a comparatively small number of those concerned have received the unwelcome notification.

According to those to whom the notices have been sent, householders and tenants, as well as the Township are asked to bind themselves under the 20-year agreement.

So far, the Township Council of Smith has received no official notification of the proposed change, although the matter has been privately brought to the attention of the Reeve and Deputy Reeve, by residents affected by the order.

INTEREST OF BRITISH EMPIRE TURNED TOWARDS DOMINION FOLLOW PLANS FOR JUBILEE

Described as Important Milestone in March to Progress and Power.

SPECIAL EDITION.

Bells of Carillion at Ottawa Will Be Heard in Isles.

LONDON, June 25. — The eyes of the British people the world over are turning toward Canada with increasing interest with the approach of July 1, when the Jubilee of the Dominion Confederation will be celebrated.

South Africa is sharing the prominent position in English newspapers to-day for an entirely different reason —a dispute over the inclusion of the Union Jack in the proposed new national flag for that Dominion.

Canada's Jubilee is described here as "another important milestone in the march to progress and power of the young but vigorous Dominion which has the possibility some day of being as great if not greater than the Motherland."

Special Editions.

Notable English newspapers are full of special articles on Canada. The London Times is preparing a special Canada number and the Financial Times is publishing an important series of articles by a special commissioner investigating industrial resources and possibilities in the Dominion.

Allegiance to the Crown.

Mr. King will present, to use his own words, "a picturesque pattern of a young Canadian nation through which runs as warp and woof the golden thread of allegiance to the Crown as the symbol of United Canada."

Sir Henry Thornton and E. W. Beatty are also contributing articles. Elaborate arrangements are being made for wireless broadcasting of the ceremonies at Ottawa on July 1, and it is expected that at least five million people throughout the British Isles will hear the new carillon in the tower of Parliament Buildings ring out their peal of rejoicing on that day of jubilee.

NEED PEACE FOR COMMERCE

British Empire is World's Peacemaker, Declares Sir Cecil Hurst.

ADDRESS AT CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, June 25 (Canadian Press). — The British Empire is the world's peacemaker, Sir Cecil Hurst, legal adviser to the British Ministry of Foreign Affairs, declared in an address before the English Speaking Union and the Chicago Council of Foreign Affairs here yesterday.

Sir Cecil discussed Great Britain's foreign policy frankly.

"We must have world peace if our commerce is to go on," the speaker said. "Whether in the lowlands of Europe, in Egypt, in Irak, in China, or anywhere else, when disputes arose between peoples, Great Britain stepped in to settle the disputes and if necessary throw the weight of her guarantees aaingst the threatened aggression against weak people.

"Egypt must not be guided in government by a foreign nation," he said, "because the canal is the approach to our Australasian dominions and to the Far East, through Egypt go the highways, arteries, and living veing of British life, and we must control them."

Great Britain accepted the mandate for Mesopotamia because the boundary dispute with Turkey threatened the peace of Europe, Sir Cecil said. Covetous interests raised the cry of "oil," but eventually it was proved there was no oil.

Sir Cecil dwelt at length on the Locarno Treaty. The real principle behind it was Great Britain's fear that the most powerful military nation in Europe would get control of the lowlands, resulting in a menace to the peace of the British Isles. Since Queen Elizabeth connived against Spanish dominion over the lowlands, this had been a recurrent cause of British intervention in Europe. At Locarno, Great Britain had sought to allay the state of nerves into which France and Germany had fallen after the Great War by ensuring each against aggression from the other. Great Britain, he said, disliked undertaking great commitments as much as anybody else, but France and Germany had to be assured that each was not plotting revenge. So Great Britain undertook to oppose either country with military measures if necessary if one attacked the other.

POLICE MAKE REGULATIONS FOR FIRST DAY

No Canoe To Be Permitted Near Area of Aquatic Sports.

CLEAR GEORGE STREET.

Soldiers From Militia To Aid in Maintaining Order.

The City Police have drawn up a number of regulations to ensure public safety during the Jubilee celebrations. Between 9.30 and 12 on July 1, while the regatta is in progress, south of the C.P.R. Bridge near the George Street wharf, no canoes will be allowed within or near the area which will be marked off by buoys. For obvious reasons, congregating on the C.P.R. bridge will be forbidden. Inspector Reid states there will be a great deal of room available at St. Charles' Point on the east side of the river. On the west side the ground will be graded and seating arrangements provided for the accommodation of the large crowds expected.

At noon the police will proceed to clear George Street, which will be blocked from both sides. Murray Street will also be cleared from Aylmer to George Streets. The police will be aidad in maintaing order by a detachments of soldiers from the Militia, who will be given military police badges.

A guard will be stationed at each crossing along the route. It has been provided that citizens who have good reasons for crossing, while the parade is in progress, will be allowed to pass in the intervals between platoons, after making the request to the guard. At the Hunter, Simcoe and Charlotte intersections, with George gaps of 20 feet will be left to permit of the passage of family cars.

The public are asked to co-operate with the authorities in the efforts to ensure the general convenience and safety.

UNION MINES CLOSE JULY 1ST

Joint Committee Fails To Reach Agreement on Wage Scale.

12,000 MEN IDLE.

PHILADELPHIA, June 25.—(Canadian Press.)—All union coal mines in the Central Pennsylvania bituminous field will close July 1, the joint committee representing the operators and miners having failed yesterday to reach an agreement on a new wage scale and adjuorned sine die. Between 10,000 and 12,000 men will be thrown into idleness.

The joint conference, which reconvened here last Tuesday in an effort to negotiate a new scale to replace the Jacksonville agreement, adjourned finally when the miners' representatives voted down a proposal of the operators for a 15 to 20 per cent. reduction in wages.

Since the expiration of the Jacksonville scale on March 31 the mines had been operated under a temporary agreement pending wage negotiations.

RED CROSS OUTPOST AT APSLEY IS APPRECIATED BY THE COUNTY

NOTHING TO NORWOOD.

W. A. Anderson M.P.P., Addressed County Council.

"We want the Red Cross Society to know that we appreciate what they are doing" said Reeve Frank Breckenridge of Belmont township in supporting a resolution for a grant of $250, before the finance committee of the County Council yesterday.

The establishing of the Red Cross outpost at Apsley impressed the Council as a peace time service that deserved material recognition. But there was no appeal from the Apsley outpost hospital for a grant of money. When Reeve Duncan Brown, of Burleigh, was asked if an application had been sent in, he answered: "No. We were very thankful for the $200 the Council gave us last year. Things are going on nicely, and we are not asking for a grant now."

Reeve Tanner exclaimed "atta boy," some one else added "that's the stuff," and there was a little round of applause.

Later the general appeal from the Red Cross Society, the first since the war years, came up for consideration. Reeve Curtis, of Havelock, warmly advocated a liberal grant.

"The Red Cross has done far more good than the Salvation Army has ever done, especially in the back country," he declared.

There a Red Cross outpost, not only at Apsley, but also at Wilberforce, he added.

Reeve Curtis kindled an argument with his comparsion, for the Salvation Army had plenty of champions. But the Council as a whole agreed that the Red Cross enterprise in the poorer northern townships was an excellent public service.

Mr. Curtis moved, seconded by Mr. Brown, that a grant of $250 be made to the Red Cross.

"How would it be if we made the Red Cross grant for the Apsley outpost," Mr. Smithson, presiding, suggested.

After further expressions of appreciation Reeve Caldwell moved, seconded by Reeve Tanner, that $250 be granted the Red Cross to be expended at Apsley.

Reeve Curtis contended that it was not necessary to tag the grant, but withdrew his motion because of its virtual agreement with the Caldwell amendment, and also for the sentimental effect of communicating the Council's commendation to the Red Cross Society.

$250 to Salvation Army

The request of the Salvation Army produced a broad divergence of opinion as to the amount to be given. Parker and Curtis proposed no action; Brown and Lillico moved for $500 and Scott and Cavanagh offered a compromise sum of 250.

Reeve Curtis asserted that the Council should not contribute public money to any denomination. When a grant was made to the Salvation Army, any other church was justified in asking for the same dealing.

"The Salvation Army takes up a lot of work the churches don't take up at all" said Reeve Brown.

Mr. McIntyre suggested a grant of $300 but gradually the Scott-Cavanagh compromise amendment had its effect and the Salvation Army receives $250.

Reeve Montgomery of Norwood failed to move the Council to a favorable attitude toward the Normal Board of Education's request for a grant to enable them to carry on the upper school work in the High School.

Mr. Tanner and Mr. Cavanagh moved that the high schools in Lakefield, Norwood and Havelock each receive $500 from the county.

Mr. Lillico and Mr. McIntyre turned their thumbs down entirely with a "no grant" amendment.

Reeve Montgomery and the Norwood deputation had not mentioned any definite sum in their appeal, but knowing that the $500 motion was sure to be defeated, and facing the alternative of Lillico's "no grant" amendment, Norwood's Reeve asked for $300 and Reeve Hawthorne seconded his amendment. But his manoeuvre was in vain. The com-

Stormy Weather Over Atlantic Continues To Hold Monoplane "America" On This Side

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N.Y., June 25 (Canadian Press).—A "bad condition" over this side of the Atlantic ocean, which, like a bad cold, refused to break up, last night was the element which continued to keep the monoplane "America" unavoidably delayed at home, where it may remain until Sunday or even later.

All set for its sortie to Paris, its wings glistening in a brilliant sun, the big three-motored craft rested at the top of the runway on Roosevel Field all day.

Late yesterday, he finally said:

'It is very unlikely the conditions will clear in time for a takeoff this morning, and there doesn't seem to be much hope for favorable conditions Sunday morning."

Fliers in uniform, sitting on porch chairs or tinkering with the gadgets and dewdads, fretted and fumed. Bon voyage crowds came and crowds went, but the big plane stayed right where she was.

Earlier in the day Commander Byrd conceded himself resigned to conditions. "We can't alter the weather," he said.

COUNTY TAX RATE 11 3-5 MILLS IS LOWER THAN THE 1926 LEVY

Budget Provides For Expenditure of $115,750.64.

ADOPTED TO-DAY.

County Clerk's Leave of Absence is Extended.

The County tax rate for 1927 is 11 3-5 mills, as compared with 12¾ mills last year.

This morning the County Council passed its budget for the year, itemizing an estimated expenditure of $115,750.64 to be raised on an equalized assessment of $10,094,308.

General Rate, 7 mills	$70,660.15
Highways, 3 mills	28,854.74
Bridges, ½ mill	5,047.15
House of Refuge, 1 mill....	10,094.30
Prov. Highway, 1-10 mill..	1,094.30
	$115,750.64

The County's share of the cost of the extension to the Court House will be paid by the sale of debentures which already have been printed. This sum, $13,956 represented 1.4 mills, and had it been levied in this year's taxes, would have increased the rate of 13 mills.

Warden Middleton, in Finance Committee, ventured the proposal that the outlay be met by the debenture plan.

"We have put up a permanent addition," said the Warden, "and it seems to me that this is one of the times when we might consider debentures."

Mr. Tanner said he thought future generations should be given a chance to bear a share of the cost of this work.

Mr. Smithson pointed out that the vault space had been provided in anticipation of the needs of the next forty years.

The Warden moved, seconded by Reeve Cavanagh, that sufficient debentures be sold to meet the county's share of the cost.

Leave Is Extended

The leave of absence which had been granted to Ed. M. Elliott, County Clerk and Treasurer, was extended to the November session, on Reeve Breckenridge's motion, seconded by Reeve Montgomery.

Col. C. H. Ackerman and Mr. S. Whatley of the Peterboro branch of the Canadian Legion, this morning, asked that the grant of $150 which had formerly been given to the G.W.V.A. be continued this year. They explained the Legion's work and stated that some $2,000 had been expended in relief for ex-service men and their families, including those living in the county.

Col. Ackerman said he had recently attended meetings of the executive of the Ontario Command. In another year the Legion hoped to be able to stand on its own feet. The grant of $150 would be applied to the interest on the cost of new heating equipment and was applied for on the strength of the County's promise some year's ago to contribute toward the interest charges instead of donating a lump sum.

Mr. Smithson explained that the Finance Committee had decided to defer action on the usual grant until November, when they expected to obtain information from the Legion which the Committee had not received at this session.

Col. Ackerman said that it was entirely satisfactory to the Legion to wait until the end of the year, and thanked the Council for its response.

Reeve Curtis moved, seconded by Reeve Tanner, that all grants except those for roads and bridges be withheld until the taxes are paid in December. Carried.

Mr. Curtis said this suspension would not be a hardship to the Fair Boards and other organizations.

An Asphodel request for $25 to pay for a culvert in front of the war memorial plot at Westwood was submitted by Reeve John Scott, but the Council declined to deprive the township of the honor of bearing the entire expense of the upkeep of its memorial.

A single pair of elephant tusks will make sufficient keys for thirty or forty pianos.

Visit of Lindbergh To Ottawa Announced

WASHINGTON, June 25. United Press. — Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh will make a good-will flight to Ottawa on July 2nd, to participate in the Diamond Jubilee of the Canadian government, Secretary of State Kellogg yesterday announced.

Lindbergh will remain in Ottawa July 3rd.

The announcement came after Lindbergh had paid a morning visit to the Secretary and started a round of other calls previous to his planned take-off for New York yesterday afternoon.

Whether Lindbergh will fly the Spirit of St. Louis to Ottawa has not been determined. He probably will have an army escort.

WASHINGTON PACT CREATES BIG DEADLOCK

EXPERTS MEET.

United States Will Refuse To Submit To Remodelling the Treaty.

GENEVA, June 25 (Canadian Press).—A deadlock continues on the great problem of the tri-partite naval conference, namely whether the decisions taken at Washington in 1922 are subject to reconsideration here. Apparently nothing important can be achieved until this question is decided one way or another.

Groups of experts met today to study technical aspects of the limitation of cruisers, submarines and destroyers.

The most reliable opinion here is that the United States delegation prefers to go home without any agreement than to reach one which would involve the entire remodelling of the Washington Treaty or one placing the total tonnage figures for auxiliary warcraft so high that there would be no limitation at all, but merely an invitation for increased armament competition.

Hugh S. Gibson, Chief United States delegate, replied indirectly today to the statement emanating from British circles that the tonnage of warcraft scrapped by Great Britain since the war was probably three times that scrapped by the United States.

Referring to the fact that the United States at the Washington Conference voluntarily surrendered her supremacy in battleships, he declared she had committed herself to scrapping of 531,000 tons of ships well under construction, and 15 old battleships with tonnage of about 228,000.

Tonnage Compared

This commitment, he explained, was actually carried out, and should be compared with the total tonnage of projected battleships and 19 old warships—411,000 tons in all—actually scrapped by Great Britain.

Information from the United States delegation indicates prevalence of a belief that any agreement to reduce the size of cruisers from 10,000 tons as desired by Great Britain, would be another surrender on type of warship which the United States hold necessary in their national defence; hence their determination to make no concessions on this point.

It is also remarked that Great Britain, with H.M.S. Nelson and Rodney, each of 35,000 tons, has two more powerful capital ships than the United States navy—vessels which embody the lessons taught by the Battle of Jutland. Thus, acceptance of the British proposal to cut the tonnage of battleships to 30,000 would leave the United States in a distinctly inferior position as regards this type of warcraft.

AGREEMENT REACHED IN JAIL MUTINY

Driven By Fear and Hunger, Convicts Give Themselves Up.

OVERPOWER LEADERS.

Issued Ultimatum Demanding More Consideration For Parole Applications.

LANSING, Kansas, June 25 (Canadian Press).—A short fierce battle within the ranks of the 328 mutinous convicts in the Kansas Penitentiary coal mine resulted in victory late yesterday for the forces favoring surrender and ended the uprising.

In the battle about 270 men driven by fear and hunger after 77 hours of self-imposed incarceration 720 below ground, allied themselves against the 50 strike leaders and overpowered them.

Shortly before the men announced their willingness to come to the top, Dr. Charles S. Huffman, chairman of the State Board of Administration, had assured a spokesman for the convicts over the telephone that "we can't promise you anything, except that your demands will be considered fairly and impartially."

The convicts Thursday night had served an ultimatum on the board demanding more consideration for parole applications and greater privileges under the prison rules.

As the men were brought to the mine head, 12 at a time, each group was met by Warden W. H. Mackey, who said:

'You men go to the laundry and take a bath and change clothes. Supper will be ready for you just as soon as possible."

Nothing else was said to the convicts.

Carried From Shaft

Several of the mutineers were carried from the mine hoist. Some were sick, others showed unmistakeable evidence of the underground fight.

One convict hurled a brick at another as they reached the surface. The man hit was knocked unconscious and taken to the hospital.

Fourteen prison guards were overpowered and imprisoned in the electric shop of the mine by the 328 mutinous miners when the mutiny was called Tuesday morning.

Several of the guards were sick when they were brought to the surface.

"We have had nothing to eat since Tuesday morning," Charles Nicholson, a guard, told the warden.

"It was an awful thing to go through," Charles Hamlin, another guard, said. "You can't know how awful it was unless you were there."

During the battle, it was learned, the obstinate mutiny leaders seized two gallon jugs of acid and fought the others with this. Several men sustained acid burns.

When word reached the surface that the men were ready to come up, the night guards were called to reinforce the day guards about the mine top. The 100 guards, all equipped with shotguns, stood guard over the top as the hoists began bringing the men out.

The electric shop in which the guards were locked was only ten by twelve feet in dimension, and the guards were forced to lie down most of the time, they said.

"We had some water, but no food," Nelson related.

"Now and then we would see men pass the window. They were carrying long knives, but as they were masked we could not tell who they were."

The mutiny broke by nearly forty hours the longest previous mutiny staged in 1900.

AIR MINISTRY BUYS AIRPLANES

Great Britain Is Determined To Win Schneider Cup Race Next September.

LONDON, June 25.—(United Press) Great Britain will make a determined effort to win the Schneider Cup races in Venice next September. Seven airplanes, each said to be designed to make a speed of 300 miles an hour, have been ordered by the Air Ministry. Three are super-Marine Napier-5 monoplanes, three Gloster-Napier biplanes and one a Crusader monoplane. The Crusader will be driven by an air-cooled motor of enormous power. It is said to be the first high speed plane ever designed to use a motor of that type.

PEACE PACT IS EXPECTED BY GREAT POWERS

Japan and United States Are Likely To Sign Perpetual Peace Pct.

NAVAL CONFERENCE.

Japan Wishes To Be Allowed To Construct Many Light Craft.

GENEVA, Switzerland, June 25 (Canadian Press). — Overtures by Japan with a view to signing of a perpetual peace pact with the United States are looked for in authoritative circles of the tri-partite naval conference. Notwithstanding the denials by both Japanese delegates and Hugh S. Gibson, head of the United States delegation, that any such suggestion has been made, competent observers persisted in the belief to-day that when he had assurance that the overtures would have a chance of being favourably considered, Admiral Viscount Saito, Japanese spokesman, possibly would propose a treaty outlawing war between his country and the United States.

As the conference neared the close of its first week's deliberations to harmonize the views of the three participating nations on the best way to bring about a reduction in naval armaments, it appeared that the British were withdrawing somewhat from their desire to re-open the questions settled at the Washington Conference in 1922, chiefly the matter of further reducing the size of capital ships.

This apparent change came after the United States and Japanese delegations notified the British officially that the present conference had no authority to discuss decisions which were part of the Washington pact. Although the two delegations, at the request of the British, decided to ask Washington and Tokio whether the conference might re-examine the question of the size of battleships, cruisers, and aircraft carriers, it is not expected the Governments will deviate from their original programmes.

Japan's desire to be allowed to construct as many light craft, including submarines, all below 100 tons as she deems necessary, remains unchanged, despite persistent rumours that her delegation was reconsidering at least the submarine feature of the project.

The Japanese also resolutely declines to be drawn into the light cruiser versus armed merchantmen controversy, which has been debated for most of the week by the British and United States delegations. Their attention is concentrated upon obtaining a better ratio for Japan than the present three to five each for Great Britain and the United States.

POTATOES $2.75.

Eggs on the Local Market 30 to 35 Cents a Dozen.

Everything at the farmers' market languished under this morning's downpour. The little pigs that come to market every Saturday, like the traditional small porkers of the nursery rhyme, slept uneasily under crated boxes and the small collie pups in the little boys' basket at the lower entrance cuddled close together, in efforts to escape the general prevailing moisture. Potatoes were the only optimistic offerings of the outdoor section, giving themselves airs at a price of $2.75 to $3.25 a bag.

In the basket section, strawberries from local gardens were offered at 20 cents a pint box and 38 to 40 cents for the quart containers. Berries from Port Hope were 35 cents a quart box.

Eggs were priced from 30 to 35 cents a dozen and butter from 32 to 33 cents a pound. Little chickens with their heads tucked under their wings were 35 cents a pound and older birds 32 cents. Tomatoes were 20 cents a pound, maple syrup in quart sealers 50 cents and home-made bread, in fruit, whole wheat and white varieties, was 25 cents a loaf. Home-made buns were 15 and 20 cents a dozen.

There were plenty of floral offerings this morning, in red and white peonies at a nickel apiece; sweet william, pansies and iris. The vendor of artificial blooms had a large variety on view.

Nearly every muscle in the body receives a slight impulse during a sneeze —more than 50 muscles in all.

COMMISSION ENDS SESSION AT ST. JOHNS

Nova Scotia Sittings Will Open at Halifax on Monday.

WITNESS WARNED.

Told By Counsel Perjury is More Serious Offense Than Smuggling.

ST. JOHN, N.B., June 25 (Canadian Press).—New Brunswick sittings of the Royal Customs Commission, concluded here yesterday evening. Today the Commission will move on to Halifax, where Nova Scotia sittings will open on Monday morning. The Commissioners will cross to Digby and travel from there to Halifax by motor car.

The feature of yesterday afternoon sitting was the examination of Thomas Nowlan, a Bugtouche farmer, who has already given evidence. His examination involved a warning by R. L. Calder, K.C., Commission counsel, that perjury is a more serious offense than smuggling, and that the penalty for the former is more severe than the latter. Commission auditors have been looking into Mr. Nowlan's three bank accounts, and A. E. Nash, in charge of their work, gave the Commission an outline of what they found.

Had Large Accounts

Mr. Nowlan has a current account with the Canadian Bank of Commerce at Moncton, and Mr. Nash said that the transactions passing through it since June, 1923, up to the present time amounted to $830,000. Many of the deposits in this account ran from ten to fifteen thousand dollars, he said. In Mr. Nowlan's savings account in the same bank, there is a net balance of $58,000, Mr. Nash said. In an account which he keeps at the Royal Bank, Buctouche, deposits from 1924 to 1927 totalled approximately $35,000. A savings account in the Bank of Nova Scotia, Moncton, the auditor said, was small.

Mr. Nowlan was called.

"You said all you liquor transactions were out of Canada?" said Mr. Calder. "Do you want to alter that statement?"

"How?" asked Mr. Nowlan.

"Did you ever smuggle liquor into Canada?"

"No."

Mr. Nowlan denied that he had ever taken liquor from the shore, but he admitted purchasing it in Montreal and selling it in New Brunswick.

"How long ago did you do that?"

"I won't say."

"You've got to say."

Mr. Nowlan said that it might be two years or it might be more. He could not remember who were his principal customers.

"I am instructed that you handled so much of John Crabbe's liquor in New Brunswick that you drove the liquor commission out of business in that particular line."

"You are misinformed."

"Your oath is that you never bought liquor from John Crabbe Scotland, and never sold it in New Brunswick.

"Yes."

Mr. Calder asked the witness if there was anyone else in the liquor business at Buctouche beside himself. Mr. Nowlan did not know.

Then counsel informed Mr. Nowlan that his bank books showed he had saved some $70,000 in three years. 'Did you 'show that in your income tax return?" he asked.

"No," was the reply. Mr. Nowlan stated that an income tax inspector had informed him that profits made from the sale of liquor outside Canada were not taxable. Therefore he had not returned them. Mr. Calder pressed for the name of the inspector, but Mr. Nowlan did not give it.

'And that is why you paid the Receiver-General of Canada $125.84," commented counsel.

"Mr. Nowlan," said Mr. Calder, "When you went down to Buctouche the other day, you tried to get all your vouchers from the Bank——"

"Yes, I wanted to give them to you," interrupted the witness, while the court room laughed Mr Calder allowed him to leave the witness box.

Made No Seizures

John D. Leger, Collector of Customs at Buctouche, admitted that he made no seizures since he took office at this place. He had made seizures, however, in association with preventive officers. Mr. Calder told him that it had been proven that liquor was landed at Buctouche, and that motor cars carrying it "radiated" from that point.

"How could that happen without you knowing it?" he was asked.

Mr. Leger did not know.

"Did you ever receive anything from Mr. Nowlan not to see liquor passing there?" asked counsel.

"No." The witness stated that he had assisted at raids on Nowlan's house and had watched it at night sometimes.

Mr. Calder finally submitted that the evidence be sent up to the Minister of Justice with a suggestion that Thomas Nowlan be prosecuted for submitting a false income tax return.

The chief commissioner pointed out that Mr. Nowlan's evidence was that he had been advised by an income tax inspector not to include for tax purposes his profits from liquor sold out of Canada. Counsel for Mr. Nowlan emphasized that there was no evidence of intention to defraud the Government on the part of Mr. Now-

Carter walked smilingly to his death, telling Executioner Gilbert to "turn on the juice" as he settled himself in the chair.

Nebraska exacted its toll for the murders of Dr. Austin Searles and William McDivitt, killed in Omaha in February, 1926. The confessed sniper claimed, in addition to those, many other killings, almost boastfully relating how he shot them down from ambush.

Strangler Placed In a Special Cell

WINNIPEG, Man., June 25 (Canadian Press). — Heavily guarded, Earl Nelson, committed for trial on Thursday on charges of murdering Mrs. Emily Patterson and Lola Cowan, was transferred to the death cell in the Provincial Jail yesterday. There he will be kept in close confinement pending arraignment for jury trial in the Manitoba Assize Court on July 26.

The death cell is built of solid cement, with a reinforced steel enclosure. There is a substantial steel door on both structures, with a slotted window about six inches square, where a guard will be stationed to keep constant watch on the prisoner's movements. It is the first time in the history of the Province that anyone committed for murder has been placed in a death cell before actual conviction.

Outside of this strict surveillance, Nelson will be permitted the usual prison privileges of a man awaiting trial.

PLAN SERVICE FOR MARMORA

Discuss Arrangements For Holding Thanksgiving Service on Sunday, July 3rd.

COMMUNITY AFFAIR.

MARMORA, June 25.—Reeve G. B. Airhart presided at a meeting held in the Council Chambers on Thursday evening to arrange for the holding of a community service of Thanksgiving to be held on the grounds of the Continuation School on the afternoon of Sunday, July 3.

It was moved by H. W. Sabine and seconded by D. E. Bell that arrangements be left in the hands of the Reeves of Marmora, Marmora Township and Deloro, local clergy and Mr. Ross Hunter. The programme was left in the hands of the latter and the Reeve. Subsequent to this meeting another was held by the committee in charge of Dominion Day celebrations under the presidency of T. E. Laycock. It was mentioned by Reeve Airhart that the Council would donate three prizes for best decorated buildings in the village. A few additions were made to existing sub committees.

WHY TORTURE THE LITTLE ONES

Mothers, do you think it fair to torture your little ones by forcing them to take ill-tasting oils when they need a laxative medicine? Don't you find that the child's dread of these medicines often do more harm than good?

Baby's Own Tablets are the modern substitute for these nauseous doses. They are the very medicine the child requires and are so pleasant to take that they are as easy to administer as a glass of water. They are the perfect remedy for all the minor ailments of little ones, being absolutely guaranteed from injurious drugs.

Baby's Own Tablets accomplish all that castor oil and other bad-tasting remedies can do. In fact they accomplish more as they do not leave the child exhausted from its struggle against taking medicine. They relieve teething pains, banish indigestion and constipation, break up colds and simple fevers and promote healthful, refreshing sleep. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

RED CROSS OUTPOST

The Council decided to contribute $15 a year to the Lakefield cemetery board for the upkeep of the House of Refuge lot. This was in response to the request made previously by Thomas Milburn on behalf of the Board.

W. A. Anderson Attends

While the Finance Committee was in session yesterday Wm. A. Anderson, M.P.P., a former warden and veteran member of the Council, entered the chamber and greeted with an outburst of applause. The Council resumed its session and Mr. Smithson moved, seconded by Mr. Cavanagh, that Mr. Anderson address the Council.

Peterboro County's member of the legislature congratulated Warden Middleton upon his distinction in attaining the wardenship, and expressed his regret in the illness of County treasurer Ed. M. Elliott.

Mr. Anderson said that in the election last fall none of the members and past members of the County Council had offered him serious opposition, and man after man gave him very efficient help.

Referring to the legislation of the spring session, Mr. Anderson said it was compulsory to appoint a noxious weed inspector.

"If you don't, the Government shall. Formerly it was optional. It applies to highways and private property and to both town and country. It may be of greater value to the city than to rural parts for it will require the owners of vacant lots to keep them free of weeds. It is impracticable that all farms shall be kept absolutely free of weeds. At first I think the effort will have to be worthy educational.

Forestry was probably the question that received the greatest consideration in the Legislature. Hon. Mr. Finlayson's bill is quite reasonable and workable, and had the support of every member of the House, indicating that Ontario has vast areas which the people feel should be reforested.

The Assessment Act exempts wood lots not exceeding ten acres on farms of one hundred acres, but the exemption shall not exceed twenty acres held by any property owner. The amendment requires that the woodland be protected from cattle."

Mr. Anderson said that the colonization road appropriation was less than last year. A little delving into the records showed that this amount was invariably higher in election years. This was true of the Drury government and with others that preceded it.

"However, Mr. Ferguson said that enough would be expended yet." Mr. Anderson quoted, and mention the fund for the development of Northern Ontario, amounting to seven and one-quarter millions this year. The treasury Board would not allow all this prescribed amount to be spent. In view of this information the Department might not turn down the Colonization Road townships if they pressed for as much as they got last year.

NOTED SCHOLAR PREACHES HERE

Professor Marshall To Conduct Services at Murray Street Church.

WAS INTERNED.

One of the outstanding theologians and scholars of this continent comes to Peterborough this week-end in the person of Professor Laurence Henry Marshall, the occupant of the Chair of Homiletics and Pastoral Theology at McMaster University, who is billed to preach at the morning and evening services in the Murray street church to-morrow.

Professor Marshall, who belongs to the Liberal Evangelical school of thought, leaped into the limelight immediately on his arrival in Canada two years ago when charges of heresy were hurled against him by the Fundamentalist section of the church headed by Dr. T. T. Shields, of Toronto. This charge was repeated this year at the Convention of Ontario and Quebec Baptists held in Toronto, and Professor Marshall defended himself in a wonderful speech in which he vindicated his position and affirmed his loyalty to the cardinal beliefs of the Baptists, and to the principles laid down in the trust deed of the University An exponent of the Driver view, which finds no disparity between revealed religion and the results of scientific investigation, he adopts the historical method of approach to the Bible and rejects many traditional interpretations which are out of harmony with the results of modern scientific and historical research.

In defining his stand on controversial theology Professor Marshall refuses to allow himself to be labelled as either Modernist or Fundamentalist opposing equally what he describes as "the obscurantism of Fundamentalist and the arrogance of the Modernist." On the beliefs that have long been held to be the essentials of the church, the Virgin Birth the validity of miracles, the Deity of Christ and the Atonement, he stands squarely by the attitude taken by all Evangelical churches

Not only does he accept as authentic the records of miracles of Christ in the Gospels but he also declares that there have been numerous instances in subsequent history, particularly during the Crusades,in which the evidence of miracles is thoroughly convincing. To hundreds of undergraduates he has made the Bible a fascinating book.

Professor Marshall was educated at London University, where he took the B.A. and B.D. degrees and later engaged in postgraduate study in several German universities. Before entering the ministry he engaged in school teaching, and taught French and German in high schools in England. ouring Germany in 1914, he was arrested at the outbreak of war, and was interned by the Germans.

During the fierce controversy in which he has been engaged since coming to Canada, he has retained his serenity of temper, and has at all times exhibited remarkable restraint. The charm of his personality has impressed every one with whom he has come in contact. A great orator and Scripural expositor, he is the personification of English culture at its very best.

ROSENEATH NEWS

ROSENEATH, June 25. — The Fenella Sunday School picnic to Peterborough was a decided success. Just the old-fashioned boat trip, where everybody enjoyed themselves in a social chat, while the host of kiddies never seemed to tire, but played and romped around the boat and gave amusement to the older ones. Proceeds, after expenses, were about $40.00.

The Mission Band will hold their picnic on Saturday afternoon in Mr. Brown's grove, and a good time is anticipated.

A few week-end tourists are beginning to arrive at the Turner House. The fishing season at Rice Lake for trolling for bass, pickerel, and maskinonge will open on July 1st. Quite a number of tourists have already arrived at Rice Lake, but the big influx is expected next month for the fishing.

An Ex-Buck Private Goes Back to France

Dear Mac:

This is a lazy, drowsy day, warm and soft and moist—I think the Somme area must be always moist. I heard a cuckoo today—and the merry song of a merle. Eleven years ago, in July and August, the Hun was driven out of here, and before and after a half million shells were dropped in the woods hereabouts. No human brain, except those that emerged from the struggle, can ever visualize the awfulness of those days in the woods about the hills and valleys of the Somme. The woods are much the same, in beneath their covering foliage, as they were when the war ended. Many of the evidences of the struggle have been removed, but there are fox-holes where men fought and died. There are battered and fallen trenches. There are dented tin hats, rusted rifles, hand grenades, high explosive shells, guns sunken to their recoils in mud and rubble.

Many signs along the pathways tell of the struggles that went on for these shattered woods. And at a lodge in one of them two bayonets have been set in wooden supports, horizontally, so that visitors may scrape the mud from their shoes before entering! As we used to say, going from the sub-lime to the gorl-blime!

If the purpose of these articles were anything in the nature of a tactical survey of the Somme battle, it would be absurd to treat all the principal woods of the area in a single letter, for they were scattered about the front, each had its distinctive characteristics ,and was attacked by various formations of troops at different times.

Happily, however, strategy and tactics are not my concern, though, at times, one is sorely tempted to make observations upon the mentality of the higher command. Still, generalship is supposed to be a profound mystery to mere temporary soldiers, and, since opinion which is inadequately informed leads to injustice, it is better to refrain from comment. After all, it is generally agreed, I think, that in the Somme battles at all events the credit for success was due almost entirely to local commanders, to their subordinate officers, and to the gallant men who, with small love of fighting, sprang to arms and, by their deeds, inscribed some of the most glorious chapters of British military history.

This aspect of the war as the affair of local commanders and their men is particularly emphasized when one re-visits those old woods of the Somme—Mametz, Bernafay, Trones, the Bazentins, High Wood and, most sinister of all, Delville Wood.

During those fateful months of July, August and September, 1916, the conquest of these woods depended, in many instances, upon the ability of our artillery to "wipe them off the map." So long as they retained much of their original character, they were death-traps of the worst type.

Festooned with barbed wire, manned by machine gunners, and reinforced by a few snipers in the tree tops, they were terrible places to assault. Even when the artillery had done its work thoroughly, the progress of our men was impeded by fallen trees and upturned roots, while shrapnel slashed through the remaining boughs, and bullets glanced in all directions from the upstanding trees.

WOODS OF VALOUR

IN THE BASE OF THIS TREE IN MAMETZ WOOD IS EMBEDDED AN UNEXPLODED GERMAN SHELL.

Partial capture of a wood was almost worse than complete failure, for it was well-nigh impossible to dig trenches quickly in ground interlaced with roots, and criss-crossed with fallen trees. And a counter-attack, developing before consolidation had been effected, usually meant retirement and additional loss.

Often a company or a platoon was cut off for several hours or a whole night, maintaining its position despite lack of water and shortage of ammunition, until relief came, or until the pitiless bombardment wiped them out.

Thus it was that our guns bombarded and barraged these woods with especial violence, and, when the tide of battle moved on, they were skeletons of their former selves, resembling, in some instances, nothing so much as a cribbage board with one or two pegs in it, and those leaning all awry.

Nevertheless, despite the destructive fury of massed artillery, the woodlands of the Somme have returned with astonishing vigour and completeness, and this without any attempt at re-planting. Fallen trees have, of course, been cleared away, but beyond that and salvage of a superficial kind, nothing has been done to aid the recovery of the woods.

To anyone who knew this territory as it appeared after the battle, it is fascinating to stand at a point such as Dantzig Alley Cemetery, near Mametz, and take into view a wide sweep of country. Over to the left is Fricourt Wood; to the right Mametz Wood, the largest of the woods hereabouts; while, in the middle distance, is a large copse once known as Bottom Wood, close to an old strong point of evil repute, "The Quadrangle."

At this distance the trees in Fricourt and Mametz Woods appear to have regained their full stature, but that is an illusion. Actually, there are few of them more than six or seven feet high, but they are thick, and Mametz Wood is like a great cushion of bright green, through which its long path of nearly a mile is hardly discernable because of the density of growth. Here is no trace of that torn and tangled Mametz Wood which the Welsh Division knew, in which its troops fought so valiantly for several days, and from which they returned a tired but undaunted remnant of a force.

Farther west, at Bernafay and Trones Wood, the spectacle is the same. Here I endeavoured to penetrate the woods and inspect the ground, but it is almost impossible to enter save by the rides, which are still very rough, and, in places, muddy. Elsewhere in the woods the ground is one series of hummocks whose uneven surface is disguised by the long grass and undergrowth, among which lurks tangled barbed wire, scrap iron of various kinds, and the usual debris of war.

At Trones Wood, facing the road that leads from Montauban to Guillemont, are two memorials. The first is a simple wooden cross, approached by a stretch of firm, green turf, flanked by patches of bright gorse. It is a memorial to the 53rd Infantry Brigade, to the men of the 8th Berkshires, the 11th Essex and the 7th Royal West Kents, who fell in re-taking the wood in August, 1918.

A little farther along the road is another small clearing in which stands a more imposing memorial of stone, an oeblesk erected by the 18th Division, who captured the wood after a bloody struggle. Remembering what massacre and beastliness were associated with the very name of Trones Wood in those days, it is strange now to walk up the green sward, bordered with pinks and stocks, to this memorial, and to read the inscription:

"This is my command, that ye love one another."

Words glorifying war are not to be found on these battlefield memorials. They may be well enough on statues at Hyde Park Corner, but here it would be blasphemy to engrave them, for they were not the sentiments of those gallant troops who here "poured out the rich red wine of youth." Thus the words ring in the ears, as one takes the road that leads toward Bazentin, "This is my command, that ye love one another."

There was little love at Bazentin when the British troops assaulted the Bazentin Woods, great and small, in the grey misty dawn of a July day in 1916. Happily, however, the bombardment here had done its work well, and the defenders, nerve-racked and weary, did not offer the same obstinate resistance that was encountered elsewhere, though even here was no bloodless victory. The two woods here are thick and flourishing.

Woods! Woods of valour! Eleven years after—a spider fastens another thread of his web to a leaf—the stillness of a soft summer day is broken only by the songs of a merle and the far-off call of a cuckoo. It's worth a trip back! PAUL ADAMS.

COMMISSION ENDS

lan, and that if he had submitted a return which was incomplete, it was quite unintentional. The point as to whether or not the profits on liquor sold out of Canada were taxable was open to argument.

The commission made no announcement on the point.

Inspected at Bridge.

Walter Lee Grant, collector at St. Stephen's, said that foot passengers crossing the International bridge there were 'looked over if there are any bunches of them." Automobiles were supposed to stop for examination. He told of two seizures which had been made from firms dealing in dry goods at St. Stephen. The river was narrow at St. Stephen and quite navigable at high tide. The two firms which he mentioned had been using boats for bringing the goods across the river.

"Any prosecutions in these cases?" asked counsel.

"No."

N. E. Olive ,customs broker ,of Saint John, stated that he had acted for the Canadian Distributing Company in connection with their liquor shipments. He received his instructions from A. Bronfman. He said he had nothing to do with obtaining the landing certificates for these shipments.

Mr. Calder suggested that any submissions by counsel on the question of the landing certificates for liquor shipments had better wait until the commission sits in Ottawa and A. Bromfman can be examined.

A. E. Nash, commission auditor, told the commission that the bank accounts of Thomas Cogger, of Saint John, another dealer in liquor, showed very large deposits and withdrawals.

The final witness of the sittings was James H. Hamilton, divisional appraiser at Saint John, who outlined the methods followed in the appraisal work here. He thought the work was done carefully and that the staff was adequate. Gordon Lindsay, assistant counsel, stated that the customs duty collections at St. John during the past year amounted to $4,805,000.

Mr. Calder submitted that the evidence in regard to A. J. Wheaton, of Penfield Ridge, be submitted to the Minister of Justice with a view to prosecution for smuggling. The evidence concerns the movement of drums of alcohol from the beach to Penfield Ridge, where they were loaded on cars. The commission took the matter under consideration.

CHURCH MEETINGS

FAIRMOUNT UNITED

MILLBROOK, June 25.—The Sunday school anniversay services of the Fairmount United church were successfully carried through on Sunday, June 19. Rev. D. H. McCamus, of London, Ontario, a former pastor on the Millbrook circuit, preaching inspiring sermons both morning and evening.

The altar was banked with flowers for the occasion, and the new lighting with gasoline lamps, replacing the former use of coal-oil was particularly appreciated at the evening service.

The special music at night included an anthem, "Blessed is He that Cometh", a selection, "Jesus is Mine" Miss Marie McBain taking the verses as a solo, the full choir joining in the chorus, and a duet, after the sermon, "When I Survey", by Miss McBain, and Mr. Flemming, of Peterborough.

The text was taken from John 20: 23: "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained", the thought of the supreme responsibility of the church in the world being emphasized; "No other mission can take its place, or parallel it in importance, for no other is charged wtih preparing people for eternity."

"Only God can forgive sins against God, and this should be kept in mind in all interpretations, and only God can tell when sins ought to be forgiven for He alone knows the heart. Only God can reveal to us when our sins are forgiven, and we will want to know this when we are about to go to face our Maker."

"What the church does here is ratified in Heaven and this doctrine of the unity existing between Heaven and earth is not a new doctrine, as witness the contest on Mount Carmel between Elijah and the prophets of Baal or when the atoning blood was sprinkled on the mercy-seat between the cherubim, as a sign that God accepted the sacrifice the light, the visible expression of His glory, shone even under the curtain which separated the Holy of Holies from the Holy Place."

Reviewing in considerable detail the tenets taught by certain sects that salvation is obtained through baptism, or the Lord's Supper, or that certain priests are ordained to represent Christ and have power to remit sins, the conclusion was reached "that saving grace is not inseparably attached to any ordinance, and that only God against whom we have committed sin can grant forgiveness; no priest can do it."

"The evangelical view is that of a new heart, and a right spirit in every one who truly believes, and this work will not go on without you: the church has a vital part. God's order is his Holy Spirit, a holy gospel, and a holy people as His messengers."

Dealing with the second clause of his text the minister warned against giving false assurance to any one whose life did not square with God's standard of righteousness. "Submit your life to Him and let Him determine your duties. Divine Love being the impelling power. You will never get salvation without submission — he'll save you in His own way. Members who make up the Christian church, belonging to the Body of Christ, should preserve their soul-converting power, for we've no other credential."

"Here business is transacted for Eternity" would be a good motto to be over the door of every church. Preaching, teaching, singing, I believe are done about as well, on the average, as they ever were, but are we really expecting people to give their hearts to God It's a glorious work, let us never be satisfied unless souls are being born into the Kingdom."

MUSINGS AT A MANSE WINDOW

PHILOSOPHY, according to that marvellous compound of humanity, Sam Jones, furnishes to us the rules by which we do the best possible thing, in the best possible way, at the best possible time. The man who knows just what to do, and when to do, and then how to do the best thing to be done, is a philosopher! Now, whether such a definition would be accepted in the halls of learning today, I am not prepared to say; but I have no difficulty in agreeing with him when he says that such a man would feel lonesome in a crowd! Such men are scarce and difficult to find today. Rusticus, abnormis sapiens, crassaque Minerva; a countryman, one of Nature's philosophers, with rough common sense. One who believed he knew said, "Platonem non accepit nobilem philosophia, sed fecit"; philosophy did not find Plato noble, it made him so.

ON FACING FACTS.

In speaking about facts, Sam Jones says that they are the most tremendous, far-reaching things in all the world. A fact is a very different thing from a theory. In his younger days he had his theories, and he championed his theories, and was ready to die for them. And there must have been a twinkle in his eye when he said: "Really, when I was twenty-one years of age I was very intelligent. I looked upon Daniel Webster as an idiot; and if Solomon had come along I would have put him in the asylum. But I am just getting old enough now to see what a fool I was. Why, a fellow oughtn't to be allowed to go about by himself until he is thirty years old; a WOMAN, never." A little farther on he says:

"I have reached the point in my life now where I wouldn't give one well-substantiated fact for all the theories in this world."

METHODISTS AND BAPTISTS.

In looking again at some of his sayings I have been so impressed with another passage that I yield to the temptation to give it in his own words.

He says: "I may stop long enough here to illustrate what I mean by theories and facts; for instance, in the church world, we Methodists and Baptists differ in our theories of baptism. The Methodist theory is to pour the water on the kid when it is little, and the Baptist theory is to wait 'till he is about grown, and then souse him clear under. Those are the two theories, practically stated. Let us go behind these theories and look at some facts. I know a fellow who was baptised in infancy by a Methodist preacher, and he poured the water on him. He grew up, joined the Methodist church, and he is one of the best men today that I have ever seen. I know another fellow who professed conversion after he was grown, joined the Baptist church, and the Baptist preacher immersed him. That same fellow is one of the best men who walk the American Continent.

"I know another fellow who was baptised in infancy by a Methodist preacher, who poured water on him. He grew up and joined the Methodist church, and he is in the penitentiary now, serving out his sentence. I know another fellow who professed conversion after he was grown, joined the Baptist church, and the Baptist preacher immersed him clear under; they hung him!

"I never ask a fellow what church he belongs to; I ask him, are you a good husband to your wife, a good father to your children, and a good citizen in your community; do you pay your debts, tell the truth, and live right? If he says 'Yes,' I say, 'Give me your hand.' If he says 'No,' I say, 'Fix for my foot.' I think that is the best practical settlement of the whole question."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

To me it has been most interesting to read what this plain-speaking, breezy American preacher once wrote about Christian Science. He says that it starts out with a monumental lie. It says that there is no such thing as pain. But he says: "I know that's a lie, for I have sat up all night with it. It seems that if you have the toothache, and will get the thought that you haven't got it, and will hold the thought, then you haven't got it! I suppose then that if a married man gets the thought that he has no wife and holds the thought, then he is an old bachelor? I suspect some of you wish you were. Like the fellow who said, when he first married, he just felt all the time like he wanted to eat his wife up, but he said, in about a week, 'I lost my appetite.'"

If you are a Christian Scientist that is no sign that you are not good; but your trouble is above your eyes. There is one consolation in being a Christian Scientist; if you ever get in the water over your head you need not be scared, for your head will swim all right. Just lift your handkerchief for a sail, and you will come in with the first favorable breeze.

AGREE WITH US.

Most folks like other folks to agree with them. But Sam Jones said that he never asked a crowd to agree with him; he just asked them, "Did you understand me?" He tried to make everything so plain that if a fellow didn't understand him he would be all right anyhow, because, as he said, "God has made special provision for idiots and children. You will get in with that bunch."

It was his conviction that every phase of American life seemed to have turned its back upon the great facts of God's world to chase false theories around in every phase of life.

"You step into the political world, and a man ought never to mention politics without an apology. It isn't politics now, it is just plain ticks. Just something to hang on and fill up. You may catch all your old politicians and run them into a great plate-glass place, and shut them up, and the devil will come along in the morning and peep in on them, and walk off shaking his head. He will say, 'That is ahead of anything I have got. I have nothing that will keep up with that bunch.'"

Claiming that he did not want to make the politicians mad because he couldn't fight, he said that he would not fight at all with any politician. And he illustrated his position by saying that he felt toward them as the 'possum felt toward the skunk. The 'possum said he wasn't afraid of the skunk, but he knew if he "fit" he couldn't go home to his family.

AN EDUCATED MINISTRY.

On one occasion he was speaking of affairs in the church world and he claimed that it was all agog and awry. To him the most painful fact to mind and heart was the loose grip that the church of his day had upon the God of the universe.

"We have been clamouring for fifty years for an educated ministry, and we have got it today, and the church is deader than it ever has been in its history."

THE MINISTRY WANTED.

Continuing along this same line, he said that what he wanted was a fellow with sense enough and religion enough to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ with a warm heart and an honest mind to a lost and ruined world; and he added that he had never seen a fellow in his life who was converted under a read sermon; and if he had been he wouldn't tell it. He said he would hate to admit that that he was that soft a fellow to have been converted in that way.

A WORD TO OFFICIALS.

Speaking to members of the official boards in the churches, this unconventional preacher said:

"You dear old brethren in the church, you are not doing your duty. You will pack your preacher in an icebox and cuss all the year because he don't sweat. It's too cold. I am sorry for the preachers. They are doing the best they can with the gang they've got. You dear old deacons and stewards, you just sit around there and don't give him the proper encouragement. When you wake up, and get up, the seats of your pants look like the map of the United States."

Some of those whose greatest gift is the gift of finding fault, and who, despite their orthodox head, have a heart as destitute of real Christian love as a stone is destitute of feeling, and who sometimes sing:

"Am I a soldier of the cross?"

ought to be told: You are no soldier, you are just a home guard and not worthy of the home that shelters you. You are like the soldier in the midst of the fight, who threw down his gun and ran. His colonel said, "What are you running for?" and the answer was, "Because I can't fly."

—Allan Fairbairn.

How Came Death

DEATH came through disobedience in the Garden of Eden. The penalty for sin was death, and this penalty fell upon every part of man—body, soul and spirit. The original sin brought moral death, physical death and spiritual death to every member of the human family.

A sudden blow has fallen upon this family. The father has been stricken with sudden illness and has died. The event was wholly unexpected, he was well and strong after he returned from his journey, and now he is gone A man of influence and high position, too, his death will be much felt.

While this is being talked about with sorrowful voice the message comes to the mourners that another blow has fallen and another family is bereaved.

As if these were not enough other sad messengers come in bearing the same tidings, and I observe this strange fact that while three sorrowful announcements comes from the south and as many from the north, only two come from the east and two from the west. The news spreads far and wide, and it is followed by a whetting of swords and a general preparation for a fight. The expedition starts, but it is leaderless. No wonder that it returns in confusion and defeat.

This is the 21st in the series of pen pictures of Bible history. The key to last week's picture is 2 Chron. 22 and 23.

TELL US A STORY

THERE were once in Rome two blind men; one of whom cried in the streets of the city, "He is helped whom God helps." The other, on the contrary, cried, "He is helped whom the King helps." This they did every day; and the emperor heard it so often that he caused a loaf of bread to be baked and filled with gold pieces. This loaf he sent to the blind man who appealed to his own help. When the beggar felt the heavy weight of the bread he sold it to his comrade as soon as he met him. The latter carried it home; and, when he had broken it and found the gold, he thanked God, and from that day ceased to beg. But the other continuing to beg through the city, the emperor summoned him to his presence and asked him; "What hast thou done with the loaf that I lately sent thee?" The man replied, "I sold it to my friend, because it was so heavy and did not seem well risen." Then the emperor said, "Truly he whom God helps is helped indeed," and turned the blind man from him.

ORTHODOXY is merely the poetry of the Bible petrified into prose. Poets should not be surprised if persons without imagination take their metaphors literally sometimes.

CHURCHES AND CHURCHMEN

By I. SEEWELL

Dr. Cadman.

SPEAKING before the General Synod of the Reformed Church in America, at Asbury Park, N. J., Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., advocated the sending of 40 Protestant pastors as evangelists among college and university students. In the course of his address he spoke of the students as:

"Those overfed and underworked youths who should be steered into the path of religion and the church, and who should be saved from the beliefs preached by H. L. Mencken and his ghoulish crowd."

Dr. Robert E. Speer.

IT was considered most appropriate that Dr. Robert Elliott Speer, a potent missionary and Christian statesman, should make his first formal speech as new Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States before his Foreign Mission Board, which held its 30th annual conference in Manhattan. Said he:

"All over the world today we see the breaking down of all other religions. And now it is going to be the Christian religion or no religion whatever. It is a clear issue between Christianity and agnosticism."

Dr. Machen.

ACCORDING to "Time" an invitation went to Dr. J. Gresham Machen of Princeton Theological Seminary last week offering him the presidency of the proposed Bryan Memorial University. At this moment it is not known whether the invitation will be accepted or not.

Professor Machen is a scholar of the first rank; a theologian, thoroughly conservative; a philosopher of whom the church has good reason to be proud in a day when so many philosophers are almost, if not altogether, Pagan.

Dr. Straton.

CALVARY BAPTIST CHURCH in New York City, long ministered to by Dr. Robert Stuart MacArthur, one of Canada's illustrous sons, has as its minister now the Rev. John Roach Straton, D.D., a Southerner, sometimes spoken of as "a loud-speaking Fundamentalist," and "a hard-shelled Baptist," who told his congregation:

"As one I rejoice that Lindbergh did not step out of his 'plane on the fields of France with a cigarette hanging from the southwestern segment of his lip or a liquor breath upon which the President of the French Republic might have hung his hat. . . ."

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan.

ALTHOUGH English born and very much an Englishman at heart, Dr. G. Campbell Morgan belongs to the whole Christian world where English is spoken. As it draws toward eventide he feels that he must have a less disturbed home and so has accepted the invitation of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles. He has consented to give four lectures a week for nine months of the school year, these lectures to be given on Thursday and Friday of each week, thus leaving him free from Sabbath to Wednesday for such outside conference work as may be arranged.

Dr. Morgan says: "Some of you have been my fellow-laborers in prayer for many years. I, am grateful to you for this co-operation and seek a continuance thereof, as I take up what will probably be the last stage of my work this side of the Veil. Of course, that may not be so, for it is certain that 'here we have no continuing city,' and the secret of undisturbed life is that of being ready to be disturbed at any time by the divine government."

Dr. Goss.

PERHAPS, if it were possible to see through what self-denial a genuine friendship must lead us, none would ever be formed. Few of us can tolerate the logic of love, which is, "Where thou goest, lodgest, sufferest, diest, I will be as near thee as thy shadow." To secure and bestow such friendship is to fulfil the highest function of life. Do you want such a friend? Make yourself necessary to somebody. As sure as there must be footholds or trellises or bark on trees for climbing plants and vines, there must be something in you for friendship to attach itself to.

Love can live upon itself alone, but friendship must feed on worthiness. Therefore, the way to secure a friends is to be one. "He that hath friends must show himself friendly." "A true friend is one soul in two bodies," said Aristotle.

The June Rose

THE June rose, scanned the garden fair,
And wondered if 'twere true
That others roses stayed in bloom
Most all the summer through.

She thought it was the strangest thing,
And wanted so to know
Why she should live so short a time,
When she loved living so.

A butterfly with colors gay,
Flew blithely o'er that bower;
He seemed to sip such keen delight,
Flitting from flower to flower.

He looked so happy and so gay,
The June rose hung her head;
"Me must have years and years to live,
While I've a month," she said.

"I think I'll talk to him awhile,
And find out if I may,
If he knows any reason for
The shortness of my stay."

The butterfly was poised for flight,
He really must away,
But paused a moment more to hear
What the June rose would say.

He heard the tale through to its close,
Then spread his wings to fly,
He looked the June rose in the face,
And thus he made reply:

"Why spend the time a-mourning?
The sun is in the sky!
By weeks you count your life, you say?—
Short hours I count mine by."

"But what's the use of sorrowing?
The world has had its share;
If time is short, let's up and do,
And leave some sunshine there.

"If I have but a few short hours,
I'll live those hours so well,
That drooping ones along the way
May feel their joyous spell.

"My life shall speak of sunny plains,
Of places wide and fair;
I'll gather some say, weary ones,
Into my garden there.

"I'll whisper courage in their ear,
I'll speak of love so true,
That pain and gloom shall drop away
And only joy shine through."

So spake the joyous butterfly
As he spread his wing for flight;
The June rose raised her head and said,
"I think—perhaps—you're right."

Slow of Heart

I had rather be slow of wit than of heart. Some people do not comprehend an argument until the question is a dead issue. Some do not see a joke until others have had their laugh and forgotten it. Sorry for them? Of course! But it's not a thousandth part as bad as to have a small-moving heart, slow to respond to love, slow to perceive goodness, slow to accept the divine. Some people's sympathies move like molasses. I like to see them explode like powder. I like to see them catch hold of evidences of God's love and goodness just as burrs seize upon sheep's wool.

Harmony and Discord

CHRIST is the predestined point of unity in which earth and heaven, Jew and Gentile, meet and are one. Christ's death is the triumph of peace in the spiritual world. Peace with God is secured through the taking away of the law of condemnation by the dying Christ, who nails it to His cross and openly triumphs over the powers of darkness. Peace among men is secured because the cross is the centre of the regenerated world, as of the moral universe. Divided races, religions, nationalities, classes, meet beneath the cross; they embrace as brethren; they are fused into one vast society which is held together by an indwelling presence, reflected in the general sense of boundless indebtedness to a transcendent love.

—Liddon.

The broad-minded see the truth in different religions; the narrow-minded see only their differences.

In a Big Cheese

IF a small mite in a big cheese could tell
Why you devour it to digest your dinner,
Then you might know why evil comes pell-mell
On you and me and many a hopeless sinner.
Meanwhile one thing, poor mite, I see: this world,
So grandly schemed, and jointed so compactly,
Through boundless fields of starry spaces whirled,
Not for pleasure or for mine exactly;
And deem, if I with cheese not crown my dinner,
Some lively mite may somewhere be a winner.

A Voice Out of Past

ONLY give thyself utterly to Christ—this is the greatest and most important thing. Place all at His disposal. If thou possess Him, He will surely teach thee what thou shouldest do and what thou shouldest give up. He will teach thee to speak for Him; He will give thee courage and wisdom as to how thou shouldest behave. Be not anxious as to thy dealings with others, but commit it all to Him. He will assuredly work within thee that which is well-pleasing in His sight.

Just Think Of It

MODESTY, in so far as it prevents a man from bringing to the front the best that is in him, whether as a matter of self-culture, or for the profit of society, is only an amiable form of cowardice. To be afraid to show what you are, and to do what you can, may look pretty enough when contrasted with forward conceit; but to cheat yourself and the world of its natural due, certainly can in no proper use of language be called a virtue.

Capital is often wasted for long on hopeless enterprises. The prospect of success is held out, and good money follows bad till the coffers are emptied. Unless a paper shows sign of promise and growth within six months after its start, it is as a rule hopeless to carry it on. —W. R. N.

A few people fail because they are too busy; in other words, because they try to do too much.

Three Outstanding Themes

THE NEW TESTAMENT has three outstanding themes:

1. The coming of the promised Messiah to Bethlehem, His work and return to the Father.
2. The descent of the Holy Spirit to take out from among the nations a people for His name and form the church.
3. And the return of Christ to establish His kingdom among men according to prophecy.

It may be true that a touch of indifference is the safest foundation on which to build a lasting and delicate friendship.

It is always pleasant to meet with a contented man, if he is not too anxious to give his reasons for contentment.

WATER SPORTS.

The interest that is being taken in water sports as a result of the practicing being done in preparation for the programme on Dominion Day morning is most gratifying.

There is no reason why, with Little Lake and the Otonabee so accessible, that this interest should not be maintained and even increased.

We are just beginning to appreciate what nature has done for us right at our doors.

Little Lake within the city limits, could be much more widely used for water sports than has been the case for many years.

In fact many Peterborough visitors express wonder that local people should go to some other water resort for their holiday. "You're living in a summer resort", is a remark frequently heard.

The Diamond Jubilee has given an impetus to aquatics that should have permanent results and perhaps lead to the organization of a local canoe and aquatic club to foster various branches of water sports.

We make the best boats of their kind in the world here; why not learn to use them ourselves.

THE DECORATIONS.

The Examiner has said a good deal about the decorations for the Diamond Jubilee for the reason that nothing imparts such a gala spirit to an occasion of this kind as the sight of flags and bunting displayed everywhere.

So far as down-town Peterborough is concerned the arrangements are complete and jubilee arches, decorated stores and coloured lights will make a wonderful spectacle.

But the decorations should not stop there.

Every street in Peterborough should be a mass of flags; every house should display the Union Jack or the Canadian ensign.

Such a celebration as this has been awaited for sixty years; there will not be another until 1967 when the centenary of the Dominion will be observed and the youths of today will be venerable citizens who will be interviewed by The Examiner of forty years hence upon there recollections of the Diamond Jubilee.

Let us make it worthy of the occasion and the country.

It is well worth while doing right.

THE DIAMOND JUBILEE.

There is no doubt of the fact that Peterborough people are going to remain at home for the Diamond Jubilee.

Usually Dominion Day is marked by an exodus of large proportions, but this year citizens not only feel that it is their duty as loyal Canadians to help celebrate Canada's sixtieth birthday but that the programme arranged here is not likely to be surpassed elsewhere.

The result is that the vast majority of local residents will be here for the jubilee, and their numbers will be augmented by many visitors from all parts of the district who are coming to Peterborough for at least one day of the celebration.

The jubilee committees have the details well in hand, and every feature of the programme promises to be of great interest.

Nothing as ambitious as the jubilee parade has been attempted here before, the historic pageant depicting many events in Canada's history is a novelty so far as Peterborough is concerned, the decoration of the streets will be carried out on a larger scale than ever before seen here, and altogether Peterborough's Diamond Jubilee promises to be a most spectacular and impressive demonstration.

IT WOULD MEAN SOMETHING THEN.

If there is any considerable volume of opposition to the proposal that as a permanent remembrance of the linking up of the Provinces of Canada into a Dominion the name of Central Park shall be changed to "Confederation Square," it is not making itself heard.

On the other hand, many citizens have expressed themselves to The Examiner as heartily approving the change, and as hoping that the City Council at its next meeting will see fit to adopt the proposal.

The National Committee is anxious that as a result of the Diamond Jubilee every municipality in Canada will do something to keep Confederation before its people, and has suggested what is being advocated here by Ald. J. M. Greene, that some park or square be named "Confederation."

As has been already pointed out, there is no reason, sentimental or otherwise, for clinging to the name "Central Park," which does not stand for anything in particular.

So far as the adoption of "Confederation Square" by the people is concerned The Examiner will undertake to do everything in its power to see that the new title is used should the Council see fit to make the change.

A NEIGHBORLY OPINION.

As Canada celebrates her jubilee of Confederation (1867-1927) this spring and summer, it is not mere material achievements to which she can most proudly invite the world's attention. To be sure, these achievements are impressive. Her sixtieth birthday finds the Dominion able to boast of a population of 10,000,000; a foreign trade of almost two and a half billions; or less unemployment than for many years; of an operating profit by her national railways; of a reduction of budgets and taxation that equals our own post-war record. But wealth and prosperity are natural in a country of vast resources and energetic population. We have them too. But we have some possessions and assets which our North American sister is justified in holding up before envious eyes.

Our "little" neighbor, as we condescendingly think of her, presents certain object lessons of ingrained orderliness, tolerance and government common sense which we might well heed. Americans are prone, whenever observers point to some glaring defect of our national life, to say: "Oh, that is a heritage of the lawless, individualistic frontier"; or, "Oh, that is because our population is heterogeneous and ill-fused"; or, "Oh, that is natural in a young, fast-growing country." But Canada is more a land of the frontier than the United States; its population is as varied and the proportion of British stock is just about the same—55 per cent.; while it is as young and as fast-growing as we. Whereas we are lawless, Canadians have a record for law observance that approaches England's or Scandinavia's. Whereas we have grave and almost constant public corruption, Canada has little. Whereas our religious and racial intolerance takes violent forms, in Canada it is but moderately felt.

Canada has crime, but it is not the crime of the United States. The homicide rate for this country between 1911 and 1921 was 7.2 per 100,000 population; that of Ontario and Quebec for the same period was 0.5. The Canadian courts are as efficient as England's, and murder is swiftly punished, yet the death sentences for the whole Dominion average only twenty-five a year. Canada has her political scandals. But such epidemics of Federal corruption as the United States has endured twice in sixty years, in the Grant and Harding administrations, are unknown in Canadian history. Municipal inefficiency is met across the border, but very seldom municipal boodlery. While religious and racial tolerance in Canada leaves something to be desired, as the recurrent bilingual controversy shows, it is manifestly far better established than with us. Canada did not hesitate to intrust her government to the Catholic Sir Wilfrid Laurier for fifteen years, a longer continuous term than any other Prime Minister has served. Such an organization as the Ku Klux can gain no foothold on Canadian soil; such American institutions as the race riot and the lynching bee cannot exist in the Canadian atmosphere.

Finally, Canada presents a broad object lesson to her neighbor in a different kind of tolerance—the tolerance which avoids mass hysteria and the tyranny of a temporary majority. It would be hard to point to a more striking contrast between the right and wrong methods of democracy than is presented by the Canadian and American treatment of prohibition. In the United States all local and state liberty upon the question is dead. Communities of many millions are in open rebellion against the law; in whole sections the majority would like to repeal it; and yet the great and supposedly intelligent American democracy has locked itself into a straitjacket. A tiny minority can hold the key and keep us locked there for decades. In Canada full freedom for experiment remains. Each Province can adjust the law to its own needs and tastes, and the last few years have shown a wise progress in the search for the most efficient controls.

Americans are seldom accused of a lack of self-complacency. It is well to be reminded that just across an imaginary line to the north lies a people of the same speech, the same traditions, the same conditions of life, who do rather better with some of their national problems than we do.—The N. Y. World.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Don't forget your decorations for the Diamond Jubilee. There should be at least a flag for every house.

Canadians have been lax in the observance of the birthday of the Dominion, but the Diamond Jubilee in its scope and enthusiasm will atone for the neglect of the past.

Every child in Peterborough who has not yet learned to swim should take advantage of the expert instruction supplied by the Rotary Club.

Motorists are asked to remember that George street between Smith street and King street will be closed to traffic for the jubilee parade.

The Examiner's Diamond Jubilee number will be full of interesting features. Watch for it on Wednesday.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, June 25. — Trading at the Union Stock Yards during the week has been slow, there having been received about 6,000 head of cattle, most of which were grass fed, a high percentage of these lacking finish.

Choice light butchers' steers had the preference at from $8.75 to $9.00 with a few stall-fed at $9.25. Choice light heifers sold at from $8.50 to $8.75, with an odd one at $9.00.

Heavy cattle sold at from $8.50 to $9.25; medium killing cattle, $8.00 to $8.25, with common $7.50 to $7.75. A price of $9.25 was obtained for a few stall-fed steers weighing around 1,100 pounds. Baby beeves which were plentiful, but many unfinished, sold at from $10.50 to $11.00 for choice; with fancy grade at $11.50, good at from $9.00 to $10.00, and medium at from $7.00 to $8.00.

Cows were plentiful, the choice selling at from $6.75 to $8.00; good $5.50 to $6.25; medium to common from $4.25 to $5.00.

Choice butchers' bulls sold from $5.50 to $6.00, with an odd one higher; good $5.00 to $5.25;, heavy, $4.75 to $5.00. Bologna bulls sold more readily than any other class of bulls. The heavy bulls were very difficult to dispose of, they apparently not being wanted by the abattoirs.

The sale of springers and milkers was slow at from $90.00 to $110.00, a few fancy bringing up to $122.00. Good brought from $70.00 to $85.00, while common appeared not to be wanted. There apparently is no demand for milkers at present.

Ten cars of stockers and feeders were received from the West during the week. The steers were of rather inferior quality, some of them being still unsold. One load brought a price of $7.10 ,while another brought $6.75. A carload of fine heifers sold at 7 cents delivered.

Calves met with good trading all week, the receipts being 2,487 head. The choice sold at from 11c to 11½c, fancy 12c, good 9c to 10c, medium 6c to 8c, and grassers at from 3¼c to 4c.

On Wednesday the price for choice spring lambs advanced from 17c to 17½c.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, June 25 (Canadian Press).—The export trade in Canadian grain here yesterday was again very slow with little or no demand from the United Kingdom or the Continent.

The domestic trade in cash grain was also quiet, the demand being principally for odd cars to meet immediate wants. The tone of the market for corn was weaker and prices were reduced 1½c per bushel. Car lots of American Sample corn were quoted at $1.03 and Argentine corn at $1.02 per bushel, ex-store. Oats were steady.

A moderate amount of business was done in Spring and winter wheat grades of flour and values were firm.

Prices for all lines of millfeed were well maintained under a quiet demand. The market for standard grades of rolled oats was quiet and steady.

The total exports of baled hay from the Port of Montreal for the week to date were 2,046 bales of which 722 bales went to Liverpool, 752 to Manchester, and 572 bales to Avonmouth. The market yesterday was quiet and prices were unchanged.

The undertone to the potato situation continued easy owing to the limited demand and the large supplies available. Car lots of Quebec White B old stock were quoted at $1.65 to $1.75 per bag, and Reds at $1.40 to $1.50 per bag of 90 pounds in bulk, ex-track.

The trade in butter was extremely dull but prices were unchanged. The receipts were 4,855 packages.

The tone of the spot market for cheese was again easier. This was attributed to the limited demand from all sources. The receipts were 9,557 boxes.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

CHICAGO, June 25 (Canadian Press)—With material immediate increase of the movement of new crop domestic wheat to market looked for, wheat prices yesterday swung lower. Augmented receipts of corn were also expected. Closing quotations on wheat were unsettled at ½c to 1c net decline; corn 1⅝c to 2c down; oats ¾ to 1⅝c off, and provisions unchanged to a setback of 12 cents.

In view of excellent weather conditions prevailing, estimates were current yesterday that Kansas wheat prospects pointed to a 1927 yield of 125,000,000 to 140,000,000 bushels, with Oklahoma totalling 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 bushels and Nebraska 70,000,000 bushels.

Rising temperatures over most of the corn belt had a decided bearish effect on corn and oats. Toward the last, though, corn rallies took place in sympathy with wheat.

Provisions were inclined to sag owing chiefly to weakness of corn.

CHICAGO, June 25 (Canadian Press).—Cattle 3,000; meagre weekend supply; fed steers steady to easy, largely catch-as-catch-can trade on all clashes; grass cows and heifers mostly 10c under week earlier; bulls off similar amount; vealers unchanged; no strictly choice fed steers here; best $12, averageing 1,170; yearlings $11.90; bulk steers $10.50 to $11.25; common grass Texas $8.20; vealers $10.75 to $11.50; few $12.

Hogs, 25,000; early market, especially on better grade hogs, strong to 10c higher; light weights showing most advance and sold largely before late break; closing trade weak to 10c lower than Thursday's average; spots off more; all classes of hogs excepting best kind scaling under 200 pounds sharing the late decline; top $9.35; most butchers 210 to 250 pounds $8.75 to $9.10; estimated holdover 9,000.

Sheep 6,000; fat lambs mostly 25c lower than Thursday; spots off more; top and bulk Idaho lambs $14.75; bulk good natives $14 to $14.25; fed natives $14.60; medium kind down to $13.00 and below.

Demand $4.85⅝; cables $4.86 5-16.

C.N.R. EARNINGS

MONTREAL, June 25 (Canadian Press).—The gross earnings of the Canadian National Railways for the weeks ended June 21, 1927, were $5,231,630.00 as compared with $5,404,569.44 for the same week of 1926, a decrease of $172,934.44 or three per cent.

A Thought For To-day

A prudent man covereth shame.—Proverbs xiii:16.

Where shame is, there is also fear. —Milton.

Ontario leads in Practice of Road-building Science

Don't apologise for Ontario roads. The day is past when they do not compare with those of any other Province or State.

Road-building to carry modern traffic is a new science. It has been developed by practical effort, and in this development Ontario has taken a leading part.

In addition to the intelligent study and experimentation of the Highway Department engineers, a host of county engineers have devoted themselves not only to following the best practices in road-building but to perfecting new methods and practices and letting fellow-engineers know of them.

It was in Ontario that the practice of putting on gravel or crushed stone in thin layers was first proven to be more economical as well as more safe to traffic. "Feeding the road" it is called. The practice has spread beyond Canada and now is followed in many of the United States.

Ontario Highway Department engineers developed the asphaltic mixed macadam which is a hot asphalt mixed with gravel or crushed stone. In ten minutes after being laid it is hard enough for traffic. Detours are not necessary while this construction is being put down. It is safe to predict that other Provinces and countries will avail themselves of this discovery at an early date.

It's Motor-picnic weather now

Do you know any better outing for your family than a motor-picnic? Is there anything more enjoyable or health-giving than a day or a half day in the country, by stream or lake or in some cool and shady wood?

The automobile keeps the family together. The motor-picnic furnishes enjoyment for all.

Not far from where you live are beautiful nature-spots. Perhaps you will have to go off the main highway to find them. It's worth while following some unfrequented road that leads to placid lake or limpid stream.

Highways have been made safe

You can help to keep them safe

In building the highways every consideration has been given to the safety of those who use them.

The greatest factor for safety now lies in automobile drivers themselves. When you go on the road, see that your brakes, lights, and steering gear are in good condition.

When you are on the road, practice caution at spots where danger may arise. Watch the warning signs for cross roads, railroads or other danger. Be careful in villages or where pedestrians are using the road. Be courteous in traffic.

The increased speed limit does not lessen one degree the responsibility of the driver for caution and courtesy on the road.

A large gathering of more than usual interest took place on Thursday afternoon in Wesley Hall, St. James' United Church, when the Women's Missionary Society, the Ladies' Aid Society and the mothers of the Junior congregation were "at home" to their pastor, Rev J. R. Richardson and Mrs. Richardson. The meeting opened with Mrs. A. Wilson, president of the Ladies' Aid Society, in the chair, prayer being offered by Mrs. Buckler. A delightful program arranged by Mesdames Fry and Elliott, included vocal solos by Mrs. T. E. Curvin and Mrs. E. Kitney; piano numbers by Mrs. Percy Dallin, and violin selections by Mrs. Gilchrist. Accompanists were Mrs. Dallin, Miss Ada Davey and Miss Eileen Rose. The raison d'etre of the gathering was to bid farewell to Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, who leave soon for their new home in Port Credit, to express appreciation of their services during their four years' tenure of office here and regret over their departure. Mrs. Buckler, representing the W.M.S., read a touching, appreciative address, and Mrs. John Sanderson, Senior, presented Mrs. Richardson with a Life Membership pin in the W.M.S. and a lovely bouquet of pink roses was also presented on behalf of the society, by little Margaret Fairbrother. The mothers of the Junior congregation, represented by Mesdames English and Swanger, presented their gifts, a handsome silver sandwich tray and a pair of lovely candlesticks. The Ladies' Aid Society presented a lovely silver flower basket, Mrs. Stokes proffering the gift, with an accompanying address read by Mrs. Elliott, secretary of the society. Mrs. Richardson responded in her usual pleasing manner, thanking the three different organizations for their gifts and good wishes, Mrs. F. Pratt, general convenor, and her able committee, took charge of the social hour which followed. The tea tables were charmingly arranged with white flowers, Cluny lace and white candles in silver holders. Tea was poured by Mrs. G. Rowe, first vice president of the W.M.S., and Mrs. F. Pratt, first vice president of the Ladies' Aid Society, and ices were cut by Mrs. J. Fairbrother and Mrs. Stokes. Those receiving the guests were Mrs. A. Wilson, Mrs. Frank Kitney and Mrs. George Rowe. Rev. Mr. Richardson brought the meeting to a close with a few well chosen remarks, thanking the ladies for the kindly thought which had prompted the arrangement and successful carrying out of such a pleasant afternoon.

HOROSCOPE

The Stars Incline, but do not Compel.

"The stars incline, but do not compel."

Sunday, June 26, 1927.

(Copyright, 1927, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate).

Astrologers warn that this is another uncertain day in planetary direction making for contradictory impulses and unwise action.

Women are subject to a guidance making for ambition in the financial world, but they should be cautious.

Under this planetary government there may be an inclination on the part of women to mix romance with business, a dangerous policy, the seers warn.

Although this is a sway under which there will be much love-making it is not favorable to happiness.

Sudden quarrels and unreasonable demands may be expected between men and women while this configuration prevails.

Agriculture is subject to fortunate influences of the stars, it is forecast, and severe storms may be expected in many parts of the country.

There is a fairly good sign for philanthropy and church should find the collection-plate well filled.

Ministers and leaders of thought are well directed to-day, which may cause much serious thought on the part of persons who ponder the meaning of world news.

Spiritual perception may be keen to-day, which should encourage introspection and a tendency to probe human motives.

Great institutions that will be the centres for the administration of wise charity are to be built, it is prognosticated.

Astrologers forecast a war against crime and disease, which will enlist the greatest army of reform that has ever been organized.

The seers declare that, no matter how discouraging appearances may be, the world is becoming better, a fact that will be recognized this year.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of a memorable year that brings decided changes.

Children born on this day may have a long pull toward fame and success, but they will probably win great rewards.

Monday, June 27 1927.

Astrologers read this as a day favorable to most of the important activities on the planet Earth.

It is a day in which to turn attention to one's financial affairs, paying debts and making plans for the wise administration of the family income.

The stars favor advertising and publicity of every sort and predict satisfactory returns.

Newspapers and magazines are to profit greatly all through the summer it is foretold, for matters of supreme interest will be discussed in the public prints.

Under this planetary government all constructive enterprises should be pushed for the energies will be stimulated and the judgment stabilized, astrologers predict.

This is read as an auspicious rule for obtaining money for business projects. Promoters should benefit.

As the new era is now well started impetus to immense undertakings of every sort will be strong, and the summer will be marked by building projects that include public edifices, bridges and highways that will be more costly than any hitherto completed.

Athletics to-day are especially well directed by the stars, which presage a record season for baseball.

Women are to make progress in all forms of sports and to win fame next month, it is foretold.

Gambling will be more prevalent this summer than it has been, the seers foretell. The worship of the God of Chance will be manifested in wild speculations as well as in games it is predicted.

A new book written by a British author is to create a sensation in America, the astrologers prognosticate.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of a quiet uneventful year of happiness.

Children born on this day probably will succeed in an intellectual pursuit. Many teachers and lecturers are born under this sign.

SAINT and SINNER

Cherry had left the house at three o'clock that afternoon, a particularly mild and springlike day in April, bound for the shopping district, according to her casual announcement to Faith. Cherry had taken no interest as yet in shopping for a layette for the baby that was expected in August, and Faith had had a throb of hope that Cherry would come home with her arms full of fascinating parcels.

It was still incredible to her that childish, tiny Cherry, was to be a mother, and Cherry's own attitude toward the approaching event was such that Faith hardly dared mention it to her. She longed to talk with Cherry about it, frankly, wonderingly; to know how Cherry felt in her mind and heart about the child that was to be hers—hers so strangely and completely, since she had elected to thrust its father out of her life.

Faith wondered, too, how Cherry felt now about Chris Wiley, her husband of a day, her co-defendant in a murder trial. She wondered, knowing how her own heart leaped at the mere mention of Bob's name, how Cherry could have loved Chris so utterly and then lost her love so completely. Was there still a trace of the old fascination, a memory of the old thrill, to tug at her nerves and to bring the tears to her eyes which Faith so often surprised in them?

And so Faith waited for Cherry's return with shy hopefulness that Saturday afternoon. She was eager to get to sewing on the baby things. Her fingers ached to be setting tiny stitches in mist-sheer batiste and in cream-white flannel soft enough and warm enough for tender new flesh. Secretly, as if it were for a child of her own—oh, heart-stopping thought!—she was already knitting a downy, fleecy little white nightingale on which she would embroider tiny blue forget-me-nots. It was odd how she felt that the baby was to be hers, rather than Cherry's—

"Where is Cherry?" Bob asked as they sat down to dinner that evening.

"She said she was going shopping," Faith worried. "I suppose she has let the time slip away without realizing it is so late."

An appetizing plate of dinner was set in the warming oven for the absent girl, and Mrs. Lundy whirled through her work in the kitchen, then came scowling into the living room for a last word with Faith before leaving for the evening

"I've made her a custard. It's in the ice box. She'll need it to keep up her strength. Traipsing all over town, wearing herself out!" she added in a grumbling voice that illy concealed her anxiety.

Faith and Bob sat hand in hand throughout the evening, making a pretense of casual, carefree talk, but their ears were strained for the ringing of the telephone or the sound of the key in the lock of the big, oak-beamed front door.

"Oh, Lord, I can't stand this!" Bob jumped to his feet at last and went charging up and down the living room in great, angry strides. "Where the devil do you suppose she is?"

They waited, tight with suspense, miserable, looking at each other with fearful eyes that glanced quickly away. And then, at last, at half past twelve it was, there was the sound of a car stopping at the curb, followed by the high, sweet music of Cherry's laughter.

PROTEST ENTERED AGAINST SPEECH

Grand Lodge Ladies Not in Agreement With Statements of Miss MacPhail.

ST. JOHN, N.B., June 25. — A resolution of protest against the statements of Miss Agnes MacPhail, M.P., for Southeast Grey, in reply to the speech of Hon. Dr. Edwards, M. P., Grand Master and Sovereign of the Grand Lodge of British North America, in the House of Commons, was passed by the Grand Lodge Ladies' Orange Benevolent Association, British North America at the closing of its annual session last night.

The resolution set forth that as loyal women of the British America members of Grand Lodge maintained that Miss MacPhail did not, as she had claimed, represent the women of Canada in statements contained in her letters which she sent to the school children of Southeast Grey.

Mrs. Stewart Adrian, Craik, Saskatchewan, was elected Grand Mistress.

The next annual meeting will be held in Edmonton.

Mrs. J. Foley, of Smiths Falls, was chosen Grand Deputy Secretary; and Miss Linda Clark, Cornwall, Grand Deputy Treasurer.

Fort Worth, Texas, is to have a municipal band composed entirely of women musicians.

NORDHEIMER FIRM JOINS HEINTZMAN'S

Piano Manufacturers' Merger Becomes Effective tAfter End of Year.

TORONTO, June 25. — By an agreement through the negotiations of J. F. MacKay, financial agent, 38 King Street West, the firm of Nordheimer Piano and Music Company, Limited, will on Jan. 1 next be merged into the firm of Heintzman & Company, Limited.

These firms are among the oldest and most highly respected business houses in Canada, the former having been founded by Abraham and Samuel Nordheimer in the year 1840, and the latter founded by Theodore A. Heintzman in the year 1850.

The consolidation has been made possible largely through the desire of Albert Nordheimer, President of the Nordheimer Piano and Music Company, Limited, to have more leisure during the remaining years of his life, and the further fact that Mr. Nordheimer's only son and logical successor, Major Victor Nordheimer, was killed in the Great War.

The two businesses will be conducted under their present management, and entirely separate until the date mentioned, after which time both of the enterprises will be carried on by Heintzman & Company, Limited, 195 Yonge street.

The Nordheimer Company, in addition to the manufacture of pianos, has developed a sheet music department, which will be carried on by Heintzman & Company, Limited, after Jan. 1.

The instruments manufactured by the two firms mnetioned have enjoyed more than a national reputation, and it was partly due to the high standing enjoyed by the products of both companies that the present union of interests has been made possible.

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

Brown, beige, black and gray are the favorite colors for handbags in Paris, where, it has been observed, really well-dressed women do not carry very conspicuous handbags. There is something rather trite about the ensemble that combines a purple umbrella, a purple felt hat and a purple leather handbag. Last year there were thousands of such assemblings.

It is very much the fashion now—especially for street wear—to affect the monotone in colors. You wear a beige or gray frock with matching stockings and your accessories are all beige or gray. If you wear some color note in your gray or brown or beige or black costume it is better to let the bright color appear in belt, boutonniere, bandings on the frock or suit, and to have a handbag that matches the more subdued tone of your costume. Lizard, ostrich, crocodile, snakeskin, sharkskin, alligator, reindeer, and other "exotic" leathers are sometimes dyed in green, blue, red and other colors, but the well-dressed woman is inclined to prefer the natural tones of these rare skins, and she chooses the one that tones in best with the neutral tone of her own costume.

There seems to be a growing interest in black handbags and antelope dyed black is extremely smart. One must add, however, that the black purse must be of extremely good quality to look right. Natural-color pigskin is an old-time favorite that is in very good repute at the present time.

There are black and white handbags and purses to appeal to the woman who wears a black and white ensemble. There is nothing really wrong about them—but the all-black handbag really carries more distinction in the magpie ensemble than the black bag with white pipings, or the bag of striking black and white calfskin.

White bags to be carried with the all-white ensemble are to be had in some of the shops, and these are not so impracticable as they might seem when made of a fairly substantial sort of leather of a washable sort. One doesn't actually wash one of these bags, but when spots and marks appear they may be removed by rubbing with a soft, damp cloth.

WOMEN HOLD RALLY MEETING

TWO SESSIONS.

There was an attendance of over one hundred ladies at the Rally of the Peterborough section of Lindsay Presbyterial of the Women's Missionary Society of the United church of Canada, held at Mark street United church yesterday with morning and afternoon sessions. Routine business and discussion occupied the attention of the members, with Mrs. A. F. Bookhout presiding at both sessions. A dainty luncheon was served at noon by the ladies of Mark street church Auxiliary.

The morning session opened with a Bible reading by Mrs. J. Fairbrother, followed by prayer offered by Mrs. G. Rowe. Reports and their discussion followed. These were presented by various branches, and included 15 Auxiliaries, 3 Circles, 3 Y.W.A's, 5 Mission Bands and 1 C.G.I.T. group. The combined total of funds collected in this section amounted to nearly $7,000 during the past year, in addition to several large bales and much clothing sent to the foreign mission fields. The discussion brought forth many good plans for raising money.

Part One of the Conference Branch meeting held recently in Pembroke was given at the morning session by Mrs. William Watt, and Part Two during the afternoon meeting, by Mrs. W. H. Morton. Both ladies presented comprehensive reviews of the subjects under discussion at the Branch meeting, and reported that the Lindsay Presbyterial W.M.S. stood highest in Circles and Y.W.A's, and was among the highest in the district in every way.

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session opened with a Bible reading by Mrs. J. K. Moore and prayer offered by Mrs. John Sargent of Westwood.

A brief address was given by the president of Lindsay Presbyterial W.M.S., Mrs. R. G. Lawlor, B.A., of Norwood, and a very interesting and illuminating discourse on China and conditions there was given by Miss McIntosh, who had just completed twenty-one years of service as a missionary in that country.

Mrs. Lawlor reported that she had attended five sectional meeting during the past week, and Peterborough had the best.

Miss McIntosh spoke of the life in China and of the customs of the women. She referred to the many changes noticeable in this great land since the first Presbyterian mission entered Honan, and the natives said of the Christians of that time, "If they come, they must come on their knees."

Christianity has not been a failure in China, said Miss McIntosh, speaking of the energy of the Chinese converts who were at present carrying on the work started in the missions. To those who entered China to work, the advice was given that they possess no sense of humor and no sense of smell, as either would be a drawback in their work.

A vocal solo by Mrs. Jackson of the Female Voice Choir, with accompaniment by Mrs. Matchett, was much enjoyed during the afternoon session.

Little Movement Marks Quiet Toronto Exchange

TORONTO, June 25.— (Canadian Press.)—Little movement marked today's quiet proceedings on the Toronto stock exchange. Hiram Walker and International Nickel made slight advances on their recoveries of yesterday, Walker improving a half at 48½ and Nickel a quarter at 61½. Brewery stocks firmed. Gooderham and Worts gained one at 53, Carling one at 25 and Seagram half at 21½. Brazilian eased seven-eighths at 158. Dominion Store on one sale was marked up two at 77.

Amulet Closes 14 Cents Higher Than Yesterday

TORONTO, June 25.— (Canadian Press.)— Amulet displaying impressive strength, was feature of to-day's proceedings on the standard mining exchange. It climbed to 255 and closed at 253, fourteen cents higher than yesterday, on turnover of nearly one thousand shares. Elsewhere in the list trading was quiet and the price changes small. Tough Oakes advanced 3½ at 40 and Argonaut firmed fractionally at 26. Hollinger firmed 10 at 18.80. Laval Que., firmed a quarter at 23¾ and Duprat was steady at 87 1-8.

High and Low Records Set In New York Stock Market

NEW YORK, June 25 (Canadian Press).—Stock Market failed to develop any pronounced trend in today's market establishment of several new high records in railroad equipments and specialties being offset by new lows in coppers and oils. Western Pacific, Western Maryland, Chicago and Eastern Illinois Preferred, Norfolk and Southern and Kansas City Southern were all bought at advancing prices. Weakness of copper and oil shares reflected unsatisfactory trade conditions. General Asphalt Preferred broke 6 points, Common 2½ and Green Cananae Copper 3. The closing was irregular.

Grain Prices Slide Early Following Warm Weather

CHICAGO, June 25 (Canadian Press).—Grain prices all took an early slide downward today impelled by warmth and sunshine. Reports at hand said wheat harvesting conditions could not well be better and that high temperatures were promoting growth of corn. Opening ⅛ cent to 1¼ cent lower, wheat underwent some further decline. Corn started ½c to 1½c off and later showed an additional drop. Oats were weak. Provisions also tended to sag.

CARBONATED DRINKS ARE OF FOOD VALUE

Supply Nourishment and Energy to the Human Body.

Carbonated beverages are the drink of a physically active, mentally alert people because they supply nourishment and energy to the body which is so necessary for quick and accurate thinking. The sugar they contain gives them a food value exceeding many other articles of diet in common use. They are held in highest esteem because of these properties by foremost scientists and health authorities.

The first carbonated beverage was produced by a Mr. Townsend Speakman, a Philadelphia druggist. Mr. Speakman, at the request of a then prominent Philadelphia physician, undertook to invent apparatus to produce carbonated water. This physician, a Dr. Physick, had become interested in the medicinal possibilities of carbonated water because of experiments commenced by Joseph Priestly, the famous English scientist, in 1772, and desired to prescribe it for one of his patients.

Mr. Speakman succeeded in producing carbonated water and Dr. Physick prescribed its liberal use to his patient. The result was so satisfactory that Dr. Physick recommended carbonated water to many of his patients and friends. Soon many people were visiting Speakman's shop daily for a glass or two, of carbonated water.

Speakman, being a canny business man as well as an inventive genius, realized that if the new drink were made more palatable the demand for it would increase, and he hit upon the happy idea of flavoring it with fruit juices. Thus was born the carbonated beverage as we know it today, sold in bottles and at soda fountains.

Miss Vera Kendrick, Chief Dietician, Springfield, Mass., Hospital, says—"Carbonated beverages have come to be part of the daily diet of patients in many hospitals. Dieticians are recommending these beverages because of the aid the carbonic gas they contain gives to digestion, and the ease with which invert sugar, their food property, can be assimilated....It has been proven that carbonated beverages are not merely 'sweetened water' but a food product having more calories than many foods in common use; and that the gas which puts the bubble in it is not harmful, but very beneficial to the health."

Recently carbonated beverages were the subject of an investigation by the Mellon Institute of Industrial Research, University of Pittsburgh. This investigation was carried out by J. R. Donald and A. R. McLean of J. T. Donald & Co., Ltd., well known analysts of Montreal, and C. L. Jones, Industrial Fellow of the Institute. Their report concludes as follows—"from the standpoint of the individual consumer, especially when one is in a strange vicinity with a doubtful or admittedly dangerous water supply, the chances of immunity from disease are much better if one drinks only highly carbonated beverages.

The tables were set in the basement and were laden down with varieties of salads, cakes and pies, and it was all very much enjoyed by those partaking. The programme was put on in the church by the orchestra from George St. United church in Peterborough. The numbers were various and were all well taken. The proceeds amounted to about $90.00.

There was a very large crowd of people from the surrounding district attended the funeral of the late Mr. Elwood Deyell on Tuesday afternoon.

Quite a number of the young people from this district attended the judging competition and banquet held in Lindsay on Tuesday for the county of Victoria.

The recent rain which fell in this locally has improved the grain and veegtables wonderfully and the wild strawberries are getting ripe and the yield looks promising both with the tame and wild ones.

DISTINCTIVE IN APPEARANCE—ECONOMICAL IN CONSTRUCTION

(By Maurice D. Klein Architect.)

The size of the average family, who require a home of moderate cost, have been kept in mind during every step of the production of the plans of this attractive house. Distinctive in appearance, economical in construction this design should not be overlooked by anyone looking for a compact and efficient six room house.

A cosy, homey effect is obtained by carrying the main roof over the verandah porch. The hood over the main entrance is supported by wrought iron brackets and you will notice that its design is in perfect harmony with the roof gable. Further attention has been devoted to such other details as the sunken dormers, battened shutters and the iron railing on the porch, all of which combine to provide a charming exterior.

The roomy open porch is 6 ft. 6 in. x 15 ft., quite sufficient space to be used as an outside living room in summer. It has also been made most convenient for this purpose by the French doors which open from the living room.

Entering the front door one is bound to be impressed with the commodious closet in the vestibule. Proceeding into the main hall, it is of the square type and particularly well lighted by casement windows on the lower and upper stair landings.

Your attention is particularly called to the large living room, 11 ft. 9 in. x 15 ft., where all doorways and other openings are centred—the door from the hall; double French doors to the porch; triple casement windows overlooking the garden, and the brick fireplace. The dining room is 11 ft. 9 in. x 11 ft. 6 in. and its windows overlook the rear and side gardens. There is a service door to the kitchen where every provision has been made for convenience. In the side entry there is space for a refrigerator and a built in milk cupboard accessible from the outside.

On the second floor are three bedrooms which will compare very favorably with the corresponding rooms of any other small six roomed house. Their sizes are 11 ft. 2 in. x 13 ft. 6 in., 10 ft. 4 in. x 12 ft. 1 in. and 9 ft. 9 in. x 12 ft. 1 in. All have windows on two sides and roomy clothes closets.

The architect's recommendation concerning the materials to be used are equally as interesting as any other matter pertaining to this home.

For the foundations and up to the floor line he suggests stone or brick faced with variegated stone from the ground to the floor line. From this point upwards a grey white stucco should be applied to either brick or hollow tile. The roof would be very pleasing done with good quality wood shingles stained a reddish brown, the metal gutters and conductors painted black. It is really most important that the front door ,battend shutters and the casement windows be made up from detail drawings. The other doors may be of stock design. The sash and French doors should be painted ivory white and the frames, shutters, front door and exposed rafters stained brown.

The overall measuresments of this house are 28 ft. 3 in .wide by a depth of 28 ft. 6 in. The former dimensions includes the porch which only extends back 16 ft. 6 in. Including hot water heating the approximate cost is $6,300.

Readers desiring further information regarding the plans and specifications for this house should communicate with the architect direct. Address, Mr. Maurice D. Klein ,71 King St. W., Toronto, Ont. Copyright 1927, MacLean Building Reports, Limited.

To Obtain Relief From Neuritis

The twitching of nerves and muscles warned Mrs. Mapletoft of the exhausted condition of her nervous system. She also had frequent nervous headaches and persistent neuritis in her right side.

Only temporary relief can come from external applications for neuritis. To really get rid of the cause of trouble it is necessary to thoroughly restore the exhausted nerves by the persistent use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mrs. Wm. Mapletoft, Mount Forest, Ont., writes:—

"For about three years I suffered from neuritis in my right side. I had pains through my back and twitching of the nerves and muscles. I had also been operated on for appendicitis, and it left me a nervous wreck. I was very restless and uneasy, and bothered with frequent neuralgic headaches. My appetite was poor and I sometimes took weak spells. I commenced a treatment of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and in a very short time I found relief. This medicine has done me the world of good and I can recommend it to all suffering as I was."

NEW PASTOR IS INDUCTED

Rev. Ernest Harston, L.L.B., Enters Charge of St. John's United ,Campbellford.

LARGE CONGREGATION.

CAMPBELLFORD, June 25.—The largest congregation on recent record of St. John's United Church turned out last night to welcome their new pastor, the Rev. Ernest Harston, L.L.B.

The Rev. Charles D. Daniel, Interim Moderator, presided, and after an organ prelude, "Ave Maria," and the singing of the doxology, asked God to pour out His blessing upon the one soon to be inducted into the pastorate of the church.

The preacher of the evening was the Rev. F. W. Anderson, M.A., of Port Hope, who by his commanding appearance and freedom from affectation, his gifted voice and his clear-cut message held his audience as few audiences allow themselves to be held on a hot June night.

"There was a man sent from God," were the appropriate words selected by the speaker upon which to set forth the necessary qualities of a preacher and a pastor. The Evangelist John, said the speaker, makes a clear declaration of the commission—"There was a man sent from God. John was deeply conscious of his God given task." In some way or other at least there is a God given task for each of us.

John appears as a link between the old and new testament. The work of John the Baptist, said the speaker, is clearly foretold in prophecy, "I am the voice of one coming in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord." "Behold I will send my messenger before Me." The Jewish people were looking for someone to come and reign in temporal power and release them from the power of Rome. John's task was a spiritual—not a temporal one. "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." "O generation of Vipers how shall ye escape the damnation of hell."

The women of the heathen court, said the speaker, saw that John was put out of the way, that he was beheaded. "He must increase, I must decrease." "Behold the lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. John sent his followers after the Christ. Men and women are needed today to be a message.

We are so magnifying man that we are forgetting God. All honor to Captain Lindbergh, who became a Colonel in a day. All honor to him, but we are magnifying man, forgetting God. Our business is to clean things up in this old world and give God a chance.

John came as an ambassador, a forerunner of Jesus Christ. Everyone has a mission, and if we are doing our part we will be making the paths straight. The different departments of the church should be living up to their mission.

There is a need for an awakening as in John's day. There is a necessity for an awakening to a sense of our responsibility. If we could see ourselves as others see us, said the reverend gentleman, our lives would be noble. John pointed the people to Jesus as a savior from sin, Jesus is coming to do his work, "I am only pointing the way. The mission is twofold, continued the speaker, pointing others to Jesus, when He comes He will have His place and drive out the other things. The responsibility is also on the sinner to turn the eye of faith on Jesus Christ. As He has His rightful place he will lead you into your rightful place of service. You are in a place tonight to recognize that in your midst there is a man sent from God, may it be your privilege and his to live and serve in that fellowship and admiration.

At the conclusion of the address a telegram dated Edmonton, Alberta, and from C. F. McIntosh, congratulating Mr. Harston, was read.

The steps leading up to the call were then recited after which the minister was duly inducted. Just before the induction, in the name of the Ladies Aid, the Rev. Mr. Daniel presented the new pastor with a handsome geneva gown.

After the induction the Rev. J. S. I. Wilson, B.A., B.D., gave a brief address. He complemented the congregation on the calling of Mr. Harston whom he knew personally. He named a number of things the Presbyterians had contributed to the United Church viz: The calling of the minister, the induction "in a dignified and impressive way." The use of the gown. Then he added, "When you have a day to spare I will come back and tell you all the contributions made by the Mesthodist Church."

Rev. Mr. Wilson stressed the preaching part of a minister's work, and asked the people not to have their pastor degraded into a mere ringer of door bells. It is unnecessary for me to ask you to furnish him a good home or to provide him a living salary—you have already done that. I'm going to ask you to hold up his hands in all spiritual work.

The musical part of the service under the direction of Mr. A. Hazell, was excellent. A duet entitled "Hold Thou My Hand," by Messrs. A. M. Rollo and A. Hazzell was nicely rendered.

At the conclusion of the service the large congregation were individually introduced to Mr. and Mrs. Harston, after which they made their way to the church lecture hall where the ladies served light refreshments.

Among the clerymen present were: Jones, Archer, Gardner (all United,) Rev's. Smith (Baptist,) Everson, and D. A. McKenzie (Presbyterian.)

"I Now Enjoy a Good Meal"

What stronger statement can anyone make who has suffered from Indigestion

Renzyme, the new scientific treatment for indigestion is making many friends in this community. It is so absolutely different from anything else and so prompt in affording relief that it makes its way by sheer force of merit.

This new treatment is after the nature of insulin, since it supplies to the stomach the active principle which brings about the digestion of the food, just as insulin carries on the work of the pancreas.

Again it is like insulin because it is taken from the digestive organ—the stomach—of animals and after suitable preparation administered to the human stomach.

Digestion is brought about in the stomach by means of digestive juices, which attack the food in the stomach and break it down into ingredients which can be absorbed by the blood.

For one reason or another, these digestive fluids become dried up and you suffer from indigestion. The active principles of the digestive fluids are known as enzymes. By introducing new enzymes to the digestive fluids of the stomach, you positively remove the cause of indigestion.

This is exactly what this new discovery, which is known as Renzyme, does. It supplies enzymes to the digestive fluids and therefore immediately restores their effectiveness in digesting food in the stomach.

Someone has said that the soul of man is in the pit of his stomach. One thing certain, one cannot accomplish much or enjoy life while suffering from indigestion.

For centuries scientists have sought relief from stomach troubles. All sorts of drug combinations have been tried without affording more than temporary relief.

Now the problem has been solved by the discovery of Renzyme. It is only after years of work in the laboratory and almost endless experiments that this product has been perfected in a form that will keep indefinitely when bottled.

The merit and effectiveness of Renzyme has been thoroughly established in hundreds of cases and medical doctors who have watched its action in chronic indigestion are most enthusiastic in its praise.

It is nature's relief for indigestion. It is immediately effective and cannot fail because it transfers from one stomach to another the active principle which brings about digestion of the food.

Tomorrow's Energy Depends on Tonight's Sleep

Today you possess a definite, measurable supply of energy for life's activities. Tomorrow you may have more or less; it depends upon how well you sleep tonight.

Seven hours of refreshing, glorious relaxation and perfect slumber on a Marshall Mattress are worth eleven hours of sleep on an ordinary mattress, which all too soon has become packed and unyielding.

The Marshall Mattress with its soft, flexible spring centre creates an entirely new kind of comfort, unknown in an ordinary stuffed mattress.

Never until you have slept on a Marshall can you realize what a tremendous difference this perfect body support means to real sleep.

Marshall owners never dreamed that such luxuriantly comfortable sleep ever existed until they bought their first Marshall. What a revelation it was to them. Your first night, too, on a Marshall will unfold to you this new kind of sleeping comfort.

A mattress that will give you many years of extra service, produce better and more healthful sleeping comfort through a definite scientific construction is naturally worth a few extra dollars. When others are replacing their ordinary mattresses your Marshall will be as good as new.

The Marshall necessarily costs a little more at first, but it actually costs less over a period of years. It is the soundest investment you can possibly make in really restful sleeping comfort.

Examine this greatest of all mattresses to-day at your furniture store. Made in five grades from $25.00 up—all Marshall Spring Mattresses are guaranteed for five years.

BISONS GIVEN 5-3 SETBACK

Leaf Hurler Registers 13th Victory By Smashing Homer in Fifth.

BEARS WIN 8-4.

NEW YORK, June 25.— (Canadian Press.)— The Toronto Maple Leafs gave the Bisons a setback at Buffalo yesterday when Lefty Faulkner, mound ace, registered another victory, his thirteenth of the year, by a 5 to 3 score. Faulkner not only dazzled the Bisons from the box but practically won his own game when he rifled a towering homer over the right field fence with a man on first base in the fifth inning. Chapley High, former Bison also whistled a homer over the same spot in the ninth inning.

Rallying for six runs in the seventh inning, Newark beat out a one-run Reading lead and piled up an advantage never overcome, to take the first of the series at Reading yesterday, 8 to 4. Nolan and Elliott hit for the circuit both blows coming with the bases unoccupied. George Earnshaw whitewashed Jersey City at home yesterday afternoon, allowing them six well scattered hits, while his mates got to Slicker Parks for three runs in the first two innings and coasted to a 3 to 0 victory.

PIRATES LOSE OPENING GAME

Held To Seven Hits By Cubs For 4-2 Score.

CARDS ADVANCE.

NEW YORK, June 25 (Canadian Press).—Charlie Root stopped the Pirates with seven hits yesterday while Chicago won at Pittsburgh, 4 to 2, in the opener of a two-game series. Timely hitting enabled the Cubs to pile up a three-run lead before Cuyler put a home run into the right field stands in the sixth. Doubles by Beck and Adams, together with Webb's single, gave Chicago two runs in the third. In the fourth, Stephenson opened with a double, took third on a single by Grimm and scored what proved to be the deciding run on Hartnett's sacrifice fly.

The Cardinals advanced to within one game of the league-leading Pirates by defeating the Cincinnati Reds at St. Louis yesterday, 3 to 2, in eleven innings, for their fifth straight victory. Bill Sherdel held the visitors to six hits. The Cardinals won in the eleventh when Bottomley singled. Holm and Southworth were purposely passed and Schulte walked, forcing in Bottomley. The Cards have a chance to go into leadership today by winning both games of a double-header if the Pirates lose.

Spit Double-Header.

New York divided a double-header at Philadelphia taking the opener by 7 to 3, and losing out in a 10-inning closing battle by 6 to 5.

Kaufmann, former Cub hurler, made his debut with Philadelphia in the first game and was knocked out of the box in the fifth. Ulrich succeeding him. Rogers Hornsby made his 13th homer in the first inning with one on base.

After battering Ferguson off the slab during a four-run attack in the eighth inning of the second game, the Giants failed to hold a two-run margin and the Phillies levelled the count in a ninth inning rally.

After being touched for ten hits in the early innings, Henry Wertb, young Boston right-hander, finished up by retiring 15 Robins in order as the visiting Braves defeated Brooklyn by 5 to 3. Good support gave him a decided edge over Elliott, his rival. Babe Herman hit a home run in the third, but his two errors materially aided in the Boston victory.

BEARCATS WINS FROM CANUCKS

CAMPBELLFORD, June 25. — Indian war whoops rent the air in the neighbourhood of the sawmill yesterday afternoon when the Bearcats and the Canucks engaged in a life and death struggle for the supremacy of the diamond.

A week ago the Canucks put it all over the Bearcats and claimed that the Police Statio nside of the canal never could produce a ball team to beat the industrial side. Well, sir, the Bearcast crossed the canal yesterday afternoon, and what they did to the sawdust gang was nothing short of a crime. The boys, hearing that it was going to be a real game of ball, were all there. The ladies, being properly advised, wisely went to see a tennis game.

The features of the game, besides the repeated threat to kill the umpire and the calling of that young gentleman a rail (spelled backwards) were homers by Hendy and Blute, of the Bearcats, and some pretty catching in field by Richardson and Lloyd of the Canucks.

The line-up:

Bearcats — Bun Blute, p; E. Bush, c; N. Reynolds, 1b; G. Smith, 2b; Bob Poulton, 3b; Owen Hendy, ss; Bill Brenner, lf; Horseman, rf; M. Malcolm, cf.

Canucks — E. Wilks, p; L. Sampson, c; S. White, 1b; R. Sperry, 2b; W. Malhort, 3b; W. Reid, ss; N. Lloyd lf; R. Richardson, rf ;G. Cochrane, cf.

Umpire—Don. Kidd.

Score: 26 to 16 in favour of the Bearcats.

COGS LOSE EARLY LEAD

Tied With Crescents 6-6 in East Peterborough League Fixture.

HEAVY HITTING.

Cognawagas failed to hold a lead of four runs gained over Crescents in the first frame of a hard-hitting fracas at James Stevenson Park last evening, the teams finishing with the game tied up at 6 to 6. The Cogs smote Jack Billingsley's slants high, wide, and handsome, two good catches by Freddy Jones in left field saving the Crescents from facing a runaway. "Long John" wobbled along until he got into the midst of another cluster of hits in the fifth when with two runs in and nobody out, he was relieved by Armstrong, who put on the brakes and held the Cogs away from the plate.

Vannest also had a busy evening checking the Crescents. They combed him for a quartette of safeties in the second, one of them a long drive into deep middle which Cripps misjudged, scoring a pair of runs. The Crescents tied it up in the fourth, and from then on neither team had the punch to break up the contest.

The infielders had a lovely time trying to knock down a regular procession of drives, Crary doing some extra fine work at second for the Cogs. His play on Scully's screecher in the sixth with two on was a hit of nice infielding.

A summary notice from the Exhibition Board to get out, forced the league officials to vacate Exhibition Park on short notice, which accounts for the game being played at James Stevenson Park. Games scheduled for next week will also be played at the latter grounds.

STARR STERLING'S PROBLEM

A Serial for Boys - By BERT REED

"With a sweep of his muscular arm, he caught the little fellow up and swept him clear from the path of the on-coming team."

It was night, the sky was black and moonless. Two dark forms, crouching in the shelter of an old boat-house, were holding a guarded conversation.

"It's the easiest money you ever earned and you know it!" It was a boy's voice, sauve and ingratiating.

For a moment there was silence as if the other were still unconvinced.

"Twenty-five dollars," urged the voice again. "It's more than you can make in two weeks. You know the trick. He will never know who did it."

"But suppose he does," replied the other in a low tone—the voice was that of a man—"suppose he guesses?"

"There isn't a chance," came from the other. "Here's fifteen now—you'll get the rest when the job's done."

An electric flash winked for a moment as the boy brought out the money. Had one been watching, he would have seen two people: a boy of perhaps eighteen, whose rather good looking face was marred by the stamp of dissipation; the other a man roughly dressed and unshaven.

"All right," agreed the man suddenly. "Gimme the coin. I'll do it—I need it bad enough to do anything."

The boy drew back. "Not so fast—not so fast! Do you understand who it is you have to get? It's Sterling. I don't suppose you know much about baseball," he continued, "but Riverview is leading the league with one game to the good. Beamville is in second place, Cedarvale is running third and Long Point is in the cellar. If Riverview loses the game on Saturday and Beamville wins, we're going to be tied for first place. The Riverview team is depending on Sterling. He's the only real twirler they have. With him out of commission, Cedarvale will have the game cinched. I'm not asking you to break his arm, but Sterling is not to play on Saturday.

"You know how to do it—I've seen you work it. You put Cy Cummings out of commission last summer the same way."

"I'll do it," returned the man.

A moment later the figure of a boy emerged from the shadows and walked toward the town. Five minutes later the man followed.

As Starr Sterling walked down the main street in Beamville, more than one turned to greet him as he passed. Already he had established for himself and his team an enviable record. Of the last five games his team had played not one had been lost. Beamville, Cedardale and Long Point had all tasted defeat. A great deal of the credit was due Sterling for his generalship on the diamond as well as his wonderful work on the slab and the fairer minded people of Beamville were not slow to recognize this and give him credit for his exceptional work. This was more particularly true of those who were summering at Long Point. They were for the most part strangers in Beamville, and, consequently, were not prejudiced in the home team's favor.

As Starr walked along, he was turning the problem of his pitching staff over in his mind. He realized that the team's weakness lay in its lack of twirlers. Gray had done his best and he made a good substitute, but he could not be depended upon to pitch an entire game. Sterling had come to town that morning to send a wire to Stan Simpson in Riverview. Stan had planned to join the team in a week or so, but realizing the urgent need of a good man in the pitcher's box, Starr had decided to get him down, if at all possible, for Saturday's game with Cedarvale. If he could manage to accomplish this, it would give his own arm a chance to rest for the big game with Beamville the following week.

"Hello, there!" smiled Starr, the shrill, piping voice of a boy that stopped Starr as he turned to enter the telegraph office. Looking down he saw a mite of a chap, perhaps eight, on crutches. His large eyes and pale face were lighted with a smile of recognition.

"Hello there!" smiled Starr back. "What's your name?"

"Pete," came the answer. "Say, Mr. Sterling, are yuh goin' to play ball again soon?"

"Sure thing," returned Starr smiling. "You come along on Saturday and I'll see that you get in."

Starr quickly transacted his business in the telegraph office and stepped into the street again. As he did so, he heard the cry, "A runaway! Here comes a runaway!"

Looking up he saw a team of horses coming down the street at a mad gallop. Fortunately, the few cars and wagons on the street were drawn to the curb, and there was a clear thoroughfare for the wild ride.

Suddenly Starr saw that the little chap he had spoken to a few moments before had started to cross the road and was now right in the pathway of the on-coming horses.

Not for a fraction of a second did Sterling hesitate. Not for a moment did he stop to consider the personal risk he was taking. With a bound he was in the road. He heard the ring of stone and iron; the clattering hoofs were almost on top of him; he did not lessen his stride. With a sweep of his muscular arm, he caught the little fellow up and swept him clear from the path of the on-coming team.

A second later the maddened animals pounded by in their wild gallop. Sterling, in an exhibition of wonderful courage and unusual presence of mind, had saved the little cripple's life.

A crowd quickly gathered. "Who is it? What's happened?" asked a man who had just come along.

"It's Sterling, captain of the Riverviews, saved Mike Brogan's kid," was the terse reply of another.

"Say, that sure was nervy!" All round expressions of admiration were heard.

Little Pete was frightened, big tears were in his eyes, but he was biting his lip and bravely stifling a desire to cry.

"Th — thanks—Mis—Mister Sterling," he finally managed to articulate. "I guess you saved me from them horses, all right."

"I guess I did, Pete," laughed Starr. "You're all right now, no bones broken, not a mark on you — yes there is," he chuckled. "You've got a big patch of dirt over one eye."

Pete was laughing now himself, so Starr put him down and brushed him off.

At that moment a big, broad-shouldered, roughly dressed man pushed his way through the crowd.

"Petie—where's my Petie?" he cried.

Brushing the people to one side, he picked the little fellow up and crushed him closely to his breast.

"Petie—you're safe—tell me you ain't hurt!"

Starr caught the note of tremulous anxiety in the man's voice, and looking up detected the suggestion of tears in his eyes.

"No, Daddy, I ain't even scratched. Mr. Sterling lifted me clear of them horses just as if I was a feather."

The man put the little fellow down and, powerful though his physique, his face was ashen.

"Starr Sterling," he cried brokenly, "I ain't got nothin' to offer you but my hand. If little Petie had been ——" He did not finish the sentence. Tears were streaming down his rough face. "Little Petie is all I got," he ended.

Starr was touched with the man's emotion and he also felt decidedly embarrassed, for by this time a crowd unusual in size for the little town had gathered.

"What's the matter with Starr Sterling?" piped a little fellow on the outskirts of the throng, and the crowd answered to a man—"He's all right!"

"I'm glad, mighty glad, Mr. Brogan," he smiled, "that I happened along at the right time, and, Peter," he added, turning to the little chap, "don't forget Saturday. I'll see that you have a reserved seat all to yourself—no, better than that, you'll be mascot for our team and sit right on the players' bench!"

Peter's eyes opened wide with joyous delight.

"Daddy, did you hear what Mr. Sterling says? He's goin' to let me sit right down close to the 'empire' and all them other fellers!"

The horses, which, fortunately, had had a clear track, had come to a standstill far down the street and were now being driven back. For a moment the attention of the crowd was diverted in their direction and Starr, taking advantage of this, slipped quietly away.

"I'm going into town to-night, fellows," declared Starr, as he dried the last dish and slipped it into the big box that served as a cupboard. "I'm becoming anxious about Stan. It's two days now since I sent that wire and we haven't received a word. Now, I know you fellows want to get out on the river to-night, so I'll walk. I advise you to hustle and get the benefit of that wonderful sunset. Look at that color!" he exclaimed. "Sometimes I wish that I had the skill of an artist that I might depict a thing like that in paint."

Great clouds of burnished copper were hanging above the darking slopes. The harmony of a hundred colors was reflected in the still depths of the quiet river. A stillness seemed to have enfolded the landscape. Far up the river road the low of homeward bound cattle was borne on the night wind.

"There are times, fellows," breathed Starr, "when a chap gets right up close with God—and to-night is one of them."

Suddenly Larkspur, who had been standing behind Hollway, without warning struck him a resounding crack with his open hand. More startled than stung by the impact of Larkspur's blow, Hiram uttered a sharp cry and jumped.

"Sorry, Hi," Lark murmured soothingly, "but you owe me a vote of thanks. A fat, juicy, unsophisticated mosquito, that had been careering around your youthful shoulders, had just settled upon your neck for a siesta—whatever that is—and had it not been for my prompt and thoughtful action, you would have, by this time, been tearing yourself to get at the bite."

Hollway made a swing at Larkspur, who deftly ducked and hopped away to safety.

"Well, fellows," declared Starr, "I'm off—no, I feel like going alone to-night, Paul," he added as Gray volunteered to accompany him. "I don't expect I'll be late, so will see you all later."

TIGERS TAKE TWO STRAIGHT

Collect 16 Hits For 26 Bases To Defeat Chicago 9 to 4.

BOSTON LOSE OUT 5-3.

NEW YORK, June 25 (Canadian Press).—Detroit made it two straight at Chicago yesterday by hammering out a 9 to 4 victory. The visitors collected 16 hits for a total of 26 bases, driving Red Faber off the hill in the sixth inning.

Rip Collins managed to keep Chicago's hits well scattered and was given perfect support, two snappy double plays breaking up promising Sox rallies.

St. Louis won at Cleveland in a fast, well-played 10-inning game, 2 to 1, evening the series. Wingard of the Browns and Shaute of the Indians both pitched good balls. The winning run was scored on singles by Schulte and O'Neil, and Gerber's sacrifice fly.

Hollis Thurston drove in three runs for Washington at Boston yesterday and aided the Senators materially in defeating Boston, 5 to 3, in the first game of the series. In addition to pitching sterling ball, Thurston made two singles and a double, each hit bringing in a runner.

Only three games scheduled.

MANY ENTRIES FOR MARATHON

Bids Fair To Become One of the World's Greatest Swimming Meets.

ENDURANCE TEST.

TORONTO, June 25 (Canadian Press).—George Michels of Paris, France, holder of the English Channel swimming record, sailed from Cherbourg yesterday for Montreal, where he will commence training for the $50,000 swimming marathon to be held here on August 21. Michel was awarded the Grand Prix by the Academy of Sports this year, and should furnish smart opposition to the swimmers who will enter the water here.

Duke Melle, of Honolulu, is an additional entry. He will commence training on the Pacific Coast, and will gradually work north to this city by degrees to accustom himself to the cooler water than that of his native Hawaii.

Johan Thorenson of Norway, who claims the Norwegian championship held by Olav Farstad, reached Canada this week and is already training. Arthur Compton of California, 14 years old, who outlasted 84 of the 103 starts in the Santa Catalina Channel marathon which was won by George Young of Toronto, will start for Toronto by motor next week.

That the local marathon will bid fair to become one of the world's greatest swimming events seems almost certain. The water in Lake Ontario, while still almost too cold for comfort, is getting gradually warmer, and it is expected that by the end of August the water will be warm enough to enable the majority of the swimmers to bring out their speed. Even at that, it will be a tremendous test of endurance. The fact that the race is to be held in fresh water, with its corresponding lack of buoyancy as compared to the salt, will mean that the strongest swimmers will be "in the money" for the big prize. It is recognized that distance swimming in fresh water is much harder than in salt.

By A Wise Cracker

Mister Sporting Editor:

Seeing as this is the last chance I'll have of talking to the customers before Dominion Day, we—meaning me and my fountain pen—is going to use a little space on the Diamond Jubilee. The celebration looks to me like the biggest thing we ever had in this old burg, and it oughta be, seeing this is the 1st real opening we'd had to tell the cock-eyed world that we're proud that we're Canadians.

If the 60th birthday of the Dominion ain't worth celebrating and celebrating right we oughta hand the country back to the Indians and get out. And the people what can't once in 60 years put Canada ahead of everything else and throw theirselfs right into the thick of the celebration oughta get out anyway.

Here we are with a wonderful country, rich in natural resources, water power, timber, minerals, agricultural wealth, variety of climate, the finest scenery in the world, freer than any people on the face of the globe. Down in our hearts we all love it whether we was born here or across the seas, but most of us is so all-fired afraid to show it that it is only once in a blue moon that the lid is taken off. The Diamond Jubilee gives us a chance to cut loose for once, and nine million Canucks oughta to make such a noise about it that all over the earth the folks will be sitting up and taking notice of the Land of the Maple.

Right here we got 1 of the best towns in the whole works. If we didn't think so we wouldn't be living here. And it's up to us to put this celebration over next week with a bang that'll be heard above all the noise of the country's joy-making. For years some of us has been swallowing the bunk about big days everywhere else until it got to be accepted that Peterborough couldn't stage anything right. That's applesauce. We got as much pep and brains and willingness here as any burg in the land, and next week it's going to be proved. And all the customers can help—that's why I am talking right at them today. This celebration is everybody's job, and the whole gang has got to get in on it. In the 1st place, stay at home for the doings. 2nd, see it all. 3rd, decorate. Hang out the flags and the bunting. Don't let George do it—do it yourself. They ain't no excuse for a house in Peterborough being without some decoration.

All I can say is that if the Diamond Jubilee ain't celebrated up to the handle over the 3 days we gotta darned poor country or a darned poor bunch of citizens. I know they ain't nothing wrong with the country, and I don't think they's anything wrong with the people, so that's why I am not afraid to predict that the jubilee is going to be a wow. And how!

Well, Mac, hoping you and all the customers has a barrel of fun next week, and that we'll start off towards Canada's centenary better Canadians. I am going to quit now with the usual,

Sportfully yours,
A. WISE CRACKER.

Summer Meeting of Montreal Jockey Club Brought To Close.

MONTREAL, June 25 (Canadian Press).—Featured by one of the most exciting finishes that has ever taken place at Blue Bonnets, the summer meeting of the Montreal Jockey Club came to an end yesterday. A large crowd was in attendance, yesterday being a French-Canadian national holiday—St. Jean Baptiste Day. It was the sixth race which provided the thrill when seven horses flashed past the post with only about half a length separating the first from the seventh. The first three, Michael B., Jasonette and Burbeth, were divided only by a nose. Sniper finished a nose behind Burbeth and a head in front of Parchesie, which was less than half a length ahead of Costigan. The latter wound up a neck in front of Gilbert Cook. The eighth horse in the race, Lally, was eight lengths in rear of Gilbert Cook.

The chief event of the day was the "Jean Baptiste Handicap," carrying a purse of $1,200, six furlongs, for three year olds and up. Half a dozen horses went to the barrier with Powhatan a hot favorite. Worthmore, owned by W. H. Wright and ridden by Jockey Josian, captured the race by one length from Powhatan. The styles was a bad third.

Built for Endurance

BEHIND the beauty of Chevrolet there is an abundance of strength and stamina, just as there is a great store of surplus power. The rugged channel steel frame, the husky banjo-type rear axle, the powerful valve-in-head engine and every detail of construction combine to defy the ravages of wear and tear, of hills and ruts, of mud and sand, of extremes of climate and of hard, continuous usage.

As Chevrolet has been designed for beauty, powered for performance, planned for economy — so Chevrolet has been BUILT FOR ENDURANCE.

And this — the most Beautiful, the most Powerful and the most Rugged Chevrolet in Chevrolet History — is selling at new, low prices, the lowest for which Chevrolet has ever been sold in Canada.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch)

BOYS BELONG OUTDOORS.

You can't grow roses in the dim
And darkness of a room.
The little fellow—what of him?
Oh where will children bloom?
Though walls may hold your earthly stores
Roses and boys belong outdoors.

You can not plant the sapling tree
Within your walls of stone
Or poor and sickly it will be—
And where must boys be grown?
I think God put life's greatest joys
Outdoors because He thought of boys.

Don't call them in from play too soon
Don't tell them play is wrong.
When Nature sings her merry tune
I know where boys belong.
Whatever darkness man explores
Roses and boys belong outdoors.

TEAMS TIED FOR SOFTBALL GROUP HONORS

Belmonts Defeated Lockworks Last Night in Ten Innings Fixture.

SCORE 3 TO 2.

Winners To Be Decided in Extra Game at Central Park on Wednesday Night.

Last night in a ten-inning fixture the Belmonts defeated the Lock Works three runs to two. The win for the Belmonts makes the two teams tied for first place in the group as each has won five games and lost one.

The two teams were evenly matched and the game was carried ten innings before the Belmonts scored the winning run when both Galbraith and Holland dropped field flies, with nobody out.

The Lock Works scored in the first on a three-bagger by Weise and a sacrifice by Nichols. They were then held scoreless until the ninth, when Debson made first on Frick's error, and both Holland and Johnston singled.

The Belmonts scored in the second and the third and again in the tenth. Although the losers outhit the Belmonts, they pulled off more costly errors in the field which meant runs. The Belmonts' errors were well covered up.

Each pitcher struck out three men, but Waddell issued four passes. The Belmonts on the night's play were rather out-lucked, for when they got their runners on they advanced them to third by sacrifice hits, but were unable to get them across the plate.

O.H.A. REFUSES CERTIFICATE TO M'DOUGALL

Executive Will Not Grant Transfer To "Shrimp" McDougal From Owen Sound.

McFEE'S ALLOWED

Certificate of Edmond Spence Is Held Up For Further Consideration.

TORONTO, June 25. — The Executive Committee of the Ontario Hockey Association held a meeting in The Telegram Building last night to deal with applications for change of residence and other business pertaining to next winter activities.

President George McKay, who has just recovered from a serious illness which came on him while attending the annual meeting of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and the Allan Cup finals in Vancouver in March, was given a warm welcome by his colleagues, and on a motion by Past President D. L. Darroch of Collingwood, and seconded by Vice-President Frank Hyde of Woodstock, the Executive Committee recorded itself as appreciative of the speedy recovery of President McKay from his illness, and expressed the hope that he may be long spared to serve the Ontario Hockey Association in an official capacity.

The secretary, W. A. Hewitt, was instructed to write the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, extending the thanks of the O.H.A. for their constant interest taken in President McKay during his illness.

The executive decided not to grant transfers to players from the Northern Ontario Hockey Association, or from the O.H.A. to the N.O.H.A. until a conference is held between the officials of the two associations.

The application of Ferrand Gillie, of Cornwall, for a transfer to Chesterville of the Ottawa and District Amateur Hockey Association, was held over for further consideration.

Robert Mercer, of Port Hope, was refused recommendation for reinstatement to the amateur ranks.

Two years ago the executive was called upon to handle some three hundred applications for change of residence, while last year the number dropped to sixty-five, but last night only twenty-nine applications came before the members for consideration, and they were dealt with as follows:

George Gurnett, Galt, more information required; Russell Salmon, of Georgetown, granted; Ralph Farrell, Kitchener, granted; William Arundel, Oshawa, action deferred; George Chartrand, Oshawa, granted; Peter Melts, Oshawa, granted; Arthur Corbeau, Oshawa, more information; Hubert Boucher, Oshawa, action deferred; Alan Densem, Oshawa, more information required; Leo F. BALL GAME HERE ON THE HOLIDAY

St. George's of Toronto, Will Meet Peterborough Seniors.

A rattling good ball game is to be included in Peterborough's Diamond Jubilee celebration programme owing to the enterprise of the Peterborough Ball Club in securing the St. George's team, one of the best senior clubs in Toronto for a game at Riverside Park on the morning of July 1st, thus giving home fans a chance to see a hard-fought battle.

The St. George's team won the Western City League championship in 1925-26, and have lost but two games this season, while their list of victories includes wins over such strong clubs as the Hamilton K.P.'s and Guelph Maple Leafs.

In Frank Verral St. George's have the Toronto pitching sensation of the present season. This young southpaw has yet to be beaten, and has a no-hit, no-run game to his credit. Another good pitcher with the club is Hamey Gillespie ,a fast ball right-handler.

"Buck" McKenna manages St. George's, and has them going at top speed.

The game will be called at 10.15 o'clock on Dominion Day morning.

AT THE CAPITOL.

GLORIA SWANSON'S "THE LOVE OF SUNYA." Masterpiece in Which She Plays Five Characters.

Gloria Swanson gives the greatest performance of her successful career in "The Love of Sunya," the first picture she has produced as an owner-member of United Artists. This remarkable cinema has been proclaimed by critics and thousands of movie-goers throughout the country.

Those who go to the Capital Theatre next Monday will see Gloria in five intensely dramatic characterizations. Her dominant personality is more attractive than ever and the excellence of her portrayals is sufficient evidence of the fact that she was supported by an enthusiastic and competent cast and staff of technicians.

Gloria Swanson, a modern American girl, sought by a reincarnate Yogi.

Gloria Swanson, the "bought" wife of the millionaire.

These are her characterizations and so she moves triumphantly through a picture of conflicting love, duty and ambition. "The Love of Sunya" is replete with romance, passion, pathos and laughter, with the mysticism of ancient Egypt.

Great interest and freshness is added to the cinema through the introduction of several faces new to movie goers. John Boles, son of a Texas banker, whom Miss Swanson selected from a New York musical comedy success, plays the role of Paul Judson, Sunya's lover. Fiobelle Fairbanks, niece of "Doug," plays the part of Miss Swanson's sister. In his first cinema role in America, Hugh Miller, who has been starred in English and German pictures, is the Yogi.

From the pirate chief in Douglas Fairbanks' "The Black Pirate," Anders Randolf came to act the millionaire husband. Pauline Garon, who has been absent from films several months, returns as a blonde "gold-digger" in "Love of Sunya." The Broadway play "Cradle Snatchers," was robbed of Raymond Hackett to play Miss Swanson's younger brother.

Andres de Segurola, former Metropolitan Opera Company star, makes his film debut as an impresario. Ian Keith, whom Miss Swanson brought to the screen several years ago, is with her again, playing the part of a young banker. Robert Schable is Picquard, manager of the Opera Comique, while John Miltern plays the part of Miss Swanson's father. Ivan Lebedeff, the Russian actor, plays the part of Howard Morgan.

Albert Parker, who made "The Black Pirate," "Arizona," and "The Knickerbrocker Buckaroo," all Douglas Fairbanks' pictures, and "Sherlock Holmes" with John Barrymore.

AT THE REGENT.

"MYSTERY CLUB" IS ARRESTING, BAFFLING TALE.

All-Feature Cast With Matt Moore and Edith Roberts in Strand Film.

Take a tip from us. Don't miss "The Mystery Club," the Universal-Jewel playing at the Regent Theatre Monday. It is crammed full with action and replete with thrills and humor and is a credit to the masterly supervision of Herbert Blache who directed it.

The picture tells of the events taking place in and about "The Mystery Club," composed of millionaires who are skeptical of the ability of the police in apprehending criminals. They prepare an agreement in which each member is to commit a crime, the member responsible for its execution is to pay a large sum as a penalty.

This is the basis for a series of enigmatic situations that set the nerves of the members on edge, making them frantic with fear, involve the hero in suspicious escapades and apparently the heroine with a band of desperadoes.

Matt Moore is incomparable as the upstanding Dick Bernard. He brings to his part a fineness of understanding that will prove to be one of the best performances of the year. Special mention is to be made of Edith Roberts and Mildred Harris for the two leading feminine roles.

KEA BOUMAN IS ELIMINATED

Was Popular Choice To Reach Semi-Finals in Women's Singles.

WIMBLEDON COURTS.

WIMBLEDON, June 25— (Canadian Press.)— The surprise of yesterday's tennis on the famous Wimbledon courts was the elimination of Miss Kea Bouman of Holland, one of the seeded players in the women's singles. Emulating the triumphant tactics of Miss Betty Nuthall in her match Thursday with Molla Mallory, champion of the United States, another English star of youth, Miss Joan Fry, accounted for Miss Bouman. The score was 2-6, 6-4, 9-7. Miss Bouman had been a popular choice to reach the semi-finals.

Mrs. Kitty McKane Godfree, winner of the championship at Wimbledon last year, advanced to-day by defeating Miss Evelyn L. Goldyer, 6-3, 6-2. It was Mrs. Godfree's first appearance of the tournament on the centre court and so remarkable was her form that critics conceded her a place in the finals.

Six of the eight quarter-finalists in the women's singles now have been designated. They are Mrs. Godfree, Mrs. Watson and Miss Fry, England; Miss Elizabeth Ryan, United States; Senorita de Alvrabe, Spain, and Mrs. Peacock, South Africa. The other two quarter-finalists will be the winners the matches between Miss Helen Wills and Miss E. A. Goldsack, and Betty Nuthall and Mrs. J. Hill.

Each member of the United States' "big four"— Miss Wills, Miss Ryan, William T. Tilden and Francis T. Hunter—won a victory in the singles. Each of them reached the quarter-finals with the exception of Miss Wills, who is a round behind her team mates in the play.

COGS AND RAYS PLAY ON MONDAY

Cogs need a win over the Rays to hold their present satisfactory position in the league standing, and after last night's batting bee should give Raybestos a great battle.

CHAPTER XXVI

Vilak rode to the wharf to ascertain if the floods were holding up the boat or whether it would arrive on time. But the drowsy, red shirted negro clerk in charge could tell him nothing.

Leaving the dock, he visited the slovenly tobacco store, bought some tobacco and matches and meeting D'Albentara, who had come on a similar message, rode with him part of the way along the road.

D'Albentara said regretfully that he had not yet had the opportunity to thank Elise for the courtesy as he had been having considerable trouble with two or three of his men, and this had occupied all his time. He feared, he added, that he might never have the pleasure of a visit, as the rising waters had been playing havoc with the railroad property in other places to a far greater extent than to Porto Verde, and he rather thought he might be ordered back in the direction of Avilos that afternoon.

He had received no information about the boat, though he thought that in view of the conditions it would very likely be delayed, perhaps even a day or two. They shook hands at the crossroads and Vilak rode on to the fazenda.

"Looks mighty doubtful about your getting away tonight," he remarked a trifle anxiously as he entered Elise's room and watched her heap piles of baby clothes into a trunk. 'Mighty doubtful. And after what happened yesterday, you yourself know how vital it is that you get away. I suppose all we can do is to go down to the wharf at six o'clock when the boat's supposed to come in and wait. Then, if it doesn't come, we'll have to build a raft, or something equally desperate, and ship you down two thousand miles on that."

By noon Elise had finished her packing. She spent a few hours in giving explicit directions to the servants to what was to be done in her brief absence; then after a quick tea, gave the child to Hannah, who was waiting in the dog cart beside a gray-haired negro driver. Then she mounted her piebald mare and touched it lightly with her whip.

They rode off, Vilak and the old man on horseback on either side of her, the carriage close behind. They reached the wharf and dismounted. Six o'clock arrived without the hoarse, prolonged whistle that usually marked the arrival of the steamer at the bar a mile up the river. Seven o'clock. Still no boat. Total darkness and the boat nowhere in sight.

Elise slushed impatiently through the mud of the tiny dock. "We'll have to camp here all night, I guess," she said. "I don't know whether anybody else is, but I'm hungry, And irritable."

She peered up the river anxiously, then began pacing the dock again. Suddenly she turned as a confused murmur of excited voices drifted up from the silent, darkened town square a quarter of a mile away. A clatter of hoofs sounded up the road. The noise became louder.

Vilak's eyes narrowed. "Wonder what that is," he murmured. He took a bit of betel. "Think I'll go have a look. Back in a hurry." He spurred into the darkness.

A few moments later he was speeding back. "The dam Avilos has burst," he said quietly. "A wall of water forty feet high is sweeping down the valley. But it won't reach here for half an hour or more. You and Nanny hurry up to Chacos Hill."

Elise and the old man looked at him incredulously, for his voice was even as though he were relating some placid story in the corner of a dim room. He had barely finished speaking when a horseman came speeding down the road shouting in frenzied Portuguese that death was upon the inhabitants if they did not flee. He vanished. Windows opened violently, lights appeared, animals grunted, men cursed, bedlam broke out in the street.

"You and Nanny go on to Chacos Hill," Vilak repeated. "With Tinky." His words roused Elise from her daze. She caught the bridle of her horse. "What are you going to do?" she asked.

"Go and warn some of the people in the outlying districts here. Don't Don't get excited Nanny. Keep cool, keep cool." he added, as the old man trembling with excitment, tried to scramble up on his horse and hopelessly entangled his foot in the stirrup. "A man's like an engine. Much better when he's cool. Half an hour's a long time. Don't be stampeded."

He stooped down and with a quick movement freed the other's foot. The old man clambered onto his mount. Elise too, leaped into her saddle. "I'm going with you," she said to Vilak. "We can't let these poor people on the outskirts die like beasts. Two of us can cover much more territory. Hannah can take Tinky up to Chacos. She's proved she can take care of him. It's only a few minutes."

She kissed the baby quickly, then spoke a few words to the driver of the dogcart. The vehicle rattled off. The old man looked confusedly after it an instant, bewilderingly began to follow it, then turned and came awkwardly galloping back to Vilak. The three riders sped toward the murmuring town square. As they reached it a panic-struck parade began to sweep past them.

Here a donkey struggled heroically to trot through the sloughs with its fat master and screaming mistress clinging hysterically to its back; here three squealing pigs lurched ahead of a grunting negro, driving them on with a club; there an Indian woman with huge ornaments in her lips and ears scurried through the mud shouting at the five naked and shining children who ran before her. So absorbed was the terrorized villagers in their headlong flight that they hardly saw the three riders coursing past, and Vilak was constantly bringing his horse to a violent halt in order that he might not run them down.

Elise swept her mount round a bed toppled into a street by some frenzied householder. "Where are you going?" she flashed to Vilak.

"Prentiss' place," he snapped. "He'll get it the worst down there, he's so low. We've got time. We can get to Ituitaba Hill from there just as quickly as to Chacos from here and be just as safe."

He heard her draw a sharp breath. "I realize that you don't like him. I don't either. But however bad he is, we can't let him drown. No one else in the town will think of warning him, he's so hated. After all, he is a fellow human being. All grudges are done in a case like this. It's the jungle law as well as the human."

She stooped to swoop safely under a low-hanging branch. You're right. Of course we've got to do it. I was drifting into the family feud state of mind, I guess."

They swept on and began to leave the city behind. Here and there Vilak on one side of the road and Elise on the other checked their horses for a moment before a miserable cabin of rushes to shout to the occupants the news of the disaster. But in each case an answering shout, or kinky head bobbing frantically through a door told them they had already been notified.

"Odd," he called to Elise as he bobbed furiously up and down. "No one's been overlooked. They've been quite systematic in carrying the news. Couldn't have done better if one man had taken charge of it. Never knew these lackadaisical natives to have so much method and energy. It's astonishing."

They wheeled past a Porto Verdean bouncing along in a clattering ox cart, through a pack of racing, wild-eyed dogs who had been infected with the human panic and were fleeing from they knew not what then over the wooden bridge they had crossed so slowlyy a few hours before. Vilak looked down at the narrow stream below. "That's odd, to.," he murmured. "Water looks lower than it did this morning."

The Insurance Money Gave Her Time to Think

LEFT with $7,000 of Mutual Life Insurance and two young children, the widow of a Y.M.C.A. Secretary in a Western City was obliged to plan her life anew. What was she to do?

Her capital of $7,000 gave her courage to plan ahead. She determined to become a Life Insurance Agent and took a course of training. She went to work bravely. Her income was small at first but she persevered, and today owns her home and carries $10,000 Life Insurance to protect her boys.

And she never ceases to thank me for that $7,000 which gave her "time to think."

Let the nearest Agent of the Mutual Life tell you about the Mutual principle of Life Insurance and the different types of Mutual Policies. Or write to this Office for the Mutual Book.

ELECTORATE VOTES TO-DAY

Government Control the Main Issue in Prince Edward Island Elections.

SIXTY CANDIDATES.

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., June 25. —(Canadian Press.)—Prince Edward Islanders will know to-night the answer to the question that has been puzzling them for the past few months and which was the main issue of one of the most strenuous political campaigns in the history of their province, whether or not the result of to-day's polling for 60 candidates nominated to contest the fifteen ridings of the Island's three counties, will find the majority of the electors in favor of Premier J. D. Stewart's policy of Government control of the sale of liquor. If the voters call in to power the Liberal regime under A. C. Saunders, the province will continue under the Prohibition Act, strictly enforced ,and the islanders will then, as in the past, obtain their liquor only on a physicians' presciption. The Liberal leader ,however, included in his platform a plank providing for a plebiscite of the people on question of the legalised sale under government control, to take place in July 1929. The two parties were substantially in agreement on other matters relating to the administration of the province.

COMET APPROACHES EARTH TO-MORROW

Professor Says Shower of Meteors May Be Expected.

WASHINGTON, June 24 (Canadian Press).—Paying its third visit in little more than a century the Pons Winneck comet to-morrow by coming with 3,500,000 miles will make its closest contact with earth. Astronomers and observers state that the comet itself may not be the only interesting phenomonon. Charles Oliver, Professor of Astronomy at the University of Virginia, says there may be a shower of meteors as a result of the comet's approach to earth.

"Earth may pass through some of the debris of the comet's nucleus, in which case there will be a meteor shower of more or less intensity," Dr. Oliver declared in a statement last night.

Rival astronomers are of opinion that the comet can best be viewed with a telescope or binoculars, although it may be seen with naked eye.

After tomorrow night, the traveller of the skies can be seen for several days until about July 1, when it will disappear over the southern horizon.

MEMBERS HOLD SUCCESSFUL PICNIC

Two Members Presented With Reading Lamp on Wedding Anniversary.

EAST EMILY, June 18.—The members of Bethel United Sunday School held their annual picnic on Wednesday afternoon, June 15, in Mr. Evans Storey's grove, on the fourth line of Emily.

The weather being in favour for the day, the large crowd present enjoyed a very enjoyable afternoon.

A very pleasant event took place during the afternoon, it being Mr. and Mrs. Moses Ruth's thirty-fifth wedding anniversary. The members of the church wanted in some kind way to show congratulations on their anniversary by the means of presenting them with a reading lamp, gold fountain pen and pencil. Mr. Harry Deyell read the address and Mr. Harry Lowes made the presentation:

June 15, 1927.

Mr. and Mrs. Moses Ruth,

Our Dear Friends.—We your Bethel friends and others take pleasure in reminding you that we have not forgotten that this is the thirty-fifth anniversary of your marriage and we wish to call your attention to the fact that your very faithful service both in our church and community has been deeply appreciated, as secretary of our Sabbath school, for more than thirty-five years as choir leader, and the many ways you have both unstintingly contributed your time and means to the great cause of the Master's work, has been an inspiration to us all, and we deeply realize what a splendid thing it is to have those of stiring example and high standards to help along in the walk of life. It has been our privilege to enjoy the cheery hospitality and genial friendship of your household. In the very ways of neighborly and social intercourse, your earnest devotion to duty, and the hearty interest you have ever manifested have contributed abundantly toward making life comfortable and pleasant in the circle in which we moved.

We do not forget that when we were merriest, your presence added pleasure to the scene, and when sorrow visited our homes your words of consolation and sympathy made the shadow seem lighter. Recollecting the many happy hours, both social and spiritual we have enjoyed together, we ask you to accept this reading lamp, this pen and pencil as a very small token of our good wishes and appretiation of the days gone by. We wish you many more happy anniversaries and pray that we may still enjoy many hours of intercourse and true fellowship as friend with friend.

Signed on behalf of your Bethel friends:—Rev. E. W. Rowland, William Howden, Harry Lowes, Harry Deyell, Milton Sherin.

After the presentation several groups spread the cloth to have supper under the lofty maples after which every one went to the athletic field to enjoy the sports. Bethel Sunday school always has a good list of sports and gives good prizes. This year they had twenty-three events as follows with the winners:

WEDDING BELLS.

CLARKE—IRWIN.

A wedding of interest in university circles took place in Toronto on Tuesday evening, June 21, when Irene Fortune, daughter of Mrs. Martha and the late John Irwin, became the wife of William Henry Clarke, only son of Dr. W. H. Clarke of Lindsay. Dr. Trevor Davies conducted the ceremony, assisted by Dr. S. D. Chown cousin of the groom. Timothy Eaton Memorial Church, decorated with palms, ferns and massed summer flowers, formed a harmonious background for the flower-toned costumes of the bridal party. The bride was given away by her brother, Mr. Cecil Irwin of Quebec. Her period gown of corded white taffeta was fashioned with voluminous skirt, gathered by pepliums to a close-fitting bodice, the simplicity of which was revealed by a wide bertha of real lace. Her long court-train was of taffeta, lined with chiffon over which fell the straight folds of her tulle veil caught into a Dutch cap of rosepoint lace, fastened at the ears with clusters of orange blossoms. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of roses, lily of the valley and forget-me-nots. Long lace mitts and white kid slippers completed the costume. The organdy robes de style of the bridesmaids repeated the flower shade of the decorations. Miss Grace Irwin, her sister's maid of honor, was in green, and Miss Doris Jackson and Miss Muriel Sissons were in pink and blue, respectively. Little Grace Irwin, niece of the bride, was a pretty flower girl. Mr. John Irwin of New York, brother of the bride, supported the groom, and Messrs. Royden Start and Gordon Burns acted as ushers. Dr. Ernest MacMillan played the wedding music, and during the signing of the register, Mrs. Eileen Millet Leowe san. About 90 guests were entertained at the reception, held at the home of the bride's mother, 33 Sherwood Avenue. Dr. Chown introduced Dr. Aidrew Bell of Victoria College, who proposed the toast to the bride. Later the bridal pair left for a motor trip through the Adirondacks and thence to the Maritime Provinces, returning to the city at the end of July. The bride travelled in a smartly tucked, collarless sports ensemble of blush rose kaska cloth, trimmed with sand, and a small crushed hat of rose velvet and sand crochet straw to match.

McMULLEN—WISKIN.

The following account is taken from the Midland "Michigan Republican," of June 25th:

"A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday June 15th, at 9.30 a.m. at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Swarthout, 307 West Indian street, when Miss Helen Marjory Wiskin became the bride of William Alfred McMullen. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Swarthout. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. R. Stevenson of St. John's Episcopal church. The bride was charmingly gowned in white satin crepe with filmy silk overlace and pearl trimmings. A dainty wreath of silver leaves adorned her hair, and her bouquet was composed of bridal wreath and baby breath. Little Seye Swarthout acted as flower girl, carrying a large bouquet of flowers. Immediately after the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served to about 15 friends. The color scheme was in pink and white with a large wedding bell suspended above the table, and pink streamers falling about the table. Mr. and Mrs. McMullen left on a two weeks' trip to Canada. While there they will stay with the brides grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. George Wiskin of 280 Thomas street, Peterborough. The young couple will make their home on West Ellsworth street.'

ANDERSON—INGRAM.

A pretty house wedding took place at eight o'clock last evening at 664 Downie street, residence of William Ingram and the late Mrs. Ingram, when their second daughter, Georgina Hay ("Ina") was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to David Anderson of Peterborough, third son of Mr. and Mrs. William Anderson of Dundee, Scotland. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Wm. Allan, of St. Paul's Presbyterian church, under an arch of yellow and white streamers, centred by a large white bell. Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by Mr. Kinmond.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a lovely gown of corncob yellow georgette trimmed with golden silk embroidery in conventional design. She wore white kid slippers and white silk hose and carried a bouquet of yellow and white roses.

The bridesmaid, Miss Jean Ingram, sister of the bride, was in Saxe blue crepe with accordion-pleated skirt and vestee of pleated peach-colored georgette. She wore black shoes and hose and carried a bouquet of pink roses.

A nephew of the bridegroom, Mr. William Anderson, acted as best man.

After the ceremony, a supper was served to thirty guests, the tables being decorated with white and yellow roses and streamers, and the evening was spent in playing games and dancing.

Mr. and Mrs. Anderson will reside at 664 Downie street.

DEFEATED MRS. HILL.

WIMBLEDON England, June 25.—June 25. Canadian Press. — Betty Nuthall, 16 year old school girl, entered the quarter finals of the women's singles of the Wimbledon lawn tennis tournament to-day, by defeating Mrs. J. Hill.

She disposed of Mrs. Molla Mallory, the United States women's champion, a few days ago.

William T. Tilden and Francis T. Hunter of the United States, became the first pair to reach the quarter finals in the men's doubles when they scored a straight set victory over H. G. aMyes and M. Summersons at 7-5, 6-2, 6-3.

Donald Greig, abandoned his singles match with Karl Koseluh of Czecho-Slovakia because of knee injury. Koseluh thus enters the singles quarter finals.

IN MEMORIAM.

WHATLEY.—In ever loving memory of a dear wife and mother, Lillie Whatley, who departed this life on June 26th, 1925:
In God's stre softly sleeping,
Where the gentle breezes wave,
Lies the one we could not save.
But our love for her is just as deep
As in the hour she fell asleep.

PRINCE EDWARD REMAINS TRUE TO PROHIBITION

Premier James D. Stewart Defeated on Platform of Government Control.

BITTERLY CONTESTED.

A. C. Saunders, Liberal Opponent, Returned With Twenty-three Supporters.

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., June 27 (Canadian Press).—Prince Edward Island remained true to prohibition Saturday when the Provincial Government, headed by Premier James D. Stewart, went down to overwhelming defeat on a platform of Government control of the sale of liquors. Premier Stewart, who won his own seat by the scant majority of 11, will return to the House with a following of five, while A. C. Saunders, his victorious Liberal opponent, who advocated the retention of the Prohibition Act, will have 23 supporters. The result reverses the decision of 1923 when the Conservatives won 25 seats. Only two members of Premier Stewart's administration, both without portfolios, Hon. D. W. P. McMillan and Hon. A. F. Arsenault, survived the avalanche.

Bitter Contest.

The campaign preceding the election was one of the most bitterly contested in the history of the province with the liquor question the main issue. Premier Stewart had proposed the introduction of legislation permitting the sale of liquors to qualified persons by Government stores, on a local option basis, and a strict enforcement of the laws against illicit buying and selling. A. C. Saunders, the Liberal leader, on the other hand, had advocated the retention of the prohibition law with such amendments as "to make it more workable." In addition he proposed a reduction in the cost of liquors used for medicinal purposes, as well as a reduction in the cost of doctors' prescriptions. The Liberal platform was accepted by the temperance alliance, and a strenuous campaign by the prohibitionists who held meetings in practically every hall in the province was a determining factor in the contest.

Grateful to Alliance.

Premier Stewart had no comment to make on the result.

The Premier-elect, A. C. Saunders, stated he was grateful to the Temperance Alliance, the temperance people of the province generally, to many Conservatives who had put principle before party in the contest and had stood so loyally by the Liberals in carrying the prohibition banner to victory. He also paid a tribute to the women of the Province for "the great part they had played in helping to defeat the wet forces."

There was jubilation in the ranks of the Liberals and temperance alliance, members of the latter stating they were proud of the pioneer prohibition province standing firmly by a law which had been in force for over a quarter of a century.

Election Results.

Following are the detailed results, with majorities:

Liberals elected:

Prince County—First District: Gordon 300, Blanchard 360; Second District: Saunders 350, Dennis 250; Third District: Darby 7; Fourth District: Lea 347, Wright 404; Fifth District: Allan 221, MacNeill 80.

TWO BOYS KILLED IN CAR ACCIDENT

Four Men Injured When Automobile Strikes Milk Wagon.

BUFFALO, June 27. — Two children wer killed and four men injured when an automobile and a milk waggon collided on the Lake Shore road, near Hamburg, on Saturday.

The children, William Feli, 12, and Raymond Millick, 14, died en route to the hospital. They had been riding on the rear of the waggon.

The other two occupants of the milk cart, William Husband and William Lyons, both of Blasdell, also were removed to a hospital at Lackawanna, where their condition was reported serious.

Meli A. Belgircio, 21, and Stanley Beji, both of Lackawanna, sustained less serious injuries. Belgircio, driver of the automobile, was arrested on a charge of second degree manslaughter.

The impact smashed the waggon to pieces and killed the horse.

Pope Promises Aid of the Church In Campaign For World Peace Pact

ROME, June 27.—"In order to reach a just and lasting peace it is necessary that the love of peace be deep-rooted in the hearts of men," was a statement made by the Pope in an audience granted Saturday to Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler when the latter brought the conversation to the efforts made by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace to facilitate the conclusion of peace agreements between various countries.

The Pontiff added that any such campaign would have the entire support of the Church which has always done everything possible to prevent conflicts between nations.

Pope Pius and Dr. Butler also discussed libraries, a subject on which the Pope is one of the greatest experts, having been for years librarian at the Ambrosiana Library in Milan. He is familiar with the organization of most of the leading libraries of the world, and especially with the Vatican Library where, however, even today nobody knows exactly all of its contents.

In the afternoon Dr. Butler, speaking to newspaper men, expressed great satisfaction over his visit here. He said he had four objects in coming to Rome:

First—To present his respects to Premier Mussolini and to inform him of the keen interest felt in America over his person and his regime, the development of which is closely watched, attracting the attention of scholars as well as of the masses, it being now understood that it is really a new form of government.

Second—To inform Premier Mussolini of the establishments of an "Italian House" at Columbia University, like the sister houses already existing for Germany, France and Japan, and to show him the designs of "Casa Italiana."

Third—To make agreements for the exchange of librarians between American libraries and the Vatican and Italian libraries in order to compare the organizations with a view to reaching a more perfect system.

Fourth—To popularise the aims and methods of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Premier Mussolini, as well as the Pope, showed the keenest interest in all these points and promised their wholehearted support.

PLANES READY FOR BIG FLIGHT ACROSS PACIFIC

One Will Make Test Flights To-day Before Taking Off.

TWO OTHERS PREPARED.

Times of Leaving on Long Hop Not Given Out Yet.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 27. Canadian Press. — Tested, groomed and ready for the flight, two airplanes, in a three cornered race to bridge the Pacific by air, between here and Hawaii, to-day awaited the zero hour, while the third remained to be tried out before the take off.

The big three engined okker, in which Lts. Lester Maitland and Albert Hegenberger will make the attempt in behalf of the army was being held up until the arrival of Major General M. Patrick, chief of the army air surface, who, a local newspaper says, will be a passenger. He is due here some time to-day.

In Honolulu the navy threw a cloak of secrecy about the preparations of Richard Grace, former naval reserve oficer, whose trans-pacific plane was locked in a guarded hangar at Pearl Harbor, after having made an apparently successful flight yesterday. The time of the contemplated hop-off was not known.

Ernest Smith, civilian flier, had his plane ready for test flights to-day, after working feverishly with a large force of mechanics. By setting a strenuous pace, he expected to complete all preliminaries, and be ready for the take off before sundown today.

Weather Promising.

The weather bureau promises head winds for the take offs either here or in the islands to-day, declaring there will be a fresh east breeze from Hawaii to the half way mark, and a stiff northwest breeze from there to the mainland, with fairly clear weather at this end.

Sun, stars and radio will guide the Pacific flyers. Although wireless will be a large factor in the attempt to be made by Lieutenants Maitland and Hegenberger, the heavens will be their foremost guide. Smith will use a radio, but will not to such an extent as the army fliers. Two radio beacon stations, one here, and one near Honolulu, will form a wireless lane for Maitland and Hegenberger to follow.

Sextants, compasses and a radio set were installed in the navigator's cabin of the plane.

Army plane fully loaded weighs 13,500 pounds; the Smith plane, 4732 pounds.

Lieut. Maitland said he expected to complete flight in about 24 to 27 hours. Smith said he planned on reaching the islands in 24 hours.

The army plane is expected to consume about 30 gallons of gasoline an hour. The smaller competing monoplane is expected to use 13 gallons an hour.

THE WEATHER

TORONTO, June 27.—Pressure is high over the Great Lakes and low off the Atlantic Coast and over the Western Provinces. The weather has been warm in the Western Provinces, fair and comparatively cool in Ontario and Quebec, and unsettled with rain in the Maritime Provinces.

Forecasts—Lower Lakes and Georgian Bay: Moderate winds; fair and a little warmer.

Prominent Canadians In Paris Over Week

PARIS, June 27 (Canadian Press Cable). — Three prominent Canadians, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Speaker of the Canadian House of Commons, Hon. Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Justice, and Hon. Robert Forke, Minister of Immigration, were in aPris over the week-end. Mr. Lapointe arrived from Marseilles on Saturday and left last night for Geneva. He is returning here to speak at a Dominion Day banquet.

Mr. Lemieux, who has just returned from Brittany, will be the guest of honour of the Comite France Amerique at the inauguration of the Maison des Nations Americaines on July 5. Mr. Forke arrived yesterday from Belgium, and is going on to London on Tuesday. The programmes of all three are heavily charged with social engagements.

REVERSION OF SMALL BRIDGES

Province Pays Half the Cost of Bridges Over 20 Feet.

BY-LAW PASSED.

At the conclusion of the County Council's sessions on Saturday Warden Middleton thanked the members for their co-operation and faithful attendance and attention to duty.

The Council availed itself of the new legislation applying to bridges and passed the assenting by-law by which all county bridges of 20 feet and under are reverted to the minor municipalities. Northumberland and Durham Council took similar action at their recent session.

The effect of this amendment is that the Highways Department pays 50 per cent instead of 40 per cent of the cost of building and maintaining county bridges. And this change applies to the longer bridges, as the small ones are returned to the townships and villages.

The provincial assistance for the smaller township bridges of 20 feet and under remains the same at 30 per cent of the cost. The bridges remaining in the county system are those over 20 feet in length, of which half the cost is borne by the Highways Department.

Reeve Smithson said: "It seems to me that this is the best highways legislation we have of late. It can't be any great hardship to any smaller municipality, and as the county will collect more money on the longer bridges it might be that we could afford some help to a minor municipality in a special case."

COMET CLOSE TO-NIGHT.

Will Appear in North-east at Nearest Approach to Earth.

WASHINGTON, June 27.— (Canadian Press.)—After a six year cruise through the heavens, the Pons-Winnecke comet will return to its nearest point to earth to-night. A patch of light travelling a million miles today, in a path three and a half million miles from the earth, is all that will be seen of the comet. It will appear in the north-eastern sky.

Nearly every muscle in the body receives a slight impulse during a sneeze—more than 50 muscles in all.

OCEAN FLIERS PREPARE FOR PACIFIC FLIGHT

Army, Navy and Civilian Aviators Racing Preparations For Conquest.

MANY ENTRIES.

James D. Doyle Prizes Not Into Effect Until After Aug. 15th.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 27 (Associated Press). — Army, Naval, and civilian aviators moved swiftly yesterday preparing for the aerial conquest of the Pacific between San Francisco and Honolulu.

Ernie Smith, the air mail flier who is racing preparations to beat his competitors to the take-off on the 2,400-mile non-stop flight to Honolulu, worked throughout Saturday night to have his plane on the ground at the Oakland municipal airport yesterday for the finishing construction touches and the getaway.

With a staff of nine skilled mechanics and his navigator, Captain C. H. Carter, Smith directed the trucking of the plane from the San Francisco machine shop to the Oakland airport where is the 7,000-foot runway from which the fliers will soar into the sky on their non-stop flight over the Pacific. Smith was forced to abandon his plan to take off for Oakland from Crissey Field because of the ruling of army officials that his plane would not be permitted on the field.

Yesterday the army plane, a giant tri-motored Fokker, was expected to fly from Crissey Field to the Oakland airport and get set for the hop-off, but late yesterday afternoon it became evident that the plane would remain at Crissey Field until Monday or Tuesday. The army plane arrived here on Saturday from San Diego with Lieut. L. J. Maitland and Lieut. A. Hegenberger, who will guide it over the Pacific.

Naval Entry.

At Honolulu, surrounded by all the secrecy afforded by Pearl Harbour Naval Station, Richard Grace, a California aviator, was preparing to carry the colours of his naval friends across the 2,400-mile expanse.

A series of contradictory rumors filtered through the censorship at Pearl Harbour, which indicated that the Grace take-off might be delayed until Tuesday awaiting the arrival of a propeller before he could warm up for his flight.

The $35,000 James D. Dole prizes do not figure in any of the ambitious plans of those who had planes at the water's edge yesterday. Because they are starting before August 15, the time fixed by the Dole committee, the aviators are not eligible for the prize money.

CANADIAN JAILED; CHEATING FRENCH

Promised Emigrants Jobs in Canada—Collected 100 Francs in Advance.

PARIS, June 27. United Press. — John Emile Cooper, hailing from Port Arthur Ont., and giving his age as 43, has been sentenced by the Metz tribunal to six months in prison for obtaining money by false pretences by offering people non-existent jobs in Canada.

Cooper described himself as the European representative of an agency with hundreds of branches throughout Canada. He guaranteed his clients steady jobs in Canada. All they had to do was to pay him a hundred francs in advance. After this nothing materialized and people whom he cheated took action.

Noted Arctic Explorer to Establish First Scientific Station In Far North

WISCASSET, Maine, June 27 (Canadian Press).—Making his eleventh trip in nineteen years of Arctic exploration, Lieut.-Commander Donald B. MacMillan late Saturday sailed out of this picturesque old seaport to establish in Northern Labrador the first scientific station in the far north.

With a flotilla consisting of the well-tried 80-foot schooner Bowdoin, the fishing schooner Radio and the newly constructed 25-foot motor boat Seeko, he sailed down the Sheepscot River 18 miles to Christmas Cove, where the members of the expedition, numbering nearly 30 men, spent Saturday night at anchor and put to sea yesterday.

A stop will be made at Sydney, N.S., and on Tuesday the expedition will sail for Battle Harbor, Labrador. From Battle Harbor, the party will continue northward to Kauk, Greenland, where the first permanent scientific station in the north will be established.

Study of the Punic ruins will be made by Dr. Duncan Strong, of Chicago, anthropologist for the Field Museum. Another member of the party is Kenneth Rawson, son of Frederick H. Rawson, Chicago banker, who is financing the expedition.

The Radio will unload the building materials and equipment for the station, also supplies and provisions for 15 months and return about Steptember . The Radio will return to North Labrador next summer to bring them back and possibly take up a second scientific party for further work, as it is MacMillan's desire to make the station permanent for scientific purposes and for the benefit of future aviation both in that region and trans-Atlantic.

Next summer the men will go on to Baffin Land to further explore the coast and return in September, 1928.

REFORM PLAN WOULD REDUCE HOUSE TO HALF

Only 100 of Reduced Membership Would Be Hereditary Peers.

NOT LOSE RANK.

Changes Would Not Affect Large Number of Peers Anyway.

LONDON, June 27 (Associated Press). — Under the proposed reform of the House of Lords there will be no playing fast and loose with the titles of old England and no stripping of high-sounding names from those who have them. It is true that many titles will become like those of France and perhaps Italy — they won't mean much politically.

The plan is to reduce the House of Lords, numbering 716 peers, to half that size. Only 100 of the reduced House would be hereditary peers, and the 716 who now carry titles would elect 100 of their number to represent them in the Lords. Those not elected would, nevertheless, retain their titles.

From records available at Westminster, the reform will not affect many British peers anyway. Of the 716 peers, 165 have not taken the oath of allegiance to their King during the present Parliament, 200 others attended only one session, and 100 more attended fewer than ten days annually.

The average sitting of the Lords is only three hours daily, and business is often conducted with but a score of peers lounging on the red leather benches of the "Crimson Mausoleum" as the Upper Chamber has been called by its critics.

Among the most interesting aspects of the proposed reform is the effect it would have on the few peers who are intensely interested in public life and who bitterly regretted their compulsory relegation to the Lords from the Commons when titles fell to them.

Under the new scheme, these men, if not elected by their peers to the Upper Chamber, could be elected to the Commons again.

Flags Should Be In Position Early

Decoration of houses with flags and setting up of the merchants' flags not later than Wednesday afternoon is suggested by Ald. Roland Denne.

This would show the city to be preparing for a real celebration, starting on Friday, besides leaving the eleventh hour free for other preparations.

ARMY DESERTIONS SERIOUS PROBLEM

Many Men Leaving the U. S. Forces—One Officer Blames Food.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—The desertions problem in the army continues serious. There has been a slight decrease of late generally credited to slowly improving housing conditions, but the number of desertions is still large enough to warrant serious attention. This was discussed by the conference of general officers recently held here, but no definite solution was reached.

An officer on duty here, who entered the army as an enlisted man, and is now a major attributes most of the desertions to poorly prepared food and lack of proper variety in the daily menus.

Eclipse Fever Grips Britain As First Of Host Starts to Yorkshire District

LONDON, June 27.—The eclipse fever has gripped England.

Yesterday was "Eclipse Sunday" in numerous churches, with sermons from texts like: "The Heavens declare the Glory of God and the firmament showeth His handiwork."

Newspapers, billboards and railroad folders were filled Saturday with advertisements of eclipse festivities, directions for getting to the eclipse area and articles, scientific and pseudo-scientific, about the marvel, which will be visible on Wednesday morning.

And rain is probable. Sir Frank Dyson, Astronomer Royal, who is making great preparation to observe tthe eclipse at Giggleswick, Yorkshire, professes not to be worried over the darksome predictions, since scientific parties similar to his are stationed in no less than eight great centres with ample apparatus to gather scientific data.

But innkeepers, dance hall and moving picture theatre proprietors and others frankly are worried. It was learned that many had taken small sums in rain insurance, the companies charging 10 to 12 per cent. in premiums to protect them against losses if Tuesday night is stormy.

Airplane companies have reported several booking of special excursions from London northward and return, starting before dawn Wednesday and returning after the totality is seen.

GIGGLESWICK, June 27 (Associated Press).—The rush to the eclipse belt already has started. Hundreds of thousands are expected to make trips into the strip of land about thirty-nine miles wide, stretching across Wales and Northern England, where the eclipse will be total. According to advance estimates, 360,000 persons will make eclipse journeys by rail, 175,000 by motor bus, and 160,000 in private automobiles.

Numerous all-night parties and dances are planned in the totality area, to end with journeys to nearby hills early Wednesday morning to watch the moon blot out the sun. Former Premier Lloyd George has arranged an all-night "eclipse party" at his home in Northern Wales.

Observer Comments On Canadian Jubilee

LONDON, June 27 (Canadian Press Cable). — The Observer devoted its main editorial yesterday to Canada's Diamond Jubilee celebration, and concluded that the future will make the Dominion internationally as the past has made her nationally. "The interest her statesmen are taking in immigration from the British Isles shows an impulse to fresh activities is stirring," the paper states.

The Jubilee of Confederation, it points out, passed unnoticed in the agony of war. The Diamond Jubilee, however, would be celebrated in a world whose anxieties are tempered by hope. The Observer continues:

"And if the centenary of Confederation finds mankind in the enjoyment of peace and the prosperity which peace brings, that will be due in no small measure to Canada's own contribution to the needs of civilization."

YORKS GREETED AT PORTSMOUTH

PRINCES MEET BROTHER.

PORTSMOUTH, Eng., June 27. — (Canadian Press).—The Duke and Duchess of York received a warm welcome home upon their arrival here today after a six months' visit to Australia.

Portsmouth harbor was ablaze with flags as the battle cruiser Renown, on which the royal voyage was made, weighed anchor at Spithead and proceeded into the harbor, where the Duke's brothers, the Prince of Wales and Prince Henry, awaited.

Aeroplanes circled above the Renown as she was escorted in by a group of destroyers.

JUBILEE FLOATS BEING ERECTED

Parade Committee's Expert Supervising Work at Armories.

MANY HELPERS.

The erection of the floats for the big parade on the First of July began on Saturday in the Armories, under the personal direction of Mr. Garstang, scenic decorator of Hart House, Toronto. Mr. Garstang has been engaged by the parade committee to supervise the building of the floats here, and even the preliminary erection of some on Saturday shows that he is an expert in this line of work, producing great effect.

A few of the floats were built on the ground, to be lifted on the trucks on the day of the parade, while others were being erected on the trucks with an opening at the front of the framework to allow the cars to pass out this morning for work.

Mr. Garstang is being assisted in his work by members of the parade committee, members of the Kiwanis Club, and other citizens, joining in to make this celebration the greatest ever witnessed in Peterborough.

The Trans-Siberian railway, running from Tcheliabinck to Vladivostok—4,771 miles—is the world's longest railway.

CHIANG ISSUES WARRANT FOR AGENT'S DEATH

Chinese Nationalist Leader Says Michael Borodin Deserves To Die.

HAS BEEN TRAITOR.

Actions Have Damaged Cause of Party, General Declares.

SHANGHAI, June 27.— (United Press.) — A death warrant, signed, sealed and awaiting only actual execution, has been issued by Chang Kai-Shek, moderate Nationalist leader, against Michael M. Borodin, mysterious Communist leader in the Hankow government in China. Chiang disclosed his intention to kill Borodin in an exclusive interview with the United Press.

"Borodin has not long to live," he said when asked what he was going to do about the political adviser of the radical Nationalist government.

"He will never get back to Russia alive. By his selfish, traitorous acts he has irreparably injured the Nationalist cause. For this he shall die."

SEIZED 'FISH'; FOUND LIQUOR

Customs Officials Tells of Discovery in Nova Scotia.

PROBE CONTINUES.

HALIFAX, June 27 (Canadian Press).—Cars of smuggled liquor moving by rail as "fish," "lumber," or "potatoes," absorbed the attention of the Royal Customs Commission at its sitting here today. One of the shipments was of particular interest. H. C. Blair, special Customs Preventive office, described the seizure of a car of "fish" at Truro, N.S., last summer.

The shipment was in a refrigerator car which was marked "No icing required," and it had been shipped by K. M. Crocker, who was dead, to Gorman Brothers, Fish Market, Edmundston, N.S., which did not exist, said Mr. Blair. Investigation of the seized car showed that it contained 148 cases of Scotch whiskey, 114 five-gallon tins of alcohol, 63 two and a half-gallon tins of alcohol, and five cases of Cognac. It moved from Church over Dominion Atlantic Railway.

MOSCOW, June 27 (Canadian Press). — M. Orlov, chairman of the Moscow Department of the Military Tribunal, was wounded to-day by a revolver shot, fired by an unidentified person. The assailant was arrested. The official statement says the attack occurred outside the premises of the Tribunal. The assailant's identity and the motives for his action are under investigation, it adds.

BRITISH HOPES OF AGREEMENT NOT FULFILLED

U. S. Delegates To Naval Conference Not Instructed To Accept Proposals.

WANT TONNAGE LIMIT.

British Favor Scaling Down All Power On 5-5-3 Ratio.

GENEVA, June 27 (Canadian Press).—British hopes that fresh instructions from Washington would enable the United States delegation to come into line with them as regards the questions of limiting the size of capital ships and the size and gun calabre of cruisers had not been fulfilled when the tri partite naval conference began its second week today.

It is emphasized that what the United States is for, is limitation of the tonnage of all auxiliary vessels whereas all that Great Britain has yet proposed is restriction on the designing of future capital ships and cruisers and restrictions as to their armament, with no approximate tonnage limitation yet suggested. The Japanese, who also had a holiday over the week-end, remained silent as to their intentions, but they promised to divulge something about sundown today.

Britain's Proposals Explained

NEW YORK, June 27 (Canadian Press).—All-round scaling down of power without disturbing the 5-5-3 ratio is the aim of the British proposals to the Geneva tri-partite conference on naval disarmament, says a statement issued by Sir H. H. Armstrong, British Consul General, on behalf of Sir Esme Howard, British Ambassador.

The Consul General outlined the British suggestions as follows:

Reduction in the tonnage of capital ships to thirty thousand tons and reduction in the size of guns from sixteen inches to 13.5 inches, with extension of the life of capital ships from twenty to twenty-six years.

Equal start by all Powers in construction of a new 7,500 ton cruiser.

Construction by Great Britain and the United States of fifteen 10,000 ton cruisers.

Agreement upon a reasonable number of large ocean-going submarines.

May Be New Conference.

GENEVA, June 27 (United Press).—A separate naval limitation conference, to be held after the present one, and with France and Italy represented, may be the solution of the present disagreement over Great Britain's insistence on discussing capital ships, not on the tri-partite conference programme.

There was as yet no official indication to-day that such a course was to be adopted but the idea was forming.

Officially the situation was as murky as it was when the conferees adjourned Saturday.

GENEVA, June 27. — Canadian Press. — It was reported though not confirmed, to-day that the Japanese delegation in consequence of fresh instructions from Tokyo, is now disposed to favor the British proposal to discuss at the present naval conference questions concerning capital ships which were settled at the Washington conference of 1922.

OCCUPANTS OF BUGGIES HURT

Two Young People in St. Joseph's Hospital Following Collision.

CAR DRIVER BLAMED.

Four young people in two buggies met with a smash-up on Smith street when they were run into by a Ford car about midnight on Saturday. Both buggies were going east and the car was coming west.

A charge of reckless driving has been laid against Clifford Paton 474 Water street, driver of the car.

Michael Twomey of Ennismore, and Miss Kathleen Mahoney, of Nassau, were both taken to St. Joseph's Hospital as a result of injuries received. Miss O'Brien had a broken wrist and Mr. Twomey was badly cut around the face and his nose broken.

While crossing the Smith street bridge the left front wheel of the auto struck the left front wheel of the buggy, throwing both occupants out. The buggy was badly smashed.

A second horse and buggy were following the first and the auto struck this one also throwing the two occupants, Walter Mahoney of Nassau, and Catherine O'Brien, of 552 Harvey street, out. This buggy was also smashed. Both horses ran away.

The auto, after it struck the second buggy, wheeled around and fell over in the ditch. Edward Suddards, of Benson avenue, was accompanying Paton in the car.

NO ACCORDS YET REACHED AT GENEVA

WANT 3.5 RATIO.

Japanese Believed Wanting Perpetual Peace Treaty With United States.

GENEVA, June 27 (Canadian Press). — The tripartite naval conference, after the first week of negotiations, has brought forth no accords on any subject justifying the convocation of a plenary public session. The British have been pressing for a public meeting, as they wish an opportunity to proclaim publicly their reasons for requesting an examination of the clauses of the Washington Treaty, but both the United States and Japanese delegates think it futile to come together merely to stir differences of opinion, and favour further efforts to reach an agreement on some of the fundamental points in private conversations.

The Japanese are credited with the ambition to fashion some perpetual peace treaty with the United States more direct than the existing four four-Power Pacific pact, but the Japanese delegates refuse to discuss the matter further than to say that the reports on this subject were "greatly exaggerated and speculative."

Japanese interpretations of their naval limitation project have removed many objections to it from the United States' standpoint, the Japanese having officially informed the United States that she wants 70 per cent. auxiliary warships to every 100 per cent. for the United States. This means that Japan demands a ratio of 3.5 instead of 3 as fixed by the Washington conference for capital capital ships. The Japanese also are said to be inclined to abandon their original demand to construct an unlimited number of small submarines —a demand which seems especially to worry the British.

Proposals Same.

But the British proposals remain without change. The British Admiralty's suggestion to reduce the size not only of battleships and aircraft carriers, but also cruisers, which would permit the British to install 6-inch guns on their large merchant vessels, is looked upon with growing repugnance in United States circles.

The United States delegation would like the British to come out squarely and say: "We will accord the United States parity in every type of warship." According to Washington despatches the United States Government will agree to nothing less. The British plan to reduce the size of individual warships will further push the United States naval strength to the vanishing point, the United States delegates are convinced. They consider 10,000-ton cruisers vital for long distance operations, protection of the Panama Canal and general defence, in view of the paucity of United States naval bases compared with the British, who have four bases within striking distance of the coast of the United States.

Many of those who are following developments would not be surprised if before long the British delegates suggested total cruiser tonnage figures considerably higher than the maximum contained in the United States project, which is 300,000 tons. Such a suggestion, many believe, would be merely a bid for an accelerated naval race in this type of warship.

Disturbed by Reports.

The British delegation are considerably disturbed over printed reports that they have characterized the United States proposals as insincere and merely due to "political by-play" by Washington, and they have issued a denial of this. Another story going around in Geneva is convinced that the United States will not build up her Navy in any way, whatever may be the outcome of the Geneva conference, and that it is useless, therefore, for the United States to demand parity with Great Britain in the construction of cruisers and the type of warcraft particularly interesting the British Empire.

Singularly enough, it is on submarines that the conference shows the best chances of success, though Britain is almost certain to make a submarine pact conditional upon France and Italy not exceeding the fixed submarine programme.

Never has there been an international conference affecting vital national interests where the press played such a weighty role, or where there has been such frank recognition of the power of the press. During the past week all three delegations have been practically fighting their naval battle in the public prints.

DISCUSS PROBLEMS OF BRITISH EMPIRE

Delegates From British Countries Hold Conference With U. S. Professors.

CHICAGO, June 27. — (Canadian Press.)—The British Empire invaded Chicago last week. Delegates from half a dozen British countries assembled at the University of Chicago to discuss with college professors from every part of the United States the present day problems of the British Empire. Day after day the big assembly hall of the university has been filled with teachers and students and a sprinkling of the general public to hear the delegates present the history and aspirations of the British dominions. Twice a week a round table is being assembled in the evening where the visitors discuss with United States' professors dominion status and constitutional development. Down town one gathering of Chicagoans have met at noonday to hear Sir Cecil Hurst, Great Britain's representative at the Institute on the foreign policy of the empire and similar addresses are being arranged by other members of the party during the next two weeks. The occasion is the annual institute of the Norman Wait Harris memorial foundation in the University of Chicago, which devotes itself to foreign affairs. This year the problems of the British Empire are on the agenda. From Canada John W. Dafoe, editor of the Manitoba Free Press, is lecturing on problems of the dominion and has also conducted a round table discussion on political parties in Great Britain and the dominions.

TWO FISHERMEN DROWNED IN LAKE

PORT ARTHUR, Ont., June 27.— When an old 14-foot punt, in which five men were fishing on Silver Lake, 20 miles east of Port Arthur, gave way and sank, two members of the party failed to reach shore. They were David L. Morgan, 30, married, and William Findley, 36, Fort William unmarried. None of the party could swim except William Bannerman, and he with Frank Fritz and D. Henderson, also of Fort William, managed to reach shore, 75 feet distant.

The bodies were recovered from a few feet of water about 15 minutes later, but first aid efforts were of no avail.

The trail to Silver Lake is through the woods, and, although the accident happened early this morning, it was not until to-night that the bodies reached the city.

SMALL FIRES OVER WEEK END

Two Minor Blazes in Campbellford—Explosion Causes One.

CAMPBELLFORD NEWS.

CAMPBELLFORD, June 27.— The explosion of a gasoline stove at the residence of Percy Hunter ,about 9 o'clock on Saturday night, gave the firemen a little outing. The fire was extinguished before the brigade reached the scene.

At noon yesterday fire was discovered in the millinery shop of Miss Oulton ,on Front street. Oiled rags in the wood box are said to have been the cause. People living overhead claim to have smelled smoke the night before, but did not think it worth while reporting. About $100 is the amount of damage to property and stock ,which is said to be covered by insurance.

Nearly one hundred Burnbrae Presbyterians came over for the anniversary services in St. Andrew's last night.

BYRD'S FLIGHT STILL DELAYED

Expected Now Will Remain Landlocked For Two or Three Days.

ADVERSE WEATHER.

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N.Y., June 27 (Associated Press). — The three-motored monoplane America in which Commander Richard E. Byrd and three companions propose to fly to Paris, will be unable to take off today, and may remain landlocked for a "day or two" because of adverse weather conditions between here and Newfoundland, the United States Weather Bureau in New York informed Commander Byrd yesterday.

The Bureau announced that a detailed report would be completed late last night, but that this report was not expected to change the present outlook for a getaway before Tuesday at the earliest.

The present squalls, which are spread up the coast, struck Roosevelt Field on Saturday night in a sudden fury that destroyed the hopes of Commander Byrd and his flight companions, Pilot Bert Acosta, Lieut. George C. Noville, and Bernt Balchen, for a take-off at dawn yesterday

Grover A. Whalen, vice-president of the American Trans-Oceanic Company, last night issued a statement from Commander Byrd explaining that he had never wavered from his intention of flying only upon the advice of the Weather Bureau.

STILL SEEKING LIGHT ON HOAX

French Government Trying To Find Out How Prisoners Escaped.

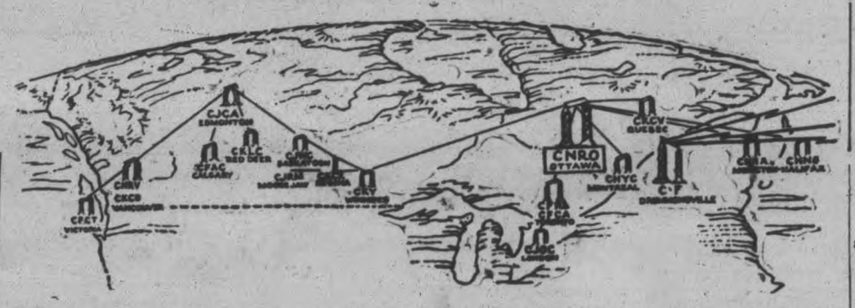
MEN STILL AT LARGE.

PARIS, June 27. Canadian Press.—Leon Daudet, the Royalist leader, and M. Delest, another Royalist, and the Communist Semard, for whose benefit the gates of Sante Prison were opened on Saturday by a hoax, were still at liberty to-day, and the government is working energetically to obtain a clue as to how the wardens were tricked into releasing the three prisoners

A number of witnesses have been examined but no light has been shed on the mysterious hoax, which has caused much laughter at the expense of the government.

Regarding the fake telephone calls which resulted in the release of the prisoners, a morning newspaper asked: "Who says the telephones work badly in Paris? They work so well that in the ministries communication can be obtained, even with persons who are not there."

Broadcasting Canada's Confederation Jubilee



The picture map above gives a comprehensive idea of the most extensive tie-in of radio stations ever attempted in Canada and possibly in the world. The tie-in links 19 radio stations, with CNRO at Ottawa as the key station and Marconi beam station CF at Drummondville which will re-broadcast on a short wave-length to the British Broadcasting Company in England, which in turn will broadcast to European receiving stations. By means of this tie-in of Canadian radio stations the world will hear not only the special Jubilee radio programme on the evening of July 1st, but also will listen to the initial peal of the carillon in the tower of the Parliament Buildings and also to the speeches by the Governor-General, Prime Minister and others. The tie-in involves approximately $3,000,000 of equipment and if undertaken on a commercial basis would have cost approximately $1,000,000 more to establish.

CROPS GOOD AT BURNBRAE

Alfalfa Ready To Cut When Dry—Hot Spell Would Help.

MILK PRICES GOOD.

BURNBRAE, June 27. — Farm crop conditions in this district have often been worse, but have seldom been better than at the present time. While some very low land still shows the effects of the wet, cold spring, the majority of the fields give promise of crops much above the average. Alfalfa is ready to cut, but the continued showery weather has held up operations so that the real rush of haying will not start until the first week of July. Timothy promises a fairly heavy crop, especially new seeding, where red clover and alsike have killed. These clovers are good where stands have been obtained. The sweet clover crop is not generally as heavy as in former years, but the quality will be good. Pasture crops are holding well, though in some cases sweet clover pasture does not show its usual comeback after the first cropping down. This is probably because of the cold, as the weather has never yet been really warm enough for this clover.

The corn crop is nearly all in, and is coming along fairly well in spite of the cold. Really hot weather would give the corn and root crops a boost following the showers of the past week. One crop which is not affected by weather is that of the weeds, which grow splendidly everywhere.

Grain crops are showing up well also. Wheat and rye are filling under the influence of damp conditions, and the spring grains are making rapid strides. Early barley is headed, and in many cases the heavy stands have caused lodging, which will prevent even ripening.

The milk flow at the factories continues to hold up well. Although the cheese prices fluctuate a good deal, local factories paid patrons for May at prices fom 42 to 44 cents a pound fat.

Their expulsion has been asked by the Praisidium of the Central Control Committee, and it appears likely the request will be complied with.

Policemen Carry Dog to His Grave

LYNN, Mass., June 27.— Four policemen in dress uniform acted as bearers yesterday when funeral services were held for Brownie, police dog, who had developed rabies from mongrel animals picked up in the street and temporarily detained in the headquarters' garage. A police surgeon administered cyanide of potassium to end Brownie's sufferings. Soon after death the body was placed in a box and carried by motor patrol to the city burying ground, where the four policemen stood by with heads uncovered. The dog was four years old and had been attached to the division for three years.

NEW PASTOR IS INDUCTED

Rev. Ernest Harston Takes Charge of United CHURCH.

AT CAMPBELLFORD.

CAMPBELLFORD, June 27.—With a prayer for God's blessing upon those shut away behind prison bars, and an earnest plea that men would be found to give them a chance when coming out into a new liberty, the Rev. Ernest Harston, LL.B., began his first Sunday evening's service as pastor of St. John's United Church.

Taking for his texts, Acts 13, 36: "For David after he had served his generation by the Will of God, fell on sleep"; and Luke 22, 27: "I am among you as one that serveth," the preacher's theme was that of service as the true meaning of life History, said the speaker, has a supreme contempt for men who live for themselves The great dynamic behind the efforts of our forefathers was not self, but service The life of the Mother is a life for others: a life of service, the ideal life

Before Jesus came, said the pastor, men had very crude ideals of God. Jesus came in the form of a servant, came "not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Jesus has the supreme right to sit on the throne of your heart, because he has served.

There is no man in this church that loves a good time more than I do, said the speaker, but we have no right to have a good time without God. Referring to the selfish life, he said, Jesus held up these lives and damned them.

Dealing with Wealth, Power and Self Culture as some of the ideals of life, the speaker urged upon his hearers to come out of themselves and to help others; to life the burden; to spend and be spent To let the motive that dominates all their efforts be that of service. Life, concluded the speaker, is a chain that reaches from Eternity to Eternity.

The Rev. Mr. Harston has a pleasant personality, a powerful manner in the presentation of his subject, and he seems to be possessed of very strong desire to be of service to others.

Clemenceau Breaks Silence to Reporters

PARIS, June 27. — (United Press.)—Breaking his usual silence towards news reporters, George Clemenceau, war-time premier of France, replied yesterday to the question of a woman reporter for Le Journal why he has refused to deliver an acceptance speech at the Academy of France, to which he was elected many years ago. "My reasons regard only myself," he told the reporter, "but I've lived my life, hence can tell you in confidence. Here they are

"My one principal has been that one must never say how one feels, nor what he knows nor how he sees things. That's why I won't address the Academy."

FINE SERMONS ANNIVERSARY AT ST. ANDREW'S

Rev. Dr. Stewart, of Belleville, Preaches at Campbellford Church.

LARGE ATTENDANCE.

Special Music Splendidly Rendered at Both Services.

CAMPBELLFORD, June 27. — The anniversary services at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church yesterday drew record attendances, both morning and evening. The services were conducted by the Rev. Dr Stewart, of Belleville, and the special singer was Miss E. Meiklejohn.

At the morning service Dr. Stewart took for his text Luke xviii., 1: "Men ought always to pray." "Religion," said the speaker, "is an old-fashioned thing." There are complaints these days that it is not modern enough, and all kinds of popular stunts are brought in to bring it up to date. These are all out of keeping for life is old-fashioned, love is old-fashioned, the world is old-fashioned — "even from everlasting to everlasting. Thou art God." The wise man said there is nothing new under the sun.

The soul of religion, said the preacher, is in the realm of prayer. Abraham's servants on the wilderness bowed down to pray by the camel's side. Methods of transportation have changed. It is a far cry from the camel to the modern car. How many men, asked the speaker, pray by the side of their car? God doesn't change, prayer doesn't change. The great verities in life do not change.

Isaac prayed in the field, and Jacob by the running brook. They couldn't help but pray. God's great open spaces are still here. By the narrowness of the life we live are we closing up the open spaces?

Jeremiah prayed in a dungeon, but it told in the life of a great people. There are many schemes for celecrating the Diamond Jubilee. Have we ever thought of celebrating it by prayer?

Prayer is a continual supplication to God. Daniel prayed in the den of lions. Hate and malice had thrown him there. He prayed and the lions' mouths were shut. Hezekiah prayed with his face towards the wall, and he became one of Israel's greatest kings. Jesus prayed on the mountain and in the garden, and emerged with His face smiling.

In the evening Dr. Stewart spoke from Luke ii., 44, and stated that religion was not a matter of supposing, but was the most vital thing in life. Religion has seen business come and go. Religion, said the speaker, is more important than physical life.

Men treat religion lightly, they say it is something for women and children and old folks. I challenge you, said the speaker, to stand in the place of one of the fathers we have been singing about.

Men say they can't be bothered with religion. Religion has never bothered anyone—it's the lack of religion that bothers you. If you are only worshipping the god of supposing, you have no god at all. God only lives in the land of reality. Christ isn't where you suppose He is, but where you know Him to be. When you are living in a land of supposition you are living in a fool's paradise.

Your religion is the most vital thing in your life. "I know in whom I have believed."

The musical contribution to the service, under the leadership of Mr. Pearson, was excellently given and was as follows:

Morning service:

Solo — "My Faith in Thee," Mr. Russell.

Solo—'Resignation,' Miss E. Meiklejohn.

Anthem—"Your Lord and King Adore."

Evening service:

Solo—"Crossing the Bar," Miss Meiklejohn.

Anthem—"Crosses in the Field."

Solo—"He Loves Me Still," Mr. Russell.

Anthem—"Blow Ye the Trumpets in Zion."

OLD MASTERS

For I dipped into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the Vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be;

Saw the heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down with costly bales;

Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies grappling in the central blue;

Far along the world-wide whisper of the south wind rushing warm,
With the standards of the peoples plunging through the thunder storm;

Till the war drum throbbed no longer, and the battle flags were furled
In the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World.

There the common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber wrapped in universal law.

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

Women have a great way of borrowing clothes from men—not actually asking leave to wear a brother's knickers or a husband's sweater, but borrowing fashion ideas from the wardrobes of the sterner sex.

As a rule when they first borrow some masculine garment they wear it for a time in rather masculine guise. Take the dinner jacket which two seasons ago really did look like a man's black tuxedo. But the sequin-covered or lame dinner jackets that some women incorporate in their dinner frocks now bear no resemblance whatever to the somber garment which first inspired them.

So it is that overblouses, jumpers, slip-on blouses, etc., that women wear at the present time might be traced back to a masculine prototype. It was back some time in the nineties that women hit upon th bright idea of wearing separate wasits copied after men's shirts. They called them shirtwaists and at first they were made with the conventional stiff cuffs and collars—very much like those worn by men.

The shirtwaist went through a number of changes. It appeared as the lingerie blouse. It was made with short sleeves, long sleeves and no sleeves at all—with high collars, attached collars, detachable collars, convertible collars, scarf collars, and no collars. For some years there was a chance that it would go out of fashion entirely but still it persisted because a certain minority of women still felt that there was something convenient in wearing, occasionally, a separate skirt and blouse.

Now, in this spring of 1927, the separate blouse has returned—favored of course by the fact that the tailored two-piece suit again finds favor in the eyes of women. There is no end to the variety of these new blouses—lace blouses, linen blouses, cotton blouses, metal brocade blouses sweater blouses blouses buttoned down the front and blouses that slip on over the head. But the rather simply designed blouse of crepe de chine or some other washable or easily cleaned silk—untrimmed usually save for tucks or pleats—has so far proved to be the most popular choice of well-dressed women when in search of a blouse to wear with the tailored two-piece suit.

Health of Baby First Concern of Duchess

PORSTMOUTH, Eng., July 27th—(United Press.)— "How is she?" a Royal mother asked today.

Her motherly solicitude for her 14 months old baby coming to the fore, the beautiful young Duchess of York asked that question anxiously of the Prince of Wales as, with the Duke of York, she landed at Portsmouth to-day after their six months' voyage to Australia. Echoes of the twenty-one gun salute that greeted their arrival on the battle cruiser were ringing in her ears mingling with the hooting of steamship and factory whistles and the cheers of thousands of people who had awaited her and her husband since early morning.

The Duchess' smiles were gracious and she shouted her happiness in being back home, but it was obvious that for her the home-coming programme was divided into two parts—before and after she saw the baby, Princess Elizabeth, a possible future queen of England.

SAINT and SINNER

By ANNE AUSTIN

Faith and Bob looked at her, rigid wit hanger and amazenment, as Cherry stood just inside the door, her light coat—a beautiful coat that Ralph Cluny's money had paid for the autumn before—falling open to show the crumpled little gold colored georgette dress that scarcely covered the dimpled caps of her knees. Her hat was in her hand, her bright copper-and-gold curls tousled as if swift winds had rushed through them. Her cheeks were flying flags of excitement, her round, red mouth still parted over the laughter with which she had bidden her escort good night, her golden eyes wide, blazing, triumphant.

"Waiting up for me, you funny old dears?" she challenged them, in a voice electric with excitement, "I thought I'd give you two an evening to yourself. Heavens knows you've hinted often enough that you'd like one! Enjoy it?"

"Cherry!" Faith's strangled cry preceded her jerky rising from the couch where she had been huddling in fright. "Where in the world have you been? We've been worried sick about you—" She walked toward her sister stiffly, her limbs still tremulous with relief and anger, then she reached out her arms in a sudden, overpowering rush of tenderness.

"Funny Faith!" Cherry gurgled. "I'm a grown-up woman, darling. Don't be an idiot! I simply went shopping, ran into Selma Pruitt, accepted her invitation to dinner, then went dancing with George Pruitt. Is there anything so terrible about that?"

"Come to bed, Faith," Bob rose and stretched with an elaborate pretense of unconcern.

Cherry's small body stiffened, anger darting like sparks of fire from her golden eyes. "So I'm in disgrace, am I, Mr. Bob Hathaway! Trying to turn my own sister against me, aren't you? I'd like to know what business it is of yours if I choose to enjoy myself for one evening? God knows I've been sickeningly good since Thanksgiving Day! It's the first time I've danced in public—"

"So you danced in public, did you! And expecting a baby in just four months! I thought you had better sense," Bob answered her, his voice clipped and stern. "It may not be any of my business, Cherry, but from now until after the baby is born you're going to do no more dancing. Come along, Faith."

"I'm going to help Cherry get ready for bed," Faith answered in a small, low voice. It was the first time she had defied her husband, the first time she had pitted herself with Cherry against him, in even the smallest difference of opinion.

She did not dare look at him as she preceded Cherry to the little bathroom at the end of the hall, the bath that belonged to Cherry and Joy alone. Her body still felt stiff and queer as she bent to turn on the hot watter, as she spread the gay little bath mat for Cherry's feet, as she arranged towels and soap for Cherry's convenience.

As Faith turned blindly away from her tasks of love, Cherry flung herself against her sister's breast, clung to her shoulders. "Don't hate me, Faith! I had to have one last fling! I just had to! I couldn't go on living— like this— just waiting— for something—I don't want—oh, it isn't fair! I'm tricked! I'm tricked! Save me, Faith! Do something! I tell you I can't bear it to be a mother! I'll hate—it! Oh! Oh!" Her voice was rising on a crescendo of terror and shame; the nails of her tiny hands dug into Faith's shoulders.

Uncle Wiggily

To-day's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY AND BUNTY'S SLIPPER.

(Copyright, 1927, McClure Syndicate.)

Once upon a time Baby Bunty was allowed to go out of the Hollow Stump School early and ahead of all the other animal boys and girls.

"For you have been a good little orphan child," squeaked the Lady Mouse School Teacher, "and I want to reward you. Run along and play!"

"Thank you," spoke Baby Bunty, politely.

"But I suppose, on account of being let out of school early and all alone," went on Miss Mouse, "you will have no one with whom to play until I let some of the other pupils out."

"Oh, I'll have somebody to play with, all right!" laughed the mischievous orphan rabbit. "I'll go find Unkie Wig an' make him p'ay wif me!" and Bunty wrinkled up her nose as she said this baby talk, which she sometimes dropped into just for fun.

"Well, have a good time," chuckled Miss Mouse, as she went back to her class room. Baby Bunty skipped over the fields and through the woods, peering this way and that way until she saw Uncle Wiggily hiding behind a sassafras bush.

"Boo! Boo!" cried Baby Bunty, running softly up behind the rabbit gentleman and tapping him on the shoulder with her paw. "Three times Boo!"

"Oh, it's you, is it?" exclaimed Mr. Longears hopping up in the air and whirling around.

"Who did you think it was?" laughed Baby Bunty.

"I thought perhaps you were an adventure," answered Mr. Longears, smiling. "I have been hiding here waiting for one a long time."

"I'm sorry I'm not an adventure," Bunty said. "But maybe if you take me where I want to go we'll find one."

"Where do you want to go?" asked Mr. Longears.

"To the banana store," Bunty replied. "I want to buy a nice, ripe banana to eat."

"Come along then," invited the rabbit gentleman. "We may as well go there as anywhere else."

So they hopped to the four and five cent banana store, where Baby Bunty picked out a fine, fat one, and then the old dog gentleman, who owned the store, sort of barked softly and said: "Well?"

"Oh, yes, I'm well, thank you, and so is Uncle Wiggily, too," said Bunty politely.

"Well, who's going to pay for that banana?" barked the dog, for Bunty made no motion of handing over any money.

"Unkie Wig is goin' to pay," said Bunty, peeling down the skin.

"What?" cried the rabbit gentleman in surprise. "I thought you said you wanted me to come to the store with you while you bought a banana, Bunty?"

"Well, I did buy it, Unkie Wig, but I didn't say I was going to pay for it!" chuckled Bunty. "You can do that!"

"Oh, you are a tyke!" sighed Mr. Longears, but he smiled as he paid for the yellow fruit. Then he and Bunty hopped along, the little rabbit girl eating her banana.

"Don't throw the skin on the path," Uncle Wiggily warned her.

"Why not?" Bunty wanted to know.

"Because some one might slip on it and fall."

"Oh," said Bunty, as she kept on eating the banana. And then she asked, all of a sudden: "Can you hop fast, Unkie Wig?"

"Why, yes, Bunty, I'm a pretty fast hopper," was the answer.

"Then you'd better begin to hop fast and so had I!" cried the little rabbit girl, "for here comes the Bob Cat after us!"

Looking behind him, Uncle Wiggily saw, truly, that the bad chap was loping along after him and Bunty. So they began to hop very fast. But the Bob Cat ran fast also and he had almost caught up to Uncle Wiggily and Bunty, when, all of a sudden, that Bob Cat fell down ker floppie O ker bunk!

"Ha! Ha!" laughed Baby Bunty as the Bob Cat howled over his bumped nose. "Ha! Ha!"

"What made him stumble and fall?" asked Uncle Wiggily as he and the little orphan rabbit girl hopped safely on.

"It was my slipper," said Bunty.

"Your slipper, child?"

"Yes, my banana slipper!" chuckled Bunty. "I dropped a piece of banana skin where the Bob Cat stepped on it and he slipped! And, oh, didn't he fall funny! Ha! Ha!"

"He certainly did!" said Mr. Longears. "You are a clever little tyke!"

So it all happened for the best.

HOROSCOPE

The Stars Incline, but do not Compel.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1927.

(Copyright, 1927, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

This should be a fortunate day, according to astrology. Venus, Neptune and the Sun are all in benefic aspect.

Women have a good direction of the stars, making for a keen sense of duty and a conscientious attitude toward all their affairs.

There is a sign of fair promise for brides who take the vows under this rule of the stars, for they are likely to meet with no deception on the part of their husbands.

All love affairs are supposed to be subject to favorable conditions while this rule prevails.

The summer will bring about an extraordinary number of marriages, the seers foretell, for engagements made under the magic of summer will be unusually binding this year.

Theatres and places of amusement should benefit today when national interest will be keen in all forms of recreation.

Financial matters should be satisfactory to many persons not hitherto opulent. The seers prognosticate tremendous prosperity that includes the farmers.

Again astrologers call attention to the tendency toward extremes that marks world conditions. The best and the worst that life can give will be experienced this year, it is prophesied.

Despite health campaigns there may be much illness in certain cities and regions this summer, it is forecast. Many fevers are foreshadowed.

Diet and exercise now should occupy more than usual attention, for the stars presage much activity for physicians and surgeons.

Persons whose birthdate it is have the augury of a lucky year, but they must not speculate.

Children born on this day probably will be successful and able to command firm friendship. They may be tempeted to do foolish things and should be taught mental balance.

Y.W.C.A. ACTIVITIES.

This week at the Y.W.C.A. will be a busy one.

Many preparations are being made for the first of July celebration. There is the "Y" float for the parade, also many "Y" girls are practising for the water sports programme, and are giving a club swinging drill at the afternoon performance.

High Tea—An especially attractive and appetizing tea will be served at the Exhibition Grounds July 1st. The Manufacturers' building has been secured as the tea room and this means plenty of room and protection from sun and rain. The social and tables committees convened by Mrs. H. R. H. Kenner and Mrs. H. Beal, have spared neither time nor money to make this tea as attractive as the Y.W.C.A. annual garden party teas. Tickets may be secured from members of the Board of Directors or at the Y.W.C.A. As the number of tickets is limited friends are advised to secure their tickets early this week. Price 50 cents. The tea is under the auspices of the Swimming Pool committee and the proceeds will be used for this department.

Swimming.— The main activity at the "Y" these months is swimming. There are classes for babies, juniors, junior boys, school girls, business girls and ladies. Special attention is called to the ladies' class which meets Tuesday, Thursday and Friday mornings. All grades of swimming are taught and the proficiency of Y.W.C.A. swimmers is proof of the value of these classes. Those who can swim are recommended to join the advanced or life saving classes. 'Phone Y.W.C.A. 223, for full particulars of classes.

Outdoor Club.—This club will meet at the Y.W.C.A. on Tuesday at 6 p. m. for a hike and camp fire supper. The picnic down the river has to be cancelled as a boat cannot be secured. Every girl is invited to come and enjoy a good time.

Tennis and Croquet.—Members of the Y.W.C.A. are invited to use the lawn for tennis or croquet if they wish.

Special Practices.—Girls in the club swinging exercises for the First of July celebration are asked to come to a practice to-night at 6.15 p.m. and girls for special diving class at 8.30.

Truly Wholesome

A baking powder may be a fairly efficient leavening agent and yet contain ingredients that make it unwholesome. If you use any baking powder containing alum, food products baked with it are apt to have a bitter taste, and, according to scientists, will not be good for the health. Far better to use a truly wholesome baking powder, even if it does cost a few cents more per can.

Magic Baking Powder "contains no alum"

Nor has it any other harmful ingredient. It contains only phosphate, starch and soda—all of the very finest grades, expertly blended. It never adds a bitter taste to the nice things you bake, but makes them light, white and truly wholesome. Insist on "Magic" and refuse all substitutes.

Women's Hygienic Mistakes

Being ended—New way discards like tissue

By ELLEN J. BUCKLAND
Registered Nurse

BECAUSE one woman told another, and because doctors and nurses so urged, millions of women are discarding old-time sanitary ways for the new way called Kotex.

First, you discard Kotex as easily as tissue. No laundry, no embarrassment.

Five times as absorbent as ordinary cotton pads, it enables one to wear sheerest frocks and gowns without slightest fear of embarrassment. Also deodorizes, thus ending all danger of offending.

Eight in every 10 better-class women employ it. Once you use it you'll never again dare the uncertainty of old ways.

Obtain at any store simply by saying "Kotex." Box contains 12. Be sure you get the genuine. Only Kotex itself is "like" Kotex.

"Harmless to Everything Except Dirt"

"When I think of those who, out of not knowing, still do not use LUX, I could shout its merits from the housetops. For we have found LUX effective and economical and harmless to everything but dirt.

For cleaning surfaces of wood, metal or glass, and for washing every kind of fabric, from coarsest to finest - the result is the same - it is the perfect cleanser.

And, its innumerable uses! Dad and the boys use it in the bath for shampooing... We use it for bathing the Pomeranian too... I could write a book on the subject - I'll never forget the day our grocer recommended LUX."

THE EXHIBITION GROUNDS.

Peterborough is very fortunate in having available the splendid accommodation of the Exhibition Grounds for the major part of its Diamond Jubilee programme.

Indeed were it not for this fine park with its ample space and its commodious grandstand it would have been impossible to stage several of the most important features of the celebration.

Thanks to the public-spirited and generous assistance of the Morrow family and the enterprise and driving power of the Industrial Exhibition Board, Exhibition Park is still at the service of the people of Peterborough, but the feeling is becoming more and more pronounced that this splendid property should have long since been acquired by the city so that it would be permanently available not only for Exhibition but other public purposes for which it is so completely suited.

Few cities in Ontario have such a splendid grounds, and it would be a pity indeed if eventually the property were to be broken up for other uses and Peterborough were to find itself without a gathering point for such events as the celebration to be held this week.

THE POLICE ARRANGEMENTS.

Excellent arrangements have been made by the Police Department in connection with the handling of the crowd and of traffic during the Diamond Jubilee events, and it is hoped that the police will have general co-operation in carrying out the measures adopted for the protection of the public.

It should be noted that George street from Smith street to King street and Murray street from Aylmer to George street will be closed to motor traffic until the jubilee parade has been assembled and has passed down to the Exhibition Grounds.

Motorists who have no official connection with the parade would do well, therefore, to remain away from the Central Park section while the business of getting the long procession in order is being carried out.

A parade of this kind, by far the largest Peterborough has ever known, will not be easily handled, and it is essential that those in charge shall not be hampered by unnecessary automobiles.

Spectators on George street during the parade are requested to remain on the sidewalks in order that the procession may be seen to best advantage.

LINDBERGH'S JUBILEE VISIT.

Canadians, already warm admirers of Colonel "Lucky" Lindbergh, are now ready to put the hero of the Atlantic flight on a still loftier pedestal as the result of the readiness with which he has accepted the invitation of the National Committee to fly to Ottawa for the Diamond Jubilee.

Lindbergh, acclaimed as America's ambassador of the air, will bring to Canada's capital the best wishes of our neighbors.

No other envoy that the United States might have selected would have meant so much as this gallant young flyer whose modesty has captivated all hearts and whose daring has thrilled all imaginations.

Canadians living outside of Ottawa will envy the people of the Federal capital the spectacle that will be their's as "Lucky" Lindbergh swoops down from the clouds carrying to Canada the greetings of a nation alongside of which we have lived in peace and harmony almost double the period of Confederation.

Lindbergh may be sure that the reception that Ottawa will give reflects the admiration and affection of nine million Canadians in all parts of the Dominion.

The message of the United States will be all the more appreciated by the people of Canada because of the personality of the messenger.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL BEATEN.

The wet tide that has been inundating Canada and that threatened to cover the whole country has been temporarily at least checked.

The electors of Prince Edward Island have refused to follow the example set them by the people of Ontario and have rejected a system of Government control, the Conservative government of Premier Stewart being swept out of office.

Evidently believing that public opinion in the Province favoured a more lenient handling of the liquor problem, Mr. Stewart, whose party had won a complete triumph at the last election, proposed a system of Government sale as we have it in Ontario and went to the country.

The liquor question was the only issue of importance in the campaign, and the Liberal party, which opposed Government control but promised a referendum on the question two years hence, won twenty-four out of thirty seats.

The result was a surprise to Ontario people whose forecast of the election was that Prince Edward Island would swing into line with the six Government control Provinces and abandon the system of prohibition in effect there.

Their diagnosis of the situation was as far astray as that of Premier Stewart, who pinned the hopes of his Government to a Government control policy, and now finds his administration completely shattered.

The victory of the dry forces will do much to strengthen Canadian prohibitionists after a series of crushing blows.

GETTING SQUEAMISH.

(From Toronto Saturday Night)

The ancient spectacle of Satan rebuking sin is again to be seen in the outcries of the Moscow Soviet and its press over the killing of one of its pet assassins, Peter Volkoff, at Warsaw by a young Russian student of monarchist sentiments. There is small attempt to deny that Volkoff was the Commissiar primarily responsible for the murder in cold blood of the late Czar and his family. The evidence issued in Russia itself showed that in order to make the dastardly work complete Volkoff had arranged for supplies of gasoline to effect a speedy burning of the bodies. It was this horrible monster whom the Soviet forced on Poland as envoy against the protests of that nation. In fact, the Soviet claims the right to force on other countries creatures whom no decent person would associate with, or no decent nation tolerate except under compulsion. And the Moscow Government is now very busy playing the tactics with regard to Poland of the wolf who accused the lamb of muddying the stream.

That one Russian should kill another owing to political differences is not an isolated phenomenon. It is the kind of thing that has been going on in Eastern Europe so long as the memory of any living man goes back. The Russian revolutionary party for generations has inculcated the idea of political assassination as a pious and worthy enterprise. The tolerance of homicide has always been one of the defects of Russian jurisprudence. Anyone who has read Dostievsky's "Crime and Punishment" knows that murder of the most cowardly description was regarded in a less reprehensible light than we of British blood regard forgery. The madman Lenin was very much coddled by the Czarist regime of the nineties after he became known as a dangerous revolutionary. He was sent to a game paradise in Siberia (according to the testimony of his own wife), where he might exercise his love of slaughter on partridges and ducks, and was given a small pension to live on. Once he became all-powerful, he gratified his lust for slaughter by compassing the deaths of over three million fellow-Russians of different opinion. But today the act of one Russian student very probably bereaved the deaths of scores of friends and relatives during the Russian Terror is magnified into a great international conspiracy. It is described as the focus of a plot by Great Britain and all the western nations against the Russian worker. The attempt to drag in Great Britain in connection with an episode typical of centuries of Russian history shows what insolent and childish guttersnipes the Moscow beggars on horseback really are.

THE PUBLIC PLAYING FIELDS MOVEMENT.

The recent act of His Majesty the King in setting aside for the use of the public as playing fields certain lands attached to Hampton Court Palace which have been in the possession of the Royal Family since the days of Henry VIII., was one worthy of him and illustrative of the interest in the welfare of his subjects which he consistently practises.

Later months have seen the beginning of a movement in the Old Land, under the patronage of the Duke of York, which would create a larger number of playing fields for the free use of the public. This is one of the crying needs of the moment. There are plenty of private playing spaces, patronized by the wealthy and by the middle classes, but for the working classes and the poor a decreasing number, owing to their gradual elimination to provide for buildings. The National Playing Fields Association has thus sprung into being and the act of the King in handing over to it a section of Hampton Court Park is his contribution to the movement.

That celebrated paragrapher, "Kappa," who writes in The London Nation and Athenaeum, hopes that the lead which the King has given will be followed by other landowners. The scheme of the National Playing Fields Association strikes him as being "thoroughly sound." "The appeal," he says, "gives the country a chance to do a piece of bare social justice. It is iniquitous that while the middle classes have every facility for playing games that they desire, the mass of the workers and their children should be not only starved of playing fields, but constantly deprived by the spreading curse of bricks and mortar of such open spaces as exist. Over £600,000 is spent yearly on golf balls alone, and over £750,000 on cartridges for sporting guns. But it is the hardest thing in the world, as all club or settlement workers know, to save a bit of ground in or near a town for team games for the poorer boys and girls. The association has carefully surveyed the country, and finds a lamentable lack of fields, not only in the industrial areas, but in the country, where much land is wasted. Five acres of playing fields for every 1,000 of the population has been laid down as a minimum standard, and it seems quite reasonable. It is estimated that four million elementary school children have no chance whatever of playing team games anywhere but in the street. I think myself that the comfortable classes should seriously set themselves to redress this wrong—one of those wrongs that are so familiar and patent that it is overlooked. This million pounds would pay a high rate of interest in health and contentment—and would be justified as an insurance."

There is a lesson in this for Canada which, although now generously provided with playing space and lacking the congestion of the Motherland, may not always have these advantages. In every community, particularly those which are growing rapidly, provision should be made before it is too late for the establishment of public playing fields to serve the increasing population. Leaving this subject until land values have risen and until buildings have begun to encroach upon the available space will only result in a much larger expenditure becoming necessary in the future. His Majesty the King is to be congratulated upon having led the way for other British landowners to follow.—Brockville Recorder and Times.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

With school out and the Diamond Jubilee in sight, the youngsters of Canada wouldn't trade places with anybody on earth.

Evidently Premier Stewart of Prince Edward Island is not in the same class as Premier Ferguson when it comes to judging public opinion.

The returns from Prince Edward Island indicate that prohibition, after being battered to the ropes, is staging a rally.

That grant of $1,000 toward a new cattle barn show that the County Council appreciate what the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition is doing for agriculture.

This will be a week of hard work for those on the jubilee committees, but it should wind up in three wonderful days for everybody.

Only 100,000 liquor permits had been issued in Ontario up to the end of last week, but it would be hard to convince the staffs of the Government stores that the number was not bigger than that.

OUR BOARDING HOUSE — By Abern

A Thought For To-day

NOT THE GREATEST FACTOR.

There are times when conditions or circumstances compel us to keep cool and wait for the change that is sure to come.

The idea of getting all excited and then fighting against great odds is proof that you are game, but fighting has not been the greatest factor in success.

CATTLE, GRAIN AND PRODUCE

Peterboro—Toronto—Montreal

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, June 27 (Canadian Press).—The export trade in grain in the Montreal market Saturday was quiet owing to the limited demand from foreign buyers, and exporters only worked a few odd loads of wheat on the decline at Winnipeg.

There was some demand for oats from local buyers in the domestic market and sales of odd fair sized lots were made. Spot prices were steady. The market for corn was weaker on account of the further break in value at Chicago, and spot prices for car lots were reduced 2½c per bushel. American sample corn was quoted at $1.60½ and Argentine corn at 99½c per bushel, ex-store.

The demand for Spring and Winter wheat grades of flour was quiet, but prices were unchanged.

A fair amount of business was done in most lines of millfeed and values were steady. The undertone to the market for standard grades of rolled oats was easy in sympathy with the recent weakness in prices for raw material, ut there was no change in prices. The demand was steady.

An active business was done in all grades of eggs and the undertone was strong. The receipts were 1,467 cases.

There were no new developments in the butter situation, prices being steady under a quiet demand. The receipts were 4,990 packages.

The local and export trade in cheese was extremely dull and the undertone was easy. The receipts were 10,006 boxes.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Ills., June 27 (Canadian Press).—Hot and sunny weather just right for wheat and corn, gave all the grain markets a decided downward slant Saturday. Wheat closed unsettled, ⅝ to 1c net lower; corn 1⅝c to 2⅛c off; oats at ¼c to ½c decline, and provisions unchanged to a setack of 12c.

With conditions tip-top for progress of the wheat harvest and for helping the corn crop to make an approach again toward normal, general selling of cereals developed early.

Some indications Saturday pointed to a better export demand looming for wheat. One Chicago houses disposed dof 120,000 bushels of red wheat to Europe; the shipment to be taken out of the store in the East. There was talk prevalent also that by the time any new wheat reaches Chicago old stocks promise to be down to small proportions. Predictions of damage soon by wheat and rust in Spring wheat districts were likewise heard, but for at least the time being the well-nigh perfect weather south, west and west was too much for the bulls.

Take Dodd's Kidney Pills Says Mr. H. McPherson

"I have used Dodd's Kidney Pills at different times and would not use any other," writes Mr. H. McPherson, 1139 Winnipeg Avenue, Winnipeg. "On one occasion I woke up in the morning and could hardly get out of bed because my back was so bad. I sent for a box of Dodd's Kidney Pills and before I had taken the first box, my sore back had gone, and I have never been troubled since."

Dodd's Kidney Pills have built up their reputation as a kidney remedy by the relief they give.

ANDY COHEN DAY IS CELEBRATED AT BUFFALO

READING WINS 8-7.

Jersey City Takes Both Ends of Double Header From Orioles.

NEW YORK, June 27.—(Canadian Press).—Andy Cohen Day, in honor of the league's leading swatsmith, was celebrated at Buffalo yesterday with the Bisons and Maple Leafs in a division of the double bill. Both contests were decided by a single run with Toronto bagging the opener, 4 to 3, and the Bisons reversing the tables in the seven-inning second fracas, 6 to 5. Bill Huber won the second game for the Bisons with two smashing doubles. Del Bissonette smashed his thirteenth and fourteenth home runs to take the league leadership in this department. Cohen was presented with a handsome diamond ring and a floral horseshoe by local admirers.

Jersey City took both ends of a doubleheader at home, conquering the Baltimore Orioles by score of 6 to 5 and 3 to 2. In both instances the game was won in Jersey City's last time at bat. In the second inning of the nightcap Umpire Finnernan was bombarded with popbottles and straw hats when he called First Baseman Monohan of the Jerseys out at the plate. At the end of the game Finnernan was escorted from the field by mounted policeman.

A three-run rally in the eighth inning gave Newark its fourth straight victory at Reading, 8 to 7. The Keys rallied for the counter in the eighth and Davis hit a home run in the ninth but could NOT overcome the lead.

The Syracuse and Rochester clubs divided a double-header at Syracuse. The Stars won the first game 9 to 1, Eddie Dyer registered his sixth straight victory. The Tribe took the second game, 6 to 5, winning on a two-run raid against Poetz in the sixth inning. More than four hours were required to play the two games.

Harry Stone, former well-known lightweight pugilist, has returned to the United States after an absence of 12 years in Australia, New Zealand and the Philippines, where he engaged in a large number of ring contests.

PIRATES TAKE SERIES OPENER

Strengthen Hold on First Place By Defeating the Cards 9-3.

HEAVY SLUGGING.

NEW YORK, June 27.—(Canadian Press).—The Pirates waged a fierce batting attack against the best of the Cards' pitchers at St. Louis yesterday and took the series opener, 9 to 3. The Pirates' strengthened their hold on first place position by one and a half games over the Cardinals.

The Robins turned back the Giants by 7 to 1 at Brooklyn, Dazzy Vance yielding only six hits, two of which were bunched in the ninth for New York's lone score. Benton, the Giants' starting pitcher, was wild and gave way to Songer after four innings.

Cincinnati won the first game of their home series with Chicago by 8 to 5. Cincinnati won mainly because Luque refused to crack under some very loose fielding by his team mates. Cincinnati had five errors, four of which counted in the five runs scored by Chicago.

WINS GRAND PRIX.

Fikerari Takes Lead in Close of French Racing Season.

PARIS, June 27.—(Canadian Press) The Grand Prix marking the close of the Paris racing season, yesterday was won by M. P. Mouline's Fiterari. Mon Talisman, unbeaten three year old, owned by Martinez de Hoz, of Argentina, was second and Flamant, owned by Baron de Rothschild, was third.

Ogden Mills' Lusignan was fourth. The weather was cold and rainy.

On the bases of a ten franc bet, the winner paid 130.50; Montalisman who was the favorite, paid 13.50 for place, and Flamant 17 for third.

Only 35,000 determined souls went to the Longchamps race course in the Bois de Boulogne to see the running of the Grand Prix. Most of them returned home disappointed because the favorite failed to win the race with its rich prize of more than 800,000 francs (about $160,000).

Fiterari was ridden by F. Herve. Montalisman finished half a length behind Fiterari, and Flamant, with Steve Donoghue, the noted English jockey, in the saddle, three lengths in the rear. Sixteen horses ran.

Society saw the race as usual, but society was NOT seen as usual, for in the crowd there was little that caught the eye except umbrellas and raincoats in which fashions change but little even in Paris. For once the horses were the whole show, the crowd being limited largely to those who came to see, rather than those who came to be seen.

HITS FIFTEENTH HOMER.

PITTSBURGH, June 27.—(Canadian Press).—Hack Wilson, Cubs outfielder, smashed out his fifteenth home run of the season in the fifth inning of Saturday's game between Chicago and Pittsburgh.

STARR STERLING'S PROBLEM

A Serial for Boys - By BERT REED

As Starr walked down the road in the semi-darkness of the summer night, the thought that had been uppermost in his mind worried him. It was the weakness in his pitching staff. It was true that with Gray and himself they had won the five games so far played, but sooner or later Starr realized that they must weaken. Neither he nor Gray had arms of iron, and he was also aware that, while Gray had good delivery, he had not been able to last a full game.

They had now met the three other teams in the league for the second time and Starr had had an opportunity to analyze their men. In the second game with Beamville the score had been five to one. The score with Cedarville had been a different story. The two teams battled for eleven innings, finishing with a tight score of 1—0. Long Point had proven the weak sister of the league, Riverview batting in eleven runs to the two they had been able to chalk up.

If Simpson's reply to his wire were favorable, Riverview would go on the field Saturday, when they would play Cedarville again, with a fighting chance to win. If his answer were unfavorable—well, Starr had never quit, but they would have to fight all the way to win.

"It's a good thing my old arm is holding out," he murmured. "If anything should happen to it, I am just afraid Riverview would experience a snowstorm on Saturday."

As he turned the bend in the road, he noticed the slouching figure of a man ahead of him. He was apparently intoxicated, and as Starr drew nearer, his reeling gait confirmed. Sterling's suspicions. Farther down lay a dark stretch in the road caused by the overhanging of trees and Starr quickened his pace in an effort to pass the man before reaching it.

As he drew alongside, the other suddenly lurched against Sterling. Taken by surprise, Starr stopped. The next moment he was seized by a pair of powerful arms and draged into the shadows. A moment later another figure emerged from behind the shelter of some trees, laughing softly with evil satisfaction.

"I've got you Sterling," he muttered. "You'll not cover the mound on Saturday."

Then vaulting a fence, he cut through a field and disappeared.

When Sterling returned to camp that evening his arm was in splints. Instantly he was bombarded with questions. Quickly he told the story of the attack on the road.

"After it happened," he continued, "I went on to town, got the nearest doctor, asked him to fix me up, then called for the reply to my wire. Stan Simpson won't be able to get here until next week. I'm afraid, Gray," he smiled ruefully, " that it is up to you."

Immediately came an avalanche of questions:

"Is it broken or just sprained?"

"What's the doctor say?"

"Did the thug get away?"

"Just a moment, fellows, please," protested Starr, laughingly. "About one at a time is my speed."

"I have a pretty good idea that this was no accident, that behind all this is a dirty plot to keep me out of the game and cripple our team. Every fellow on the team will have to go in with the idea of winning. Promise me fellows—you Gray, Larkspur, Northway—all of you, promise me that you'll not quit. Keep the old record clean. Make it six straight wins. You can do it. It's the fighting spirt that will put us on top on Saturday. Are you with me?"

The day of the game with Cedarvale had arrived. Shortly after noon the boys had motored over to Cedarvale, a distance of some six miles. Starr, his arm in a sling, had accompanied them. A large delegation from Beamville had come earlier, and already the large covered stand that Cedarvale had recently erected was well filled. Alongside the covered stand stretched the bleachers with a seating capacity of several hundred.

There was no hesitation. Heartily to a man came the answer, "We are."

A long, high fence, topped with about half a dozen strands of barbed wire set about one inch apart enclosed the whole area.

Sterling shook hands with Wiggins, the captain and first baseman of the Cedarvale team.

"It's going to be a different story today, Sterling," he declared as he grasped Starr's hand. There was something magnetic about Wiggins. His frank, good natured manner had made him a host of friends throughout the league.

"Try and take it from us" laughed Sterling.

"Hello, what's this" he cried, noticing Sterling's arm was in a sling.

"I'll tell you all about that arm later" replied Starr grimly.

"Yes, he'll tell you all about it later," came a voice from behind.

"As a matter of fact, Wiggins," continued Chip, "Sterling knows he's outclassed today, and hasn't the nerve to face you."

By a supreme effort of will Starr controlled himself.

"Bascombe," he said evenly, "before you interrupted, Wiggins and I were discussing something which at the moment does not concern you. In short I would advise you to keep right on walking."

The blood rushed to Bascombe's face. "All right, freshie," he cried. "You've due to receive your dose today."

"And you," returned Starr quietly, "have been due to receive it for some time. It may come sooner than you imagine."

Riverview took the field, and for the first time it was noticed that Sterling was not playing.

"What's the matter with Sterling?" asked the people in the stand.

"Don't know—perhaps he injured his arm when he saved Young Brogan the other day," replied one.

"Too bad," said another. "I'm afraid this is going to be a one-sided game."

Little Peter was in his glory. Sterling had brought him over with them in the car, and now, with a baseball cap on his head, he sat guarding the Riverviews' equipment, conscious of his own importance.

While Gray had made up his mind to "play the game" or die game, he had inward misgivings, and now as he toed the slab the task of beating the Cedarvales seemed a larger order than he could fill. From the bench Sterling smiled encouragement. There was a quiet confidence in that smile that acted like a bracer for Paul.

Northway, who was catching, signalled for an inshoot. For the fraction of a second Gray hesitated. He had sized Miller's stick work in the last game and he was afraid. However, he gave Harry what he asked for. Miller stepped back and drove it into left garden for two bags. The Cedarvale crowd roared its approval. Gray immediately made a mental reservation to use his own judgment in regard to what he would deliver. With Miller on second, Driscoll, rapped out a pretty single, advancing him to third.

"This is too easy!" laughed the jubilant Cedarvale rooters.

Gray looked helplessly toward Starr. What was this? Was Sterling going to play and with one arm in a sling—Sterling, who two nights before had been in the doctor's care?

No, not with an arm in a sling — Sterling had already slipped it out. With a few deft movements he removed the bandage and splints. Chip Bascombe, who was sitting in a seat on the stand not far from the Riverview bench, was thunderstruck. With a badly sprained, if not broken arm, Sterling was going to pitch!

Annoyed and bewildered he rubbed his eyes. Then the bewilderment suddenly changed into black rage. He had been tricked. Sterling's arm had not been injured in the slightest! Mike Brogan would answer for this! Muttering fiercely beneath his breath, he left the stand in search of Brogan.

For eight exciting innings both teams displayed a skill worthy of professionals. Miller and Driscoll were put out at their respective bases, and through the following innings neither team had scored. Then Riverview had pushed a man around to third, but he had not been able to cross the pan. Twice the Cedarvale team had been within an ace of scoring, but Sterling had in the first instance shattered their hopes and in the second a sensational catch by Turner out in centre garden had retired the expectant Cedarvales.

The Riverviews came to bat in the last of the ninth with the score still tied. Halliday unable to solve Preston's delivery, fanned the air three times and went back to the bench.

Anderson was more fortunate. On a long drive that Peters of the Cedarvales, who was playing in the left garden, fumbled, he took first. Price followed and shared Halliday's fate by fouling three times, then striking out. Northway was the last man up. Twice in that game Harry had demonstrated unusual ability in stick work, but a combination of unfortunate circumstances had prevented him from making the most of it. Now he set his teeth. Unless the game were to run into ten innings he would have to connect with the ball. In a flash it came. Preston had delivered a speedy drop. It did not deceive Northway. Handsomely and cleanly he met it. It was a long drive to centre. Fleming, who had been playing deep in centre garden, saw that it would pass over his head, so turned and ran in the direction the ball was coming. As he reached the fence, he turned and jumped with his arm flung upward, his eager fingers outstretched. The ball missed his fingers by at least a foot. Up in the strands of barbed wire that ran along the top of the fence it hit and lodged, while Northway, with the stride of a professional, circled the bases and reached home. Riverview had won her sixth successive game!

"Sterling," cried Larkspur after the game, striking a dramatic pose, "draw near and on bended knee tell us why you so cruelly deceived us. Why tell us, I pray thee—why did you carry your right flipper so daintily dolled up in rags?"

"Fellows," replied Starr—and there was a serious note n hiis voice, "I do owe you an apology. I feel certain that Gray's bad playing today would be traced directly to it, but I couldn't afford to take a chance. I wanted a certain fellow in Beamville to feel sure that he had succeeded in putting me out of the game." Noticing their looks of surprise he continued: "The attack on Thursday night last was instigated by Chip Bascombe. He employed a man whom I will not name to injure my arm. This man agreed.

"Later, because of a certain incident that occurred, this man changed his mind. But, to apparently carry the thing through, he came with Bascombe and met me on the river road, when while Bascombe witnessed it from behind some trees, he attacked me, dragging me into the shadows where he would not be seen.

"Once there, he told me of how Bascombe had employed him to injure my arm. I knew Bascombe was wagering heavily on Cedarvale, and it occurred to me that if I could deceive him into believing that his plot had been successful it might teach him a lesson."

"But Starr," expostulated Hollway, "you're going to trail Bascombe for this, aren't you?"

"Who is this other man" questioned Gray.

Starr allowed his glance to wander in the direction of little Peter, their mascot, whose father had just caught him up in his arms.

"Who is he" repeated Gray.

"I wonder?" said Starr smiling.

That night Bascombe and Brogan met. Bascombe emerged with a cut lip and blakened eye.

BY BILLY EVANS

In the history of major league baseball, only two players have ever made four home runs in one game.

Back in 1894, Bobby Lowe of the Boston Club registered four circuit drives, two of them coming in one inning. Two years later Ed Delehanty, the Babe Ruth of his day, equaled Lowe's great feat.

For over 30 years, baseball's greatest sluggers have been shooting at the mark. On 19 occasions various stars have made three home runs, but all fell short of the four.

On Monday, June 13, of this year, I saw Ben Paschal of the New York Yankees miss sharing fame with Lowe and Delehanty by a matter of inches. Making the happening all the more remarkable, is the fact that Paschal was substituting for Bob Meusel.

Playing against Cleveland, Paschal, a right-handed batter, on his first trip to the plate, hit a fast one on the inside into the left field bleachers. On his second trip he duplicated the feat on the same kind of a pitched ball.

In an effort to keep Paschal from pulling the ball into left field, the Cleveland pitchers shifted their tactics and kept the ball high on the outside.

On his third appearance he reached and hit a fast one on a line to right. It failed to clear the wire netting in front of the bleachers by perhaps six inches. He made two bases on it.

In his final appearance, he repeated his drive to right field and once again a mere matter of inches only kept the ball from clearing the barrier. This time he made three bases on the drive.

Paschal's record for the day was a double, triple and two home runs. Only a few inches had kept him from four home runs, thereby equaling a record that has stood for over 30 years.

WINS OCEAN SWIM.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., June 27.—(Canadian Press).—William Alfred Erickson, 250 pound New York youth, won the 15-mile Atlantic City swim here Saturday night, completing the long and treacherous grind in 13 hours 37 minutes. Forty five swimmers started.

YANKEES SPLIT DOUBLE HEADER

Athletics Triumph in Opener 4-2 and Drop Second 7-3.

GROUPED HITS.

NEW YORK, June 27.—(Canadian Press).—The Athletics split a doubleheader with the Yankees yesterday before 61,000 fans. Philadelphia triumphed in the opener by 4 to 2 and dropped the second by 7 to 3. Jack Quinn held the New York sluggers to six hits and struck out Lou Gehrig three time in the first game.

The Yanks grouped four hits, together with a base on balls and two errors in the first inning of the closing engagement for five runs and coasted along to an easy victory. Gehrig propelled his twenty-second home run of the season off Pate in the seventh. Moore limited the Mackmen to five hits. Babe Ruth was out of the line-up due to trouble with his right knee.

The White Sox drove Earl Whitehill off the hill in the seventh inning at Chicago and defeated Detroit, 9 to 7. The visitors chased Thomas to the showers in the sixth inning. Connally, his successor, pitched airtight ball thereafter, Whitehill blew up in the six seventh and Barrett's triple cleared the bases, which were filled. Lil Stoner went to rescue but was touched for one hit and contributed a wild throw himself which helped put Chicago in the lead.

The Senators made it three straight over Boston at Washington, 8 to 7. Goslin and Myer connected for homers, the former also getting a double and the latter, recently traded to the Red Sox by the Senators, a double and single. Johnson, who started for Washington, was relieved in the fifth, but was given credit for the victory.

The Indians and St. Louis Browns split a doubleheader and the series as well at Cleveland. In the first game Uhle returned to form and bested Stewart, 2 to 0, in a pitcher's battle in which both allotted four hits. Buckeye was batted from the box in the second game, the Browns winning, 7 to 3. Fonesca accepted 13 chances at second base in the final battle.

Mickey Walker Out In Final Workout

LONDON, June 27.—(Canadian Press).—Mickey Walker received a serious cut over the eyes in his final hard workout yesterday in preparation for his bout Thursday night with Tommy Milligan for the middleweight championship.

The champion had been complaining about the small attendance at his training camp and the presence of several hundred spectators yesterday inspired Walker to give them a run for their money and show his fitness. Taking on George West, a rugged English middleweight, Walker started earnestly in the first round pummelling West about the ring. West retaliated energetically and for two and a half minutes the spectators were privileged to witness a better exhibition of fighting than high priced bouts have furnished.

Near the end of the round the two were engaged in a furious mixup when West accidentally butted Walker, reopening an old cut over the right eye. The cut is said to be a serious one and, in the opinion of some, may jeopardize Walker's chances in the coming bout.

Handy Mandy Breaks Race Track Record

LATONIA, Ky., June 27.—(Canadian Press).—Handy Mandy, a virgin filly in the winners' class, Saturday turned what was predicted to be a very uninteresting Latonia Derby into a historic classic which shattered the track and American records, for the one and one half mile.

Three lengths ahead of Dolan, the eastern horse, she finished first and paid part of a howling crowd of 30,000, $9.80 for each $2 mutuel ticket and collected for Hal Price Headley, of Lexington, Ky., her owner, $24,250.

There were three big surprises in the finish, for Dolan copped the second prize and War Eagle, one of the E. B. McLean entries, was third. Jock and Buddy Bauer, picked generally for first and second, were tuckered out at the stretch and Rolled Stocking, who was given an outside chance to win, got unruly and put himself out of the running before the race was half done.

Stout persons are more likely to prove the best long-distance swimmers, because their extra fat wards off any risk of chill.

The Yankee Stadium in New York will again be the scene of the Army-Notre Dame football game next fall. The date fixed for this notable intersectional contest is November 12.

GROUP LEADERSHIP WILL BE DECIDED

Belmonts and Lockworks Play Play Sudden Death Game on Wednesday.

The Lock Works and Belmonts will play a sudden death game on Wednesday night, to decide the winners of Group 1. This should be a great battle, as both teams are evenly matched. Last Friday night saw the Belmonts win out 3 to 2 after ten innings in one of the best games of the season. Wednesday night's battle should be equally as good.

Manager Miller of the Lock Works said he had every hope of winning the big game. He said the Lock Works were fighting with their backs to the wall and would be out there battling all the way. Miller said he would likely start Joe Dunkerly against the Belmonts, with Waddell in reserve. The Belmonts feel the same way about Wednesday's big battle and Manager Clare Stuart said he would send "Hap" Harrison right back to subdue the Lockmakers, and hold Carruthers in reserve. He figures Harrison can win the group honors for his team.

Wednesday night's game should attract the biggest crowd of the season. The game will be played at Central Park and the teams will get away at 6.15 sharp.

Nowadays very few of the prominent boxers have cauliflower ears. The reason is that they avoid the punishment usually welcomed by the old-time battlers who were willing to take several blows in order to land one.

A SERIES OF LESSONS ON FOOD COMBINATIONS
(Good Protein Combinations.)

As I explained in my last article, protein food, such as meat, fish, eggs, etc., cannot digest as well if used at the same time that starchy foods are used.

Protein is not digested at all in the human mouth any more than with a dog or other carnivorous animal. It is advisable to masticate meat well, because the taste is agreeable and the digestive juices of the stomach are thereby stimulated.

As protein food enters the stomach, it begins to mix with the gastric juice, which is especially prepared by nature to take care of this class of food only. Starches cannot be digested in the stomach, and if used at the same meal only interfere with the digestion of the meat, fish or other proteins. The starches, such as beans and bread, will absorb a good deal of the stomach juices, which only render them sour. Often not enough gastric juice is left to properly convert the meat into peptones, which is the only form through which it can be assimilated.

If the non-starchy vegetables are used with the meat, this does not interfere with its digestion. So a good plan is to use the cooked and raw greens with a meat meal and avoid all other foods, such as bread, potatoes, rice, macaroni, spaghetti and all of the starchy foods made from flour products. The harm that often comes from eating meat is caused by indiscriminate combinations with other foods, such as the starches that I have just mentioned.

The average person will do well to use about one-quarter of a pound of meat each day, preferably at the noon or evening meal. The combinations used with the meat should be just as simple as possible, consisting principally of such greens as spinach, asparagus, string beans, lettuce, celery, etc., with the possible addition of a small amount dried sugar fruit.

It is always advisable to use only one protein at each meal. For instance, if meat is used, cheese should not be used at the same meal.

The following specimen meals will show you what I mean by good protein combinations:

1. Roast mutton, cooked spinach, raw celery.
2. Salisbury steak, cooked asparagus, raw grated carrots.
3. Broiled fish, combination salad of lettuce, tomatoes, and cucumbers.
4. Dish of cottage cheese, baked egg plant, cooked parsnips, sliced cucumbers.

"MYSTERY CLUB" AT REGENT IS CAPTIVATING SPOOKER.

All-Feature Cast Enacts Baffling Drama.

The Regent Theatre this week presents one of the most interesting and thrilling pictures it has been our pleasure to have seen in many a day, "The Mystery Club," a Jewel feature and another of Universal's consistent series of Greater Movie List Successes.

The story was taken from Arthur Somers Roche's famous series, "Crimes of the Armchair Club," which ran in the Cosmopolitan Magazine for a year, and is one of the few photoplays that adhere faithfully to the original tale.

It concerns the misadventures of an organization of millionaires, "The Mystery Club." As the result of a heated discussion, a wager is made, by the terms of which each member obligates himself to commit a crime undetected by the police, the failure of any project entailing the payment of a large forfeit.

A real crime is committed and members of the club are suspected. Of course, they are innocent, but when five more are perpetrated in rapid succession, throwing suspicion strongly on the club members, they are frantic with uncertainty and fear.

Added to this are the apparent criminality of the heroine and the activities of the hero to clear himself from suspicion and the result is the most thrilling photoplay ever screened. It would be unfair to divulge the original and unusual ending, which sends the audience away satisfied that it has witnessed a motion picture that will be a standard of mystery picturizations for a long time to come.

The work of the cast is unfailingly good. Each individual fitted into his part perfectly like a cog in a wheel. The hero is played by Matt Moore. His sweetheart is Edith Roberts, while the rest of the players form an ideal all-star cast. They include Mildred Harris, Charles Lane, Warner Oland, Henry Hebert, Charles Puffy, Alphonse Martell, Finch Smiles, Earl Metcalfe, Nat Carr, Jed Prouty, Alfred Allen, Sidney Bracey and Monte Montague. "The Mystery Club" was directed by Herbert Blache.

Th draw in the famous Calcutta swe pstakes on the English Derby takes place at Calcutta in full view of the members of the Turf Club of that city, who alone are permitted to be present. The folded tickets are first placed in a glass-fronted barrel and after being well shaken a member of the club draws forth a ticket. At the same time another member draws from another barrel in which are slips of paper bearing the names of all the horses entered in the race. The whole proceeding is conducted with impressive ceremony and occupies about two hours. A popular belief that a blind child assists at the draw is a myth. Although organized and conducted by the Turf Club, it has rarely occurred that a member of the club has won any of the big prizes.

Lyrics Of Life

(By Douglas Malloch.)

YOUTH AND AGE

Youth is in the saddle,
Riding hard and fast;
Youth, that sits a-straddle,
Laughing at the past.
All the sky's at morning,
All the earth abloom;
Why the sombre warning;
Why the face of gloom?

Age is in the byway,
Age's horse has died;
Youth is on the highway;
Age must step aside.
Yet we need no sorrow;
Age is well content:
Youth will have tomorrow;
When the day is spent.

In the grayer weather,
After joy and strife,
We shall come together
On the hills of life.
Youth may now deride us;
But some darker day
Youth will walk beside us;
Asking us the way.

C.G.E. PICNIC IS SUCCESSFUL

Many Attend Outing at Cobourg In Spite of the Bad Weather.

RACES ARE RUN OFF.

The picnic to Cobourg held on Saturday under the auspices of the newly-formed Social and Athletic Club of the Canadian General Electric Company was, despite extremely unfavorable weather conditions, a pronounced success. The committee in charge estimate the attendance as approximately two thousand, with about eight hundred going by train and the balance by automobile. Arrangements for the affair were as complete as possible, and were in the capable hands of an excellent committee. The Toronto boat was one and one-half hours late and quite a large number were sick owing to the rough lake. No accidents marred the day's events, which were featured by good humor on the part of all in attendance.

The majority of the races were run off, but softball, football and tennis games were postponed to a later date. Swimming was indulged in by several groups.

The people from Toronto had lunch in the Cobourg Curling Rink and the Peterborough Band played during the meal, affording considerable cheer to the visitors after their rough passage.

The committee commends the courtesy of the police and park officials of Cobourg and the way the crowds were handled by the C.N.R.

CHAPTER XVII

A horseman came toward the Americans from the direction of Prentiss' fazenda. He saw them and violently reined his horse. Vilak recognized him as George Bemus, a bluff, kindly-hearted young cockney who was the manager of one of the outlying fazendas.

"Ain't no bloomin' use comin' to warn the Prentiss blighter," he flashed excitedly. "I was passin' up the road from Caceres when I 'ears about the bloomin' dam and thinks of the bloody blighter and runs over to tell 'im. Be too narsty to let even a blighter as 'e is drown. But 'e'd been warned. When I gets to the top of the 'ill over 'is place, I 'ears a man 'ollerin to 'im about it outside 'is bloomin' wall."

He waited a fraction of a second to see if the riders would accompany him, then whirled off toward Chacos Hill, low and black against the clearing sky.

For an instant Vilak sat motionless in his saddle, tense, rigid. The Mongolian cast of his long eyes accentuated, the thin film like a bird's eyelid began to creep over the corner. Then he suddenly spurred his horse; the animal bounded fiercly forward. His companions swung beside him.

"The dam hasn't broken," he shouted above the tumult of the scudding hoofs. "It's a trick..... A trick to get Prentiss out of his house." He touched the horse with his whip; the words came in measured beats that followed the rhythm of the leaping animal.

"I'm a fool....A consummate fool ....Should have known when I saw how systematically the news was brought....How the water was falling....Bemus' story proves it....Nobody but he or ourselves would think of Prentiss.....Natives delighted if he drowned....Got to get there quick as we can....Save him perhaps.... Better go back....All right....No time argument...."

The three powerful horses hurtled over the road, their hoofs kicking up great sprays of mud like the waves of green churned water thrown back by the propeller of a speeding steamship.

Vilak rode as though the Oriental strain in his blood had risen to full possession of his being; he was a Tartar of the Steppes. His tall, lean form rocked and swayed as it adapted itself to his plunging mount; he seemed but another part of its massive, straining body.

Elise was bent far over in he saddle, her head almost touching her horse's neck. The thin, grey dress she had donned for her voyage fluttered madly in the wind; she had lost her hat and her long black hair was streaming behind her wildly. But her delicate face, though tense with energy, was calm; when her horse tumbled or slackened speed for a moment she coolly jerked a rein or spoke a quiet soothing word that brought it out of the hole into which it had plunged and sent it riding on again.

The old man, however, had neither the coolness nor the poise of his companions. Never an expert horseman, he had early been appalled at the terrific speed at which his stallion coursed along the lane, and abandoning his feeble hold of the reins, had seized the pommel of his saddle. To this he clung desperately, cramped, white-faced, breathing quickly, afraid to move lest he should topple to the ground.

The lane narrowed, the avenues of black trees bordering it on each side drew closer and closer together; but Vilak, setting the pace, did not slacken. They coursed by a clump of low palms. A bullet whistled past Elise's ear. "Keep down," Vilak called softly.

They reached the thorn thicket marking the trail to Prentiss' house. Jumping from their horses, without halting to tie them, they darted into the tangled wood. They sped along the path and reached the shore of the lake where in the moonlight they could see the valley below. Lights showed in a window.

"Still there," Vilak grunted. "Maybe in time." He took out his pistol and started down the bank. They had reached the foot when a second bullet sped past, missing Vilak by inches. "Run for the gate!" he whispered.

They darted through the creek, whose waters engulfed them to their waists, and reached the high stone wall. The bushes on the opposite side of the water rustled loudly. Nunnally looked at the great iron gate which barred their way, then fearfully back at the bush.

As if in answer to his fears, Vilak whipped a key from his pocket. He thrust it into the lock. "Made it the day after we were here before," he muttered. "Thought we might need it." He jerked the nob and raised the two great iron bars inside. A bell began to clang somewhere within the desolate dwelling as the great gate opened. The two men and the girl bolted through.

Vilak shut the gate behind them, locked it, replaced the bars. The bell continued ringing for a few seconds and then ceased. The hoarse baying of the dog followed, then there again arose from the fazenda the piercing sinister wail which they heard on their first visit. Vilak stopped to listen, Elise caught his arm.

"Are you sure we ought to go ahead?" she whispered doubtfully.

"I'm not sure....Only fairly sure ....Too late to go back now even if you want to....Let me know if you see the dog....have to kill him this time if he comes....No chloroform...."

They sped on again. They halted at the gloomy entrance of the house. Vilak knocked. The baying of the dog mounted until it became a frenzy, then suddenly ceased.

"Who's there?" Prentiss' voice was raspy and snarling.

"It's Miss Marberry's attorney agin."

Prentiss began a stream of sullen oaths. "Get out of here! Get out of here!" he shouted passionately through the door.

"Don't be a damned fool." Vilak spoke slowly, gravely. "Ive come here to help you. This report of a flood is a trick to get you out of your house. You're surrounded. You'll be caught the instant you put your foot outside your enclosure. Open the door and let us in. We've come to help you, I tell you."

For a moment Prentiss made no answer. The baying of the dog recommenced. Then the door opened slowly. Prentiss peered out. His face was shrunken, withered like a nut; his yellowish eyes gleamed craftily. He had evidently been on the moment of departure, for he was wearing his hat.

He surveyed the newcomers. "So you've come to help Prentiss," he snarled at length. "Come to help the unreasonable Prentiss, the wicked Prentiss, who stupidly insisted on keeping the land that belonged to him, eh? Who wouldn't let it be stolen, eh?" he laughed sardonically, cruelly. "Well, well, well. We'll see. We'll see."

He opened the door widely and stood in the aperture, a lofty, long-armed skelton. "Come in, come in, said the spider to the fly. Come in said the spider," He giggled harshly at his own jest.

Vilak swept past him into the gloomy candle-lit interior where the great black mastiff strained frantically at his leash. "You've got to prepare to defend yourself," he snapped. "Your enemies will be coming to attack as soon as they find out your not coming out."

Prentiss' expression changed. Fear replaced his malevolent smile. His cadaverous body began to tremble, the tattooed mark on his forehead became livid. "Attack?" he whispered feebly. "Shooting?"

Vilak nodded.

ONE BOY DEAD; ONE BADLY HURT

Cave-in on the Bank of a Small Stream Causes Fatality.

OTHERS ARE SHAKEN.

BRAMPTON, Ont. June 27.—As the result of a cave-in on the banks of a small creek west of Brampton, one boy was killed outright and one seriously injured about the back and shoulder on Saturday.

Eight boys, Fred Warr, who was killed; George Savage, who was hurt; Norman Cook, Art Clarke, Lorne Taylor, Douglas and Gordon Copeland and Billy Giffen, were seeking refuge in one of two caves which they had hollowed during the week in the clay loam banks of the stream. Warr was the farthest inside the cave, into which the boys had to crawl; Giffen was next and Cook, Clarke, Taylor and Douglas Copeland were at the outside, next the entrance. When the boys felt the earth beginning to slide, the four nearest the entrance jumped, Cook and Clarke getting right into the open. Taylor freed his feet and sent the Cook and Clarke boys for help. Taylor and Douglas Copeland, though only 10 years of age, started to clear the earth from Savage and Gordon Copeland so as to permit them to breathe. When Robert Taylor, father of Lorne, and a neighbor, warned by Cook of the boy's danger, hurried to the spot, only Giffen and Warr were invisible. Giffen, who was moving when the earth began to slide, was thrown with his head between his knees, which gave him a small breathing space, and he scratched with his hands to clear the earth from his face. Mr. Taylor assisted by Mr. Allen, soon had Giffen out, but when Warr, who was under a heavy mass of earth, was reached, he was unconscious, and all efforts to resuscitate him failed. His dog had stayed his his side and was unearthed close by the dead boy.

The telephone wire chief, W. M. Reid, who is an expert first aid man, with Wesley Bunner, worked over the dead boy in turns in an effort to restore him.

The boys, although much shaken by their experience, with the exception of Savage are able to be about. He has cuts on his back and shoulders as well as severe bruises.

The pine-tree shilling, originating in 1652 and replacing wampum as a medium of exchange, was the first silver coinage in North America.

ST. PAUL'S PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

"My last sermon," was the subject which drew an interested congregation to St. Paul's Presbyterian Church Sunday evening, where a gripping Gospel address was given, the main theme of which was "Salvation." The words of the Apostle Paul to Timothy, as recorded in 2nd Timothy, 4-6: "I am now ready to be offered up, the time of my departure is at hand" were the text. Rev. Wm. Allan pointed out that there comes a time in the life of every minister and of every person when they will deliver or hear their last sermon. He asked his hearers what they would expect him to preach on if they knew this sermon was to be his last, or the last that they might hear. Would they like him to preach something that would be pleasant to hear, or that would appeal to their intellects, or with the deeper issues of life?

Christ's message was that He came to save those who were lost. The great theme of the Cross was Salvation. Did He know that it was His last sermon? Rev. Mr. Allan said he would take this as his theme, and endeavor to show first ,that Christ's death on the Cross satisfied justice; second, provided forgiveness for the sinner, and third, the receipt of a new life for the believer. The message throughout was a strong and impressive Gospel appeal and showed that the debts of every sinner to God have been paid, and all that is expected of the sinner is that he believe and accept this fact.

The organ recital, which begins at 6.45 each Sunday evening, is appreciated by quite a large number of people who gather early in order to hear it. The new organ is an instrument of such range that it takes time to become familiar with its possibilities. The organist, Martin B. Chenhall, is continually developing new qualities from it through the selections he plays on Sunday evenings, and these, for this reason, are being increasingly enjoyed.

IMMACULATE CONCEPTION CHURCH.

"Neither any other God is so great and no other nation has their God so near to them as our God."

These words were taken as the subject of the text by Father Carroll for his sermon yesterday morning. We know that under the old law God was very close to His people and manifested His presence to them in many ways. Yet if you have read Jewish history you will find that the Jewish people, in time of distress, murmured against God, Who had performed such miracles for them, and blasphemed His divinity for golden idols. Why? For the same reason that we to-day fail to obey God's commandments—perversity and hardness of heart.

As God was at all times kind to the Jews, so is He kind to us. Even as He rained down manna in the desert to feed His chosen people, He has not been content to leave manna with us, but has left us the bread of eternal life, which will last for ever, and which will strengthen us in times of temptation, for as Christ has said, "It is the pledge of salvation." In our Lord's invitation, "Come all ye who labour and burden and I will refresh you," He refers to the Blessed Eucharist. And as the manna saved the chosen people from starvation, so the Blessed Eucharist saves us from spiritual death. Without frequent reception of the Sacraments, it is impossible to save your soul. Always has this been true, and is true even more so at this time when the young people are so beset with temptations and hence have need for greater reinforcements in the armour of God's grace. St. Paul compares life to a warfare. We must fight as true soldiers of Christ under the armour of Christ, and thus protect ourselves from sinful attacks. How revolting in the sight of God must be the soul from which the grace of God has departed, leaving the halo of Satan in its place. "He who eateth My flesh and drinketh My blood abideth in me and I in him, and I will raise him up on the last day."

Pope Pius, in his exhortations for frequent reception of the Sacrament, as a powerful remedy against temptation, named only two conditions necessary: First, that one is in the state of grace, and secondly, that one has the right intention, which is to honour and glorify God and gain graces for him. The Lord has said, "Unless you eat of the flesh of the Son of Man and drink of His blood, you shall not have life in you." Let us avail ourselves of this opportunity when Christ has humiliated Himself that we may receive Him and make our Communions effective by keeping away from the occasions of sin. In this way will our lives be made happier both spiritually and temporally. For this end do we strive, to know and serve Christ in the next world, where we will see Him face to face in all the glory of His divinity.

Father Carroll also spoke of the coming Jubilee celebration in honour of the advancement of this country, and exhorted the people as residents of Canada and citizens of Peterboro to give their best co-operation in making this celebration a success.

Next Sundray will be set apart as Jubilee Sunday, when high mass will be solemnized with the exposition of the most blesesd Sacrament all day.

Swimming Exhibitions Given By Local Boys

Travellers on the afternoon C.P.R. train from Montreal yesterday witnessed an unrehearsed demonstration of the aquatic prowess of Peterborough's youth. Six boys of school age, dived from the C.P.R. bridge into the Otonabee just as the train came along. Five of them took the plunge unhesitating and in quick succession. The sixth, a comparatively feeble swimmer, paused a moment or two in irresolution, until in response to the encouraging exhortations of his fellows, he dropped down in a beautiful dive. The strong current aided the sextette as they swam with evident enjoyment, the more experienced lads helping and encouraging their younger friend, until the entire "shoal" safely reached the bank at McDonald's Mill.

ASTOR WITHDRAWS PEERESSES' BILL

Government's Proposed Reform of House of Lords Given as Reason.

LONDON, June 27 (Canadian Press).—Viscount Astor today withdrew his bill in the House of Lords enabling Peeresses in their own right to sit in the Upper House. He gave as his reason the new situation created by the Government's proposed reform, whereby a large number of members of the House of Lords are to be chosen by election within their own ranks. Lord Astor's bill was to have received second reading today and Lord Birkenhead was to have moved its rejection.

The annual loss of timber at present suffered by Canada's forests through the agencies of fire, insects and disease is greater than the amount annually used for all industrial purposes.

ROTARY OPENS JUBILEE WEEK

Eloquent Address on Confederation is Given By Mr. F. D. Kerr.

THE ROTARY ARCH.

The questions "Why be proud of being a Britisher or of being a Canadian?" were answered by Mr. F. D. Kerr, K.C., by a series of other questions in a most eloquent discussion before the Peterborough Rotary Club to-day of some milestones of Canadian development since Confederation. "Where?" asked Mr. Kerr, "is there as much freedom, as much liberty of action, as in the British Empire and in Canada?

"Where is justice administered more fairly and impartially than in the British Empire and in Canada?" "Where is crime punished more swiftly and more effectively than in the British Empire and in Canada" "Where is all life and property more closely safeguarded than in the British Emipre and in Canada?"

To-day was Diamond Jubilee Day with the Peterborough Rotarians and Mr. Kerr's address made the occasion a most noteworthy one.

In beginning he stressed the debt of gratitude that Canada owed to such men as Macdonald, Brown, Mowat, Galt, Cartier and D'Arcy McGee, emphasizing the courage and vision of the Fathers of Confederation and drawing an eloquent picture of the Canada of 1867.

Then the speaker passed on to discuss some of the factors that had contributed to the development of a spirit of nationhood among the people of Canada. Canada's military efforts, the response at the time of the Fenian raid, the establishing of the Royal Military College, the crushing of the Riel rebellion in 1885, Canada's participation in the South African war and her share in the great World war were all touched upon by Mr. Kerr.

Territorial expansion was another reason for the growth of a national spirit, trade development was another, the launching of the national policy, the establishment of the Imperial preference, were all factors in Canada's development.

The results of the Imperial conference were also discussed by Mr. Kerr as a further evidence of the strides made by the self-governing members of the British commonwealth, and the speaker emphasized the fact that with equality of status came further responsibility, and in this connection the naval question, like Banquo's ghost, would not down. Sooner or later, in some form or another, Canada would have to deal with this matter of naval defence.

Mr. Kerr strongly affirmed his belief that Canada's place would continue to be within the Empire.

It was announced by Rotarian Max Sauer, chairman of the Decoration committee, that Rotary's Diamond Jubilee arch would be erected on George street, near the corner of Hunter street, on Wednesday night.

Announcement was also made that the Rotary camp would open next week.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Saturday, June 25, at 4.30 p.m., at the residence of Rev. W. H. Andrews of Queen East Presbyterian Church, Toronto, when Marion Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Mr. and the late Mrs. A. P. Donaldson, of Keene, became the bride of Robert John Gainer, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Gainer, of South Monaghan. The bride was attired in a gown of biscuit shade georgette, trimmed with silver, with shoes and hose to match. The bridesmaid, Miss Rae Byers, wore a gown of green taffeta shot with silver. Mr. Wm. Kirkwood was best man. After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's cousin, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Hill, 67 Monarch Park Avenue, Toronto. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Gainer will reside near Bailieboro.

MURDUFF—PORTER.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Porter, Otonabee, was the scene of a quiet but very pretty wedding on Wednesday last, at 11.30 o'clock, when their youngest daughter, Ella Madeline, became the bride of Mr. Harry James Murduff, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Murduff, 508 Patterson Street.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, looked very sweet in a maize georgette gown over pink and she carried ophelia roses.

Little Velma Hope, niece of the bride, made a charming flower girl in a frilly pink georgette dress, carrying a basket of sweet peas.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. John Archibald, of Keene, and the wedding march was played by Mr. Harold Follis, brother-in-law of the groom.

In the afternoon, the happy couple left amid showers of confetti on a three weeks' motor trip through the States, after which they will reside in Detroit.

The bride travelled in a sand suit, with hat, shoes and bag to match. She wore the groom's gift, a beautiful fox fur.

The flower girl received a gold bracelet and the pianist a gold knife.

A short service was held at the house prior to the funeral, the cortege then proceeding to Thackeray's Methodist Church, where Rev. Mr. Lovelace conducted services. Interment was made in Thackeray's Cemetery, where four generations of the Timlin family rest side by side. Despite the unfavorable weather, the church was filled to capacity with friends and neighbors gathered from far and near to pay their last respects to the departed. Pall-bearers were Messrs. Charles Harper, John Timlin, Nathaniel Curtis, William Sandercox, John Linton and Mr. Arnald. Many beautiful floral offerings were received.

Corns Will Advance Features Grain Market

CHICAGO, June 27 (Canadian Press). — Corn prices jumped wildly almost seven cents a bushel today and closed virtually the top figure reached. Predictions were current of possible disaster to the corn crop and the Government reported that the production of pigs was 3½ per cent greater than last year.

Corn closed excited 6⅝ to 6¾ net higher; wheat 1¼ to 1⅞ cents up; oats at 1⅝ to 2¼ cents advance, and provisions at 10 to 37 cents gain.

New York Exchange Generally Weak To-day

NEW YORK, June 27. Canadian Press. — Persistent selling of oils and coppers turned the general course of stock prices reactionary to-day, with numerous declines of 1 to 6 points, scattered throughout the list.

The selling of oils reflected speculative disoppointment over the steady increase in crude oil production in the face of efforts to bring about a curtailment. Marland, Pan-American, Simms, Skelly, and General Asphalt all touched new low ground. Unsatisfactory trade conditions also accounted for liquidation of coppers.

Baldwin dropped from 231 to 225 and Commercial Solvents 'B' also sold down 5 points from Saturday's final quotation. General railway signal crossed 123 to a new peak, but met with large offerings around that figure.

Mining Stocks Lose Slightly This Morning

TORONTO., June 27 (Canadian Press).—Stocks lost ground on the Standard Mining Exchange today. Amulet, the leader, suffered most, being sold down 6 points at 247. Noranda sold up to 22.15, when reaction set in and it slumped to a low of 21.40, recovering a bare 5 cents at noon for a net loss of 35 cents. Tough Oakes eased 1½ to 38½ and Area at 1½ at 48½. Ribago at 32 was a point lower. Laval Quebec firmed a little at 23, and Argonaut gained 2 at 28.

Wheat and Corn Go Up On New Crop Reports

CHICAGO, Ill., June 27 (Canadian Press).—Wheat and corn both scored an early advance to-day. Bullish Australian crop reports affected wheat. Corn was influenced mainly by field advices giving a pessimistic outlook as to the probable yield in the big producing states. Starting at 1-8 cent to ¼ cent advance, wheat reacted somewhat and then rose higher than before. Corn opened unchanged to 3-8 cent up and subsequently made quick general gains. Oats firmer. Provisions held steady.

Opening prices were: Wheat, July, 1.40 3-4, Sept. 1.39½. Corn. July 94½, Sept. 1.00¼. Oats, July 45 5-8, Sept. 45 7-8.

Stocks Firm To-day On Toronto Exchange

TORONTO, June 27 (Canadian Press).—Stocks were firm in moderately heavy trading on the Toronto Stock Exchange to-day. Price movements were restricted within narrow bounds. International Nickel, the leader, lost three-quarters at 60½, but most others gained slightly or were unchanged. Hiram Walker and Northern Bakeries moved up over a point in the session, Walker touching 49¾ and Bakeries 27½. At noon each receded, Walker to 48½ and Bakeries to 26½, representing slight gains. Industrial Alcohol firmed three-eighths at 28 7-8, and Carling 5-8 at 25½, and Seagram was unchanged at 31½.

Grouard District Inhabitants Driven Out By Rise of River.

EDMONTON, Alta., June 27 (Canadian Press).—Thousands of acres of land in the constituency of Grouard is flooded, and several scores of families driven from their homes to seek safety on higher lands, while train service between Peace River and here has been cut off at High Prairie for 48 hours, as a result of a sudden rise in the waters of the Prairie River in the Grouard district. Residents of the district are at a loss to explain the unusual condition unless it be from a cloudburst in the Swan Hills, 200 miles north-east of Edmonton.

CAMPBELLFORD MILL IS LOSING

Member of Firm Says Making Cloth Does Not Pay in Canada.

TARIFF HEARING.

OTTAWA, June 27 (Canadian Press).—The Tariff Board hearing of the application of the woollen manufacturers for increased protection was resumed here today. F. B. Hayes, a cloth manufacturer, read a statement referring to the 250 looms in his industry, of which, he said, only 60 per cent had operated for the past three years. Imported flannels from France and England could underbid Canadian by reason of cheaper labor.

Mr. Hayes stated that his company's plant in Campbellford has operated at $40,000 a year loss and had been kept open only to save the community from the effects of throwing more than 200 persons out of employment. The industry had been started at the request of the Government in 1914 to make uniform material. On some khaki there had been losses. Shortly after the Great War there had been some profits on velours.

"If we could get rid of our plant we would like to invest our capital in something else. It doesn't pay to make cloth in Canada," said Mr. Hayes

COUNCIL WILL PROVIDE FUNDS FOR VOCATIONAL EXTENSION TO PRESENT COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

City's Share of Cost to be Approximately $170,000—Total Cost $295,000.

NAME OF PARK CHANGED.

Confederation Square Takes Place of Central Park, in Honor of Jubilee.

Unanimous agreement in accepting the Board of Education's plans and providing the funds for the extension to the Collegiate Institute was given at last night's meeting of the City Council, and a by-law providing for the raising of $295,000 by debentures was ordered prepared. Part of the amount required each year for payment of interest and sinking fund will be met by grants from the government and fees from the county.

The Board's request was presented by Chairman E. B. Fowler, who led his fellow trustees to the Council Chamber after a short meeting at which the school committee's report was adopted.

Mr. Fowler explained the purpose of the meeting, expressing regret that they had not been able to come earlier. He said that the details had been gone into thoroughly to get the best possible building at the lowest possible price. He outlined the rooms contained all in the old and new buildings, with their arrangement. The total cost will be about $295,000. Government grants will be $102,600 and the County's share is estimated at $21,800, leaving the cost to the city $170,600. This is $15,000 higher than was estimated in February but this increase, said Mr. Fowler, is due to a necessary increase in the size of the building. Equipment will cost about $30,000 of which the Department of Education will pay half. It is the Board's intention to buy vocational equipment as needed. It is also planned to begin an agricultural department, as an advantage to the rural community.

Mr. Fowler expressed appreciation of the co-operation and sympathy of the Council and Department of Education.

Speedy action in approving the plans was asked by Mr. Fowler, who suggested that the turning of the first sod could be part of the Jubilee Celebration. Mayor Holloway expressed appreciation of the efforts of the Board, and Alderman Denne and Stocker moved that the by-law be prepared for presentation at the July meeting of the Council. This was passed unanimously.

Angle Parking Passed.

A by-law, amending the traffic by-law to provide for angle parking on part of George street, was passed. This was introduced by Ald. Fife, who in the second reading expressed his opposition to the by-law, on the ground that the street was too narrow for parking in that way, and it would be dangerous.

Ald. Macdonald supported Ald. Fife, saying that he had tried it out. Ald. McIntyre supported the by-law, saying that parking parallel is bad as cars often cannot get out.

Mayor Holloway said that the system is used in heavier traffic than on George street. He also said that there would be plenty of room for two busses to pass abreast between two cars parked in that way. He suggested that the cars might back in.

Ald. Cotton supported the by-law saying that there is no system used now. Cars cannot get out as it is now, he said. If there were street cars he would oppose it.

Ald. Denne was strongly in opposition to the proposal. He asserted that drivers should not pack their cars in so close and suggested trying to park cars on the side streets, such as Water and King, and on vacant lots. He pointed to the confusion which had occurred in front of his place of business on Saturday night.

Ald. Greene, in the chair, said that it was unfortunate that the people had started angle parking before the by-law was passed, while others parked parellel.

Ald. Stocker suggested that it was a matter of education, and that the by-law could be tried and if necessary rescinded.

Ald. Ackerman favored trying out the by-law, citing the experience of Picton.

Ald. Cotton said that people kept their cars on the streets too long while shopping. Mayor Holloway said that people coming in to do a great deal of shopping should park a

Brazil Will Hear Of Jubilee On Radio

OTTAWA, Ont., June 28 (Canadian Press).—Canada's Diamond Jubilee programme which will be broadcasted from the Parliament buildings here on Dominion Day, promises to be heard as far away as Brazil without being re-layed. A test was made Sunday evening by broadcasting the music from a phonograph. Among the thousand of telegrams received from all points in Canada and the United States, one was received from Cooper Horton, radio fan at Pernambuco, Brazil, who reported the volume was excellent.

To enable Canadian fans to adjust their sets to the short wave, high power broadcasting station at Drummondville, Que., through which the programme will be broadcasted on Dominion Day, a special 15 minutes' test program will be given each night until July 1, commencing at 9 p.m., eastern standard time. The wave length is 32 meters.

RALPH DAVIS FACES TRIAL FOR STEALING

Committed This Morning When Ladies Identify Him as Burglar.

SEVERAL CHARGES.

Prisoner Accused of Entering Many Houses in West End of City.

Ralph Davis, alleged petty thief and house-breaker, who is charged with terrorizing women living in the west-end of the city, was to-day committed for trial at the Fall Assizes to be held in this city.

Mrs. Tillcock, first witness called to the stand by the Crown Attorney, G. W. Hatton, K.C., stated that on the afternoon of June 7 last, a man had entered her house and had stolen the sum of eleven dollars and seventy-five cents. "I was outside my kitchen on that morning," said Mrs. Tillcock, "and saw this man, and the man in the dock is the one that came out of my kitchen."

When asked if any conversation had taken place between them Mrs. Tillcock remarked that she had asked him what he wanted and that he had said he was looking for a Mrs. Smith's house where a chimney was on fire. He then left on his bicycle. "That night," stated Mrs. Tillcock, "a student, Taylor Quipp, a baorder at my house, missed $11.50 from his dresser drawer."

Taylor Quipp was then called, but finding that he was not in court, the police car was sent after him to the Canadian General Electric, where he is now employed.

Quipp stated that on that night he had missed the sum of eleven dollars and seventy-five cents, the change from his board bill after he had given Mrs. Tillcock his pay check to withdraw her board bill and to place the change in the drawer, from where it was found missing.

Chief George Gimblett, when called to the witness box, told the court that on that particular day he had not sent any firemen to inspect chimneys. "This," said the Chief, "can be verified with records."

Another charge was then laid against Davis of the same nature by Mrs. Harold Wilson, 534 Sherbrooke

WOULD DELAY NELSON TRIAL

Judge Says Fair Hearing Can't Be Obtained Before Regular Assizes.

ACCUSED OF MURDER.

WINNIPEG, June 28 (Canadian Press).—Earle Nelson, alleged "Dark Strangler" should not be tried until the regular session of the Fall Assizes in November, according to the opinion expressed by Chief Justice Mathers here last night.

Nelson last week was committed to stand trial on July 26 for the murder of Mrs. Emily Patterson and Lola Cowan, and the Chief Justice declared a fair hearing could not be accorded the accused next month, suggesting it would be better, in the interest of justice, to postpone the case until the Fall.

INVESTIGATE LIQUOR IMPORTS INTO DOMINION

Halifax Sittings of Commission Deal Largely Movement into Canada.

TRANSIT DOWN COAST.

Cruise of Rum-Runner 'Gemma' Outlined Briefly To Commission.

HALIFAX, N.S., June 28 (Canadian Press).—First-hand information about the ill-starred cruise of the rum-runner "Gemma," which cleared from Halifax for Georgetown, British West Indies, loitered down the coast of Nova Scotia, calling at three ports, and finally fell into the hands of United States officers somewhere off the coast of Maine, was given to the Royal Customs Commission yesterday afternoon by George H. Keating, former super-cargo of this ship. At the morning sitting, the cruise of the "Gemma" was outlined briefly to the commissioners, but it remained for Mr. Keating to elaborate this summary.

The tale of the "Gemma" was a part of the evidence offered at the opening sitting of the Commission in Nova Scotia. That the sittings here will be largely devoted to looking into the movement of liquor into Canada, as well as the "in transita" export of liquor down the coast, was clearly indicated yesterday. Officer after officer of the Customs who testified yesterday told the commissioners that liquor held the premier position in the commodities smuggled into his port or district, and stated that there was practically no commercial smuggling in other goods. There was a suggestion of silk smuggling from St. Pierre, but no evidence substantiates it. Cigarettes were mentioned as being in the contraband class also, but they were not dealt with very fully yesterday.

Wandered Down Coast.

Dealing with the cruise of the "Gemma," Mr. Keating told of his association in 1925 with the Halifax Brokerage and Storage Company. In the summer of 1925 he was supercargo on the "Gemma," and he received his pay from the above-named company, he said. A man from New York made arrangements with him to ship some liquor which came across from the Old Country on the liner Andania, to New York, or the high seas off New York, on board the "Gemma."

Gordon Lindsay, assistant counsel for the Commission, wanted the name of this American. Mr. Keating manifested some reluctance to reveal it.

"I don't care to give his name unless I have to," he protested.

"The chances are that it is not his correct name," interjected Chief Commissioner Brown.

"What is it?" pressed Mr. Lindsay.

"Craven," said Mr. Keating at last, "and sometimes O'Sullivan."

The first name of Mr. Craven, who was sometimes Mr. O'Sullivan, he gave as "Thomas."

The "Gemma" loaded her cargo of liquor and wandered down the coast of Nova Scotia in the summer of 1925. First she put in at Lunenburg, then she called at Shelburne, and finally she dropped into Yarmouth, clearing from each port for her destination as originally declared, namely, Georgetown, B.W.I. At the last-named port, according to the evidence given yesterday morning, she received her landing certificates from Georgetown. These, it was stated, were forged.

Mr. Keating explained these visits to Nova Scotia ports. The "Gemma," he said, was to receive her instructions from Craven on the way down. Therefore, she called at the Canadian ports for them. Sometimes, he explained, the instructions came through the Halifax Brokerage and Storage Company and sometimes they came to him direct from New York. The New York address of Craven, he thought, was 9 and 11 West Street. He believed that the liquor had never been intended for Georgetown and as far as he knew nine of the other shipments which were carried aboard the "Gemma" during the three years he was on board her had never gone to that destination.

Signed Declaration.

Commissioner Wright drew the attention of Mr. Keating to the fact that he (witness) had signed a declaration when the "Gemma" cleared for Georgetown that she was going to that port.

"I suppose I did. I was merely acting as an agent of the consignee," replied Mr. Keating. He did not know

Sponsor of Change Among Forgetful Ones

Ald. J. M. Greene was among those checked up at last night's Council meeting for calling Confederation Square Central Park. As it was his idea to change the name, his lapse was greeted with laughter.

CANADA ACROSS THE YEARS

By CANON F. G. SCOTT, C.M.G., D.S.O.

Sixty years is a long time to look forward to, but a short time to look back upon. It is, however, not often given to a man to carry in his memory two outstanding incidents, fifty years apart, in the national life of his country which shaped and moulded its destiny for all time.

By what, in human parlance, we call an accident, it has been my privilege to remember two events, separated by an interval of half a century, which marked like milestones the progress of Canada towards complete nationhood. I can distinctly remember on July 1st, 1867, my father driving me and my brother to the gates of McGill College grounds in Montreal to hear the royal salute fired on the signing of the Act of Confederation. The guns (as a boy of six, the noise was all that I remember) must have been small field pieces and possibly muzzle loaders. Sherbrooke Street in those days was half countrified. Through the College grounds meandered a little stream and gullies filled with hawthorn bushes marked the sites of the splendid Science and Engineering Buildings of today. The stream continued beyond Sherbrooke Street and eventually found its way in olden days to the creek which ran through Craig Street, because I remember my father telling me that as a boy when he went to the old Cathedral on Notre Dame Street on Sundays from Burnside House where the family lived at the time, he had to cross little bridges among the fields. In 1867, however, some houses, which still remain, stood among gardens along Sherbrooke Street. But if we were to reproduce the city as it was then, the scene would impress up as being very primitive. But if the appearance of the city should strike us as being primitive, what should we say of the outlook of Canada itself?

The chief landmarks of Montreal were the towers of Notre Dame Church and the old tubular Victoria Bridge. These gave an air of distinction to the city, but far away to the east were the Maritime Provinces and far, far away to the west were the wild prairie lands where Indians and herds of buffalo wandered unmolested by the advance of civilization. The west awoke every boy's imagination, and yellow dime novels with rude wood-cuts of Indian horsemen stamped on their covers, suggested the blood-curdling tales within. Of course such literature, though it must have been very harmless, was banned by parents and circulated, therefore, all the more freely among the boys during school hours. I do not think we knew of the colony beyond the Rockies, except by reading the name British Columbia in our school geographies.

As one looks back to the inchoate mass of territory in those days, one is impressed with the vision which the Fathers of Confederation saw when they drew together and dreamed of the great Dominion stretching "from sea to sea and from the river to the world's end." A boy of six could know nothing of this, but I remember the noise of the guns, and my father impressed upon us the fact that something important had taken place. Canada had started on her race among the nations of the world.

Fifty years passed away and the Golden Jubilee of Canada was to be celebrated. For a few years previously people had been making suggestions as to how this could most fittingly be done. It was thought that the King might pay us a visit and that a fleet of British, French and American war ships should gather at Quebec in friendly intercourse. But the Supreme Director of human affairs willed otherwise. When July 1st, 1917, arrived, it found the young manhood of Canada linked in discipline and comradeship on the greatest battlefield of the world. Men from east and west, from Atlantic and Pacific seaboards, from the old eastern cities and those which had sprung up on the trackless prairies, stood side by side fighting for the cause of liberty which they had grown to love in the wide stretches of our Dominion.

July 1st, 1917, was a Sunday, and so it was easy to give the occasion a religious significance. General, now Sir, Archibald Macdonell had just taken over the command of the First Canadian Division, as General Currie had gone to the Corps. Our headquarters were at Chateau D'Acq near Mount St. Eloi. Of course the celebration appealed to the patriotic heart of our new Commander, and the Band of the Royal Canadian Regiment, by his arrangement, supplied us with music at the church parade. To me, it was a wonderful moment. Before me, as I took the service, stood the ranks of bronzed men, now members of one of the greatetst fighting machines in the world. The sun beat down from the blue and cloudless sky. Around us were the rich fields of France and the straight paved roads with their fringes of graceful trees running off into the sky line. In the distance, at intervals, when the band was silent, we heard the pounding of shells on the battlefront where Canada was playing her part among the warring nations. As I addressed the men, numbers of whom wore decorations for bravery, I thought of the day, fifty years before, when the small field-guns in the McGill College grounds gave us the signal to start the race.

What a change had come about in those fifty years!

How it kindled the breast with pride to think of the beloved land far over the sea and the destiny to which it was called, if only we could advance in the unity of a single aim and the comradeship of one great national cause.

When the band closed the service by playing "O Canada," and "God Save the King" we felt that under the dispensation of Providence the manifestation of heroism and loyalty by Canada in the field was the most fitting way our Jubilee could have been celebrated. It was a pledge that the same qualities when manifested in the peace-time activities of our Country would carry us on to still greater achievements and finer results of nationhood in the future.

This year, another decade in our history has gone by. The deep scars made by the war are healing and we press on towards the goal. Out of the past comes the call to us to advance with renewed vigor and undaunted courage.

Linked in comradeship and aim the children of various races treasuring various national traditions, speaking various languages, cradled in various religious faiths, let us work out our destiny in mutual trust and forbearance.

Let our outlook be wide as the Dominion itself, and let our citizenship be founded in a patriotism so rich and deep that when one part of Canada suffers, the whole of Canada will suffer with it.

In this way shall the Diamond Jubilee of Canada give an added lustre to the crown of our young country's national life.

O Canada, my country and my love
O Canada, with cloudless skies above,
Where'er I roam,
Where'er my home,
My heart goes back to thee,
Thy lakes and streams,
Thy boundless dreams,
Thy rivers running free.
O Canada, O Canada,
God pour His blessing on thee from above
O Canada, my country and my love.

British Bickerings Forgotten In Danger

CHICAGO, June 28 (Canadian Press).—The British family of nations may bicker among themselves, but they will meet an outside menace with a united front, Sir Cecil Hurst, legal adviser to the British Foreign Office, told a University of Chicago audience today during the second of a course of lectures on "The Problems of British Empire."

LINDBERGH WILL FLY MONOPLANE TO OTTAWA CITY

New York-Paris Flier To Attend Diamond Jubilee Celebration.

FLY FROM ST. LOUIS.

Will Arrive on July 2nd and Remain For Two Days.

NEW YORK, June 28 (Canadian Press).—The people of Ottawa will have the opportunity of seeing the famous monoplane, "The Spirit of St. Louis," when Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, New York-Paris flier, visits the Canadian Capital next Saturday and Sunday.

Harry H. Knight, personal representative of Lindbergh and one of the St. Louis backers of the flight to Paris, notified the Canadian Press last night that Colonel Lindbergh will return to St. Louis and fly from the Mound City to Ottawa in the machine which carried him to fame in a solo flight across the Atlantic.

Colonel Lindbergh will arrive in Ottawa on July 2, and according to previous announcements will remain there till July 3. He accepted an invitation from the Canadian government, tendered through the Canadian Legation and State Department at Washington, to attend the Diamond Jubilee.

The young Colonel has been successfully eluding reporters since he arrived here from Washington Friday in an army pursuit plane in which he flew from St. Louis via Dayton and Washington, and there was some doubt whether he would make the trip across the Canadian border in the army plane or return to St. Louis for the other half of his famous partnership, "We."

The Canadian Press learned yesterday that Colonel Lindbergh was staying at an address on Park Avenue and telephoned him asking him whether he would fly the Spirit of St. Louis to Ottawa, and requesting some details regarding his plans regarding his departure.

Mr. Knight replied: "Mr. Lindberg will fly Spirit of St. Louis from St. Louis." He made no mention of the time of departure.

Colonel Lindbergh is understood to be devoting himself to private conference with a view to interesting commercial aviation.

JAPANESE WILLING TO DISCUSS ANY SUGGESTION OR PROPOSAL LOOKING TO NATIONAL ECONOMY

Insofar as Such Fall Within the Scope of Their Instructions.

FACE NEW SITUATION.

Viscount Ishil Says No Idea of Proposing Any Security Treaty.

GENEVA, June 28 (Canadian Press).—Suddenly taking on a new angle the tri-partite naval conference was faced by a new situation last night when the Japanese delegation with considerable solemnity announced that, since the British proposal to discuss capital ships appeared to possess the merit of promising diminished naval expenditures, the delegation had cabled to Tokio asking for new instructions.

Practically the entire Japanese delegation, headed by Admiral Saito, ceremoniously filed into the hall where the newspapermen had been required to meet them, and after the distribution of a lengthy statement touching Japan's general attitude in the conference, Viscount Ishii, former Foreign Minister, in addition to explaining the statement in the above sense, declared in answer to a question concerning the probability of a three-two security pact that so far as Japan was concerned, there was no idea of proposing any security treaty.

Favors British Idea.

Viscount Ishii's remarks were of a tenor to give the distinct impression that the Japanese delegation is sympathetic now to the British idea of discussing at Geneva some fundamental features of the Washington treaty—a plan which was vigorously opposed by the United States delegation. Viscount Ishii emphasized that the Japanese are willing to discuss and study any suggestion or proposal looking to national economy and alleviation of the burden on the taxpayer insofar as such suggestions fall within the scope of their instructions.

As there had been a distinct impression in official circles here that Japan might propose a perpetual peace pact with the United States, Ishii's disclaimer last night may mean that the Japanese have definitely abandoned any idea of taking the initative, or it may be interpreted in the sense that Tokio has no plan for venturing into a three-power peace pact with Great Britain and the United States together.

Last night's developments give the conference a more critical aspect because the United States and British delegations are still wide apart on the question of re-opening the Washington treaty and Japan may decide to throw in her lot with Great Britain. No arrangements have been made for plenary sessions but the British are believed to be actively advocating plenary meetings for public debate on the question of examining the Washington decisions.

Satisfactory Progress.

GENEVA, June 28 (Associated Press).—The technical committee of the tri-partite naval conference is making satisfactory progress as expressed in an official communique yesterday. French and Italian observers attended the meeting of the committee but did not take part in the discussion.

The communique said:

"Very satisfactory progress was made by the technical committee yesterday on the important question of deciding the particular types of vessels of small combatant value that shall be excluded from the limitations to be agreed upon at the conference.

"The proceedings showed a marked desire on the part of the different delegations to meet each other's views on various points under discussion."

Would Baffle Pysche.

Even Pysche, personification of the human soul, would be baffled, were she here at Geneva to regulate the multiple problems of the tri-partite naval conference, a Japanese communique, waxing lyrically mythological, declared last night.

The communique recalled that Pysche "was enabled by Eros to sort out any confusion of threads," and then added: "Well our Pysche, the intelligent human mind, is going to be enabled by Eros, God of love and good will, to sort out this tangle. She is going to do it in this conference, and who can doubt that she will succeed."

Will Use Planes Spray Wheat Fields

FARGO, N.D., June 28 (Canadian Press).—Planes for dusting wheat fields with "cola," a chemical with which experiments are to be made in the hope that it will prevent or control black stem rust on wheat will be made on an extensive scale in Manitoba, and will be tried in a smaller way in Cass County, North Dakota, it was learned yesterday.

T. M. Shields, officer of the Royal Canadian Flying Corps, spent Sunday here en route from Philadelphia to Winnipeg with a new aeroplane which will be used in dusting fields in Manitoba. It is planned to treat about 8,000 acres in the Canadian provinces.

Walter R. Reed, who is to make smaller experiments on his farms near Chaffe, N.D., conferred with Mr. Shields regarding the proposed Canadian experiment. Mr. Reed will have experiments made on three different kinds of wheat, dusting about 10 to 15-acre tracts of each.

DROWNING GIRL IS RESCUED BY GALLANT YOUTH

Ross Davidson, 16, Plunges Into Otonabee To Save Margaret Delane.

NEAR BELMONT CLUB.

Girl Becomes Exhausted in Struggle With Swift Current.

By a brilliant feat of life-saving, 16-year old Ross Davidson, employed in the grocery store of his father, H. Davidson, on Lock street, yesterday afternoon rescued Margaret Delane from the waters of the Otonabee.

Miss Delane, who is also around 16 years of age, was bathing in the river near the Belmont club house. She swam out into the middle of the river and on attempting to return found that the rapidly moving current was too strong for her. Her screams attarcted the attention of young Davidson, who was passing along the bank. He instantly pulled off his shoes and threw off his shirt and swam out to her rescue. He was not a moment too soon, for the girl, completely exhausted, was on the point of sinking when he reached her. Striking out for the river bank, Davidson found that his remaining clothing was hindering his progress, and with remarkable coolness he succeeded in divesting himself of his trousers without loosening his hold on his precious freight.

Both were very much exhausted on reaching the bank, and Miss Delane was taken to the house of Mrs. McGaritty, where she received sufficient attention to enable her to walk home.

Young Davidsons feat was greatly commended by those who witnessed it. A movement is afoot to have some suitable ecognition made of his heroic exploit. Shortly before he came here with his parents from Ottawa, he earned a great deal of praise for rescuing a chum from the Ottawa river.

POLICE PREPARE PARADE RULES

No Cars Allowed on George Street Between King and Smith Streets.

CROSSINGS KEPT CLEAR.

No automobiles will be allowed on either side of George street from Smith to King street and on Murray street from George to Aylmer between 12 and 1 o'clock during Friday's parade. Inspector J. Reid told The Examiner to-day.

At the corner of Hunter and George, Simcoe and George, and Charlotte and George streets a twenty foot space will be left to permit members of the Fire Department to cross the street if necessary.

Citizens will not be permitted to stand on the crossings and are requested to stand on the sidewalks so as not to interfere with the heavy traffic that is expected.

In case anybody has business of such an urgent nature that it necessitates their crossing George street during the course of the pardae arrangements have been made whereby they can do so by first speaking to the traffic officer who will permit them to cross between the floats.

ROME, June 28 (Canadian Press).—The Hungarian Government has informed the National Institute of Agriculture that this year's wheat crop is estimated at 1,372,500 metric tons, compared with 2,038,700 metric tons last year and an annual average for the last five years of 1,624,200 metric tons.

NATIONAL RADIO SYSTEM TESTED

Special Programme Broadcast From Ottawa To Many Stations.

GREAT SUCCESS.

OTTAWA, June 27. Canadian Press —Every objective of the radio broadcasting committee for the Canadian Jubilee programme on July 1st was reached through a special test made at 10 p.m., Sunday. This first all Canadian broadcast programme was placed upon the air here and was listened to with deep interest and appreciation by thousand of fans throughout the entire Dominion, as is indicated by the flood of messages received here and at various stations throughout Canada.

Sunday night's test was sent from Room 184, House of Commons, where the temporary studio and control station is located. It consisted of a programme of special gramaphone records, vocal and musical, and at only one point, Vancouver, was the quality not all that might be desired.

OPPOSE INQUIRY BANKING SYSTEM

Winston Churchill Says Regrets Changes British Financial Policy Contemplated.

LONDON, June 28. — (Associated Press.)—Winston Churchill, Chancellor of the Exchequer, speaking in the House of Commons last night, maintained his opposition to the granting of an inquiry into the working of the British banking system as advocated by Reginald McKenna, chairman of the Midland Bank on June 16.

He declined that he would regret very much taking any steps which might indicate that changes in British financial policy were in contemplation.

William Graham, Labor, and other members urged the government to adopt Mr. McKenna's suggestion, Frederick Pethwick-Lawrence, Labor, going even further by proposing a world conference to ration the supply of gold with a view of stabilizing not only exchanges, but price levels throughout the world. He thought that the unofficial conference now sitting in New York among representatives of the United States, France, Germany and Great Britain was not wide enough for the purpose.

Conditions Not Same.

Chancellor Churchill in reply, declared that conditions in the United States could not be applied to those in Great Britain. He said that the United States' percentage of gold to its note issue, because of an overabundance of gold, was nearer an actual eighty per cent. than its nominal forty per cent., while the actual British ratio is less than the nominal forty of the United States. Consequently, he said, the adoption of the United States' system would involve immediate contraction of credit under which any influx or departure of gold would produce an exaggerated effect upon the supply of credit and more violent fluctuations than under

HORSE STRANGLED.

Bonar Law Boys Have Severe Loss While Fishing.

BONAR LAW, June 28. — What proved to be the sad ending of a fishing party happened on Tuesday, when two boys of Spry's Settlement had taken their horse and rig and gone to Callahan's Rapids to fish. Leaving their horse tied to a tree, it became wound up and strangled itself to death. When the boys returned they found their horse just about gone. It only lived a short while. The horse was owned by William Spry of Spry's Settlement. It was a valuable horse, and indeed will be a big loss to Mr. Spry.

Small Boy Saves Child From Sewer

DETROIT, June 28.—A baby girl was saved from death in a sewer yesterday by a 13-year-old boy after police and firemen had been balked in rescue attempts.

The child, Dorothy Backs, aged 2, was taken from the underground chamber uninjured by Harvey Bassert, who was lowered to the youngster on a rope held by police. Two attempts were necessary before rescue was effected.

The frantic mother, who summoned help, told officers the child had fallen into the sewer while playing at the rear of her home, 4996 Lovett Street. Because the opening into the 8-foot ditch was too small to allow a man to enter, young Bassert was enlisted from a crowd of neighborhood volunteers.

Princess Pleases Official's Daughter

MONTREAL, Q., June 28.—(Special.)—A princess, in the eyes of a small girl, must wear a crown or at least a coronet, to be real and only the kindly thought of a Princess who visited Montreal yesterday saved one little tot from bitter disappointment. The visitor was Princess Constanza Pignatelli Di Monticalve, who with her husband had crossed to Canada. The Prince, leaving the vessel at Quebec ,went on to Northern Quebec for a week's fishing in the Lake St. John district, while Princess Pignatelli disembarked at Montreal, spending Sunday here and leaving Sunday night on the Washingtonian, over the Canadian National Railways, for Madison, Conn.

On arrival in Montreal Princess Pignatelli was met by an official of the National system who was arranging details of her transportation, and as she had some time to spare before taking her train, was taken for a motor drive. In conversation, the railway official mentioned that his little daughter, hearing that he was to meet a Princess, had asked for a full description of her and her crown, but the princess wore no crown which he could describe. Rising to the occasion, Princess Pignatelli took out one of her cards, with her coronet embossed upon it and wrote a short personal greeting to the little girl, who is now firmly convinced that she has a message from a real princess, "with crown'n everything."

CANADIAN JAILED; CHEATING FRENCH

Promised Emigrants Jobs in Canada—Collected 100 Francs in Advance.

PARIS, June 27. United Press. — John Emile Cooper, hailing from Port Arthur Ont., and giving his age as 43, has been sentenced by the Metz tribunal to six months in prison for obtaining money by false pretences by offering people non-existent jobs in Canada.

Cooper described himself as the European representative of an agency with hundreds of branches throughout Canada. He guaranteed his clients steady jobs in Canada. All they had to do was to pay him a hundred francs in advance. After this nothing materialized and people whom he cheated took action.

WEDDING BELLS.

MILLAGE—DARLING.

LAKEFIELD, June 28.—A very interesting event occurred on Wednesday, June 22nd at 4 o'clock in the afternoon at the home of Mr. Percy Darling, Douro township, when his elder daughter, Hazel May, was united in marriage to Stanley Millage, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Millage of Smith township.

The ceremony was performed by the Rev. S. A. Kemp of Lakefield on the lawn beneath an arch of evergreen and daisies and in the presence of about sixty guests. Miss Frances Fairbairn of Lakefield played the wedding march.

The bride wore white duchess satin with the conventional veil and orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses. She was attended by her sister, Miss Grace Darling, who wore rose pink crepe de chene and carried a bouquet of pink carnations. Mr. Stanley Darling, cousin of the bride, was the best man. After the ceremony the guests repaired to the dining room, which was decorated prettily for the occasion, and partook of a sumptuous supper and a social hour was spent. Later Mr. Stanley Darling brought the bridal party by motor to Peterborough where Mr. and Mrs. Millage took the train for Toronto and points west; on their return they will reside in Smith township, where a host of friends are ready to welcome them and to wish them a long and happy life together.

The bride received many beautiful gifts from her large circle of friends and was the guest of honor at three showers, the first given by the C.G.I.T. group of Regent street United church of which group she was president for the past two years, and one from the neighbors and friends in Douro and a third from the ladies of Regent street church.

An Ex-Buck Private Goes Back to France

Dear Mac:

I didn't cover all the woods in my last letter, as I had planned, because I saw it would be too long. There are two of the most important yet to be mentioned, and after that I will tell you about the Courcellette of today, and the sugar refinery.

High Wood, perched upon the ridge, looks well if the eye catches it in conjunction with the bright new spire of the church at Martinpuich, but a close investigation shows that, as in Trones Wood, the ground is churned and impassable save by the rides, and the tangled undergrowth still holds many relics of the days when, in a fiendish bombardment, birds mingled their songs with the whistling of the shells.

Today, trim fields spread on every side, cultivated to the very edge of the Wood, where buttercups and wild flowers make a gay fringe of colour.

High Wood has a row of memorials along its western side. Naturally, the most imposing is that of the 47th Division, for that was one of London's division, and it was the men of London, who more than any others, paid the price that reedemed this Wood. But others aided, too, and paid dearly. Thus the 1st Division has commemorated its men with a wooden cross, as also has the 51st Highland Division. Another simple wooden memorial recalls the exploits of a particularly gallant regiment, the South Wales Borderers, who left many of their bravest and best amid the shattered trees of High Wood in September 1916.

But the Wood of Woods here, the vilest of death spots was Delville Wood. Not merely by reason of the similarity of the terms did the soldiers re-name it Devil's Wood.

The great part of its story can be told more effectively in a paragraph than in a chapter.

On the 14th July 1916, the South African Brigade, numbering 121 officers and 3,032 men marched up to Delville Wood. On 20th July the Brigade marched out, or rather the remnant of it, totalling 143. Even when lightly wounded men had returned and various rearward details assembled, the muster was only 750.

What went on in those days can be left to the imagination, and the worst that imagination can conjure up would not depict adequately the horrors of Delville Wood. History says that the Wood changed hands four times, but history merely stumbles about such intense fighting as went on here. The rides, named after famous streets in Edinburgh and in London, were thick with dead.

The honors here were shared by the South Africans with other troops, with Scottish and with English troops, who carried on the battle for a further seven days after the South African Brigade had been withdrawn.

But all are agreed that Delville Wood is South Africa's by right of sacrifice, by right of courage. Thus the Government of the Union has acquired Delville Wood, and is laying out the southern portion as a park, in the centre of which, on a commanding point visible even from Montauban, a magnificent memorial is in course of erection.

The memorial takes the form of an extensive screen with circular shelters at each end and a tall column in the centre. Upon this column is, in course of erection, a great bronze group representing Castor and Pollux, the twin sons of Liba, each holding part of the reins of a horse, which stands between them. Thus is symbolised the co-operation in war of the British and Dutch elements in South Africa.

The park leading to the memorial is planted with oak trees. The acorns from which they sprang came from South Africa and were gathered from trees which were planted there by the Hugenots who brought the original acorns with them from France.

Perhaps the best view is obtained from a point close by the sugar factory at Longueval (yes, there is a sugar factory again at Longueval on the site of the old), for here, looking across a cornfield, the eye travels over an extensive British cemetery and gradually up a cleared slope to the massive white memorial which crowns the landscape.

The ground in front of this memorial being cleared over a space of 100 feet wide by 300 yards long, affords a great contrast with the uncleared portion of the wood, where gnarled roots are still to be seen, dried and withered, lying where they were flung by the bombardment. In clearing this ground, there were many calls on the services of the ever-vigilant men of the Imperial War Graves Commission, and the cemetery at Longueval added new rows of crosses to its sad array of nearly six thousand.

It is eloquent of the decimation which the South Africans suffered at Delville Wood, that of all these 6,000 graves, only about 200 are known to be those of South Africa's men.

It is fitting, therefore, that the Government of the Union should raise at this point a memorial which in magnitude shall be symbolic of the marvellous courage and endurance of her sons, so many of whom have no known graves.

Student Flier, Taking Spin, Crashes Plane; Steps Out Unhurt and Sells Wreck for $20

CURTISS FIELD, L.I., June 28. — Ramiro Sosa, a young Mexican student flier with only twenty hours in the air alone to his credit, decided to go out for a little spin last evening. He jumped into his Jenny biplane, a ship that has seen many days, and in defiance of the advice of aeronautical sages, who told him the air was too bumpy and treacherous for an inexperienced pilot, he sped off toward the clouds.

Away he went, through the gusts and flaws of a veering, uncertain wind. He seemed to be flying uncommonly well for a "kid" flier. But when he turned and started to come down the wind a dangerous thing for even the most accomplished pilot to attempt, his engine ceased to function and the antiquated Jenny slipped into a tail spin.

Sosa didn't get frightened. At least not very frightened, for he had the presence of mind to start manipulating the controls in an effort to avert a crash. He was just righting his plane when the ground interrupted his efforts. The Jenny crashed on her right wing; there was a general splintering sound, and Sosa climbed out of the wreckage, unhurt.

There and then an aviation junk dealer did some quick thinking. While watchers were murmuring their solicitations, this dealer, whose name was not ascertained, jumped to the side of Sosa, took him by the arm, and said: "I'll give you $20.00 for your plane."

Sosa accepted the offer.

Last night he wasn't quite sure whether his future as an aviator was sold with the Jenny or whether he will use the $20.00 toward a new machine.

CHIANG ISSUES WARRANT FOR AGENT'S DEATH

Chinese Nationalist Leader Says Michael Borodin Deserves To Die.

HAS BEEN TRAITOR.

Actions Have Damaged Cause of Party, General Declares.

SHANGHAI, June 27.— (United Press.) — A death warrant, signed, sealed and awaiting only actual execution, has been issued by Chang Kai-Shek, moderate Nationalist leader, against Michael M. Borodin, mysterious Communist leader in the Hankow government in China. Chiang disclosed his intention to kill Borodin in an exclusive interview with the United Press.

"Borodin has not long to live," he said when asked what he was going to do about the political adviser of the radical Nationalist government.

"He will never get back to Russia alive. By his selfish, traitorous acts he has irreparably injured the Nationalist cause. For this he shall die."

COUNCIL WILL PROVIDE FUNDS

little way from the centre of the city.

Ald. Phelan favored trying the system on some other streets first. Ald. Hancock thought that it would enable more cars to park in front of one store.

Ald. Fife called for the Ayes and Nays on the third reading, which resulted as follow:

Ayes	Nays
Cotton	Phelan
Stocker	Fife
McIntyre	Macdonald
Hancock	Denne
Ackerman
Greene
The Mayor

New Confederation Square.

Ald. Greene moved the motion of which he had given notice at the last meeting, calling for the changing of the name of Central Park to Confederation Square. He said that he had not been aware of the Premier's suggestion to do something like this or he would have given that as an argument.

Ald. Macdonald expressed support and proposed that it be made a restricted area.

Ald. Hancock suggested that the name be applied to James Stevenson (Riverside) Park. He recalled the fact that Central Park was once a cemetery, and the people whose relatives had been buried there might not like the change. He also spoke of the many good-byes said there in wartime and said that the name would be a link with the past.

Ald. Ackerman questioned the value of the change. He said the name had become familiar through long usage.

Alderman Fife, Hancock and Ackerman voted against the change.

City Clerk Armstrong recalled the fact that the name Central Park had been given the grounds only about 35 years ago.

Area To Be Restricted.

The streets bordering Victoria Park and Confederation Square will be made a restricted area, on motion of Alderman Macdonald and Ackerman. This will give the city control of the erection or changing of buildings on these streets, opposite two of the city's prettiest parks. The by-law will be presented at the next meeting.

Sewage Plant Incomplete.

The Mayor introduced the matter of complaints about the sewage disposal plant. He said he had interviewed two experts on the matter and had been told that the plant did not go far enough. They recommended the building of digesting tanks and the burning of the gases. The plant, they said, was of splendid type, but this addition must be made. They were willing to undertake the education of the operators in managing the additional plant.

Ald. Fife corroborated the Mayor's outline of the situation saying that the employees are doing as well as they can under the circumstances.

Mr. Parsons said that he had opposed the type of plant from the first on the ground that there was no way of disposing of the sludge. The Provincial Board of Health had said "lagoon it" and now that is done it is not satisfied, he said. He was directed to make a report.

Roads Repairs.

Ald. Denne asked if the new oil received is better than the first carload. He also questioned the value of oiling the road before filling the holes.

Mr. Parsons said that it was because the people were demanding oil quickly.

Ald. McIntyre and The Mayor said that the holes in the roads should be squared out before filling them. Ald. Fife said he had suggested three years ago putting gravel at various places in the city in fall for use in filling holes as soon as the snow goes. The present method, he agreed, is inefficient.

Ald. Denne, speaking again of the question, condemned the method of repairing the roads and mentioned several places as needing repairs now.

Mayor Holloway expressed the opinion that oil should be put on thicker, saying that the streets are dusty again soon after being oiled.

A number of eating house licenses, mostly renewals, were granted. Two booths for the jubilee celebration were included. Ald. Denne proposed some restriction on Sunday opening of ice cream parlors, saying that sometimes there are undesirable crowds around these places.

"Pep" On Sundays.

Ald. Phelan suggested that ice cream parlors should be allowed to stay open on Sundays, to give some "pep". He was favorable to forbidding music.

Ald. Greene took objection to Ald. Phelan's proposal. He said that music was beneficial at all times, but that "pep" was not needed on Sundays. The day has been set aside, he said, by all religious denominations, and the sooner people get back to the old ideas the better it will be for the country.

The Mayor reported that he had discussed the matter of purchasing the lot at the corner of Park and McDonnel streets, with Mr. Magrath, Chairman of the H.E.P.C. They had also discussed the overhead wire of the street railway system. Mr. Magrath offering to leave the trolley wires up if the City would pay $1,000, so that if the city made arrangements for a new street car system the wire would be there.

The aldermen were all opposed to the plan.

The offer of F. McKay to sell the conduit system of the Canadian Machine Telephone Company to the city for $4,000 was laid over until the City Solicitor looks into the agreement with the company. This conduit is used by the fire department.

The Mayor said that the owner had agreed to accept a small payment for the conduit, being willing to wait for the remainder until the new estimates are struck.

The alderman believed that the city should possess the conduit, in the belief that all wire will eventually be put underground.

Jubilee Preparations.

Ald. Denne's suggestion that the grader be put on the yards of the Macdonald Company to level the ground before the Jubilee sports was adopted. The company will put timbers there for seats for the spectators at the water sports. The fire brigade will look after the yards of the Peterborough Lumber Companies to prevent fires.

At the request of the Jubilee Parade Committee, the approach to the eastern entrance to the Armories will be fied up with plank so that the floats can come down easily.

The city will advance $500 to the Jubilee Committee for change at Exhibition Grounds on Friday and Saturday.

Ex-Ald. Joseph Crowe, operator of the Sewage Disposal plant, asked that the impression be corrected that he was negligent or incapable, saying that he had been following the instructions of the Doerr Company makers of the machinery.

A letter was read from R. E. Layfield, inclosing a petition for the removal of the rails on Water street and laying of pavement in its place. This will be taken up in Board of Works.

The protest of the residents of Ware street, and nearby streets against the noises of shunting trains on the C.N.R. siding will be sent on to the railway, with reference to the city by-law on the matter.

The Aldermen will attend the Decoration Day services of the Canadian Legion at St. Peter's Cemetery on July 17 and at Little Lake Cemetery on July 24.

Ald Greene moved that the trees near the stop signs be trimmed. Ald Macdonald, in seconding the motion asked what has become of the sign at the corner of Sherbrooke and George streets. The motion was carried.

FALLING TREE KILLS FARMER

Rankin Man, Deaf, Unable To Hear Tree Coming Down.

FELLED BY SONS.

PEMBROKE, June 28.—When a tree was being chopped down by his two sons, David and Alfred, fell in the opposite direction from which it was intended in a bush in the Township of Wilberforce, near Rankin, Gustave Beskau, aged 64 years, received injuries Friday afternoon from which he died Sunday night in the Cottage Hospital. Death was caused by concussion and paralysis, it is said.

Mr. Beskau was deaf, and apparently did not hear the tree falling. He had wandered away from his sons a few minutes previous to the accident, and they did not think he was near the tree.

Born in Germany, Gustave Beskau had lived a number of years in Russia. While there he married Miss Julia Tessman, who survives him. Thirty-six years ago they came to Canada and settled near Rankin. Ten children, four daughters and six sons survive him.

CONFIRMATION AT LAKEFIELD

Class of 31 Presented To Bishop O'Brien For Holy Rite.

IMPRESSIVE SERVICE.

LAKEFIELD, June 28. — His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, of Peterboro, administered the Sacrament of Confirmation to a class of thirty-one boys and girls from the parishes of St. Paul's, Lakefield, and St. Mary's, Young's Point. His Lordship catechized the class for some time on matters of their faith, expressing great pleasure at the intelligent answers which were given, showing that they had been well grounded in doctrines of the church. His Lordship urged strongly regular and frequent attendance at the services of the church, and especially at Holy Communion; special remembrance of private prayers night and morning, and also he asked for a promise from each to abstain from intoxicating liquors at least till they were twenty-one years of age.

The class recited the Apostles' Creed and the Lord's Prayer with His Lordship, and by their demeanour reflected credit on their parish priest, their parents, and their teacher.

The Bishop deplored very much the lack of religious instruction in the Public Schools of Ontario. There is in these days a considerable amount of criticism because of the Catholic Separate Schools, and one would think to hear it that it was a situation known only in Canada, he said. In England there are Anglican Separate Schools, Roman Catholic Separate Schools, and Nonconformist Separate Schools, and the taxes are shared by everyone as the total cost of these Separate Schools is pooled. In this way children receive in their day school, instruction in their faith. His Lordship urged that a greater number of boys enter the priesthood and a greater number of girls enter the convent to devote their lives to God as nuns.

Clergy present were: Rev. J. J. Garvey, Lakefield, Rev. P. Costello and Rev. K. Corkery of St. Peter's cathedral, Peterboro, Rev. J. Guiry of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, Peterboro, and Rev. J. V. McAuley, of St. Martin's Church, Ennismore.

The church was filled to capacity for the beautiful and impressive service.

Among those from Young's Point who attended the confirmation service at St. Paul's Church, Lakefield, on Tuesday evening were: Mr. P. P. Young, Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Young, Miss Aileen and Master Freddy Young, Mrs. Walter Young, and Miss Irene Young.

The forty hours' devotions begin on Sunday, June 26th, in St. Paul's Church, Lakefield.

INVESTIGATE LIQUOR IMPORTS

anything about how the landing certificates were obtained. He gave "Mr. Moriarty," as the man in the Halifax Brokerage and Storage Company whom he was in touch with.

Add To Patrol.

Angus Young, chief preventive officer for Cape Breton Island, told the Commission that conditions along the coast which he and his men patrol had improved considerably in the last month or so. Fifteen additional men had been given to him since the first of the present month and he believed that three speed boats were to be put on the Cape Breton Coast before the re-organization was complete. He did not think there was smuggling in other commodities than liquor. He explained to the commission that the actual landing of the liquor was carried out in small boat about thirty feet in length. The ship from which these boats obtained their cargoes of liquor "hovered" outside the three-mile limit.

Liquor also figured in the testimony of Hugh W. Baillie, customs enforcement officer at New Glasgow, who was examined by R. B. Law, assistant consel, "not as much as there used to be," was the answer of Mr. Baillie when asked if there was much liquor smuggling in his vicinity. There had been a good deal of smuggled liquor in New Glasgow in the past, Mr. Baillie said, which appeared to have come in via the Straits of Northumberland. He advocated placing more speed boats on the straits to prevent the landing of liquor cargoes. "Once they get into an automobile, it is next to impossible to get it off, in our country," he said.

Non-Marked Packages.

The non-marking of packages shipped itno Canada from the United States came in for some attention when N. C. Wyman, Collector of Customs at Yarmouth, took the stand. He was examined as to the method of selecting packages for inspection by the customs appraiser at his port. In this connection he said that packages from the United States were frequently not marked with a number to correspond with the number on the invoice. He thought it would be a good thing if the customs insisted on the marking of these packages. Baggage of all passengers landing at Yarmouth from the Boston boat was examined, Mr. Wyman said. At the height of the season, the number of passengers on one of these boats might be five thousand.

Another Yarmouth officer, Arthur Rogers, who said that he was in charge of the registration of shipping and the postal business, told the Commission that in the fiscal year 1926-1927 ninety liquor vessels had come into Yarmouth harbor. They entered for food and repairs. Under new departmental regulations these ships could not enterd in this way. Mr. Rogers said that up to about four months ago all liquor vessels clearing from Yarmouth made false clearances and did not proceed to their stated destinations. He believed that there was a good deal of liquor smuggling in the vicinity of Yarmouth.

Frank W. Carroll, collector at Pictou, informed the commissioners that the Straits of Northumberland were convenient for the liquor smuggler. A boat was needed to hunt out the smugglers. Mr. Carroll said that there were no sales tax arrears at Pictou. The revenue at the port of New Glasgow during the past fiscal year was given by Stanley T. McCurdy, collector there, as between two hundred thousand and two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Again there were no sales tax arrears.

Staff Sergeant Blakeney, of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Patrol here told of twenty-two seizures which had been made from the Dauphinee family at Tantallon, not far from Halifax. Cases were entered in each of the 22, and the result was four convictions, nine dismissals, six awaiting trial, and three in which there had been no prosecution.

Not Necessary To Diet

The process of digestion in the stomach depends entirely on the supply of gastric or digestive fluids. The active principles of these fluids are known as enzymes. Digestion can only be actually and lastingly relieved by increasing the enzymes in the stomach.

Now this is exactly what Renzyme does. It supplies enzymes to the digestive fluids and therefore immediately restores their effectiveness in digesting the food in the stomach.

Relief is obtained promptly. You do not need to diet. You are soon convinced that Renzyme helps you as no other treatment has ever been able to do.

Mr. John Sector, 667, St. Urbain St., Montreal, Que., writes: "For years I have been suffering with stomach disorders and consequently never able to enjoy my meals. However, I am glad to inform you that I have found in your preparation 'RENZYME' an extraordinary digestant and I notice that you claim for your preparation the power of rejuvenating the stomach and I must say you are absolutely correct.

"You are to be congratulated in your efforts to bring to the General Public and the sufferers with stomach ills, something that really is effective. I am a constant user and will certainly recommend it to anyone desirous of obtaining the healthy functioning of the stomach."

You can obtain Renzyme from your druggist at $1.50 a bottle, or it will be sent to you, postpaid, on receipt of price, if you mention this paper. The Renzyme Laboratories, Toronto, 2, Canada.

AT CAMP ROTARY.

While the minds of young Peterborough and old Peterborough are chiefly filled this week with thoughts of the Diamond Jubilee celebration, it should not be forgotten that the Rotary-Y.M.C.A. camp at Clear Lake opens for the season next week, and that the opportunity for a delightful holiday thus presents itself to the boys of Peterborough.

Camp Rotary, one of the finest camps of its kind in Canada, beautifully located, splendidly equipped and under fine supervision, offers advantages that should commend themselves to the parents of Peterborough who are seeking for vacation facilities for their sons.

At this camp the boys will be in charge of competent supervisors who know how to make each day a delight, and at the same time how to guard against foolhardiness and carelessness.

The safety of the youngsters is the first consideration at Camp Rotary, small boats are forbidden, swimming is supervised, and the camp navy consists of staunch boats, safe and commodious under any conditions.

The accommodation of this camp should be freely taxed throughout the summer in view of the many advantages offered at this beautiful Clear Lake institution.

REASONS FOR CELEBRATING.

Some concrete and effective reasons why Canadians should be glad and proud to celebrate the Diamond Jubilee of Confederation were eloquently set forth by P. D. Kerr, K.C., in the course of a fine Confederation address to the Rotary Club.

We have enjoyed some of the things mentioned by Mr. Kerr so long that we take them as a matter of course, yet at such a time as this it is well to recall what advantages we enjoy that are peculiar to the British Empire and to this country.

In the first place we have freedom, freedom of action as individuals, freedom of action as a self-governing country.

Secondly, in no other country in the world, as Mr. Kerr pointed out, is justice administered so fairly and impartially as under the Union Jack.

Nowhere is property or life so safeguarded as in the British Empire and in Canada.

Nowhere is crime so quickly punished as in the British Empire and in Canada.

This freedom, this impartial administration of justice, this protection of life and property and this punishment of crime are advantages that should make us glad we are Canadians, and should add to our desire to celebrate the Diamond Jubilee as people who are grateful and thankful for many blessings.

PATRIOTIC PUBLICITY.

In the many features that are marking Canada's celebration of the Diamond Jubilee an interesting development that strikes a new note in advertising is to be seen in the publicity being used by a number of well-known Canadian corporations, such as the Canadian General Electric Company, the Confederation Life and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

A series of splendid advertisements by these companies calls attention to various phases of Canada's progress during the period of Confederation, while their own achievements are linked up with this record as contributing a very important part in the growth and expansion of this country.

Such publicity is of much significance, inasmuch as it brings forcibly to the attention of Canadians everywhere the fact that the vision and spirit that brought about the great industries and national enterprises of the country have had a big share in making Canada a prosperous and flourishing Dominion.

The advertisements have the effect, too, of stimulating a healthy pride in Canada and in Canadian undertakings, and such a result is manifestly of great benefit to this country, not only in connection with the Diamond Jubilee, but afterward.

DECORATE EARLY.

The suggestion of Ald. Denne, Manager of Peterborough's Diamond Jubilee Celebration, that decorations both on residential streets and in the business section should be placed in position early, not later than tomorrow afternoon if possible, is one that should be generally acted upon by citizens generally.

The effect upon visitors and residents alike of these decorations will be wholly favourable, inasmuch as the flags and bunting will serve to create the impression that Peterboroughs celebration is to be staged upon a truly large scale.

Already, of course, decorations have been commenced, and it is hoped that before tomorrow this important feature of the celebration will be practically completed.

Incidentally ,it may be mentioned that the general scheme of decoration for this most significant anniversary promises to surpass any similar display in the history of Peterborough.

Financial and business institutions will vie with each in a friendly competition as to which can produce the most striking decorative effects, and the result in combination with the jubilee arches and the coloured lights should be a most beautiful spectacle.

TEMPERATE BRITAIN.

It is the fashion in extreme prohibition circles here and in the United States, to hold up Britain as a Horrible Example of what the "drink traffic" does to a country. Ginisoaked and beer-sodden are favorite adjectives, and vivid pictures are drawn of a population going without shoes in order that men and women may revel in rum. It is interesting to see the other side of the question.

In the course of a debate on a local option bill in the House of Lords the other day Lord Dawson of Penn, the King's physician, said there was ample evidence that Great Britain was becoming more temperate. "That is to be seen," he added, "in restaurants, threatres, cinemas, and among bank holiday parties. Far less drunkenness is to be seen in this country than in America."

A London cable to The New York Times, reporting the debate, continues:

"Lord Dawson proceeded to give statistics which he had gathered among all classes of the British population. He found that of the people who frequented certain large restaurants 75 per cent. did not take alcoholic drinks at all, and of the remainder three-fourths drank light wines or beer.

"His examination of the records of between 1,500 and 1,600 members of the unskilled working class showed that under the age of 35 temperate people and abstainers amounted to 90 per cent. and the imperfectly temperate 10 per cent. Over 35, temperate people and abstainers made up 71.5 per cent. and the imperfectly temperate 28.5 per cent.

"Lord Dawson maintained that these figures showed the English people becoming steadily more sober, and he declared it was an outrage to call the country not a sober country."

The Bishop of Durham supported Lord Dawson, and declared prohibition had been a failure in the United States. On the other hand, the Bishop of London said he looked "with considerable horror" upon a drink bill of £350,000,000 when Britain had to compete "with a dry country like the United States." This is an argument of little avail to the prohibition cause. Britain has an exact record of every gallon of beer or spirits manufactured and sold: "dry" America, with nobody knowing how many scores of thousands of illicit stills and mixing plants, quenches its enormous aggregate thirst beyond the reach of the revenue officers and furnishes no statistics.—Ottawa Journal.

CANADA THROUGH ENGLISH SPECTACLES.

Canada stands to gain much-needed advertisement in the Motherland through the publication of a special "Canada Number" of The London Times, an advance copy of which has reached this office through the courtesy of the publishers of that great newspaper. This supplement of 28 pages, issued in coincidence with the celebration of the Diamond Jubilee of Confederation, is devoted exclusively to the story of Canada's progress throughout the years and articles contributed by leading Canadians in this connection. In contains a message from Premier King in which that gentleman speaks of the Diamond Jubilee celebration being "the occasion of national thanksgiving for the wonderful prosperity of Canada in return for years of self-reliant labor in harmony with Nature," and as being "equally the occasion for celebrating with gratitude the heritage of freedom which has come through the gradual unfolding of government under the British constitution." Sir Henry Thornton, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, C. A. Magrath, Tom Moore, Stephen Leacock, Dr. A. P. Coleman, Duncan Campbell Scott, S. Morgan Powell, J. Murray Gibbon, Hon. Robert Forke, C. E. Neill and John M. Taylor, ex-President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, are other notable contributors to a publication which cannot fail to promote interest throughout the Motherland in Canada and Canadian affairs and dispel the ignorance of this country from which all too many Englishmen suffer.

Of equal interest is the opinion of The Times itself concerning Canadian development and the solution of Canadian problems. It finds that "there is not the slightest shadow of doubt that without the unity that came with Confederation, the Canadian nation could never have achieved the record in industry and the arts of which it is so justly proud today," and it looks forward to the next sixty years in the history of the Dominion producing an "enormous access in strength and in prosperity." The Times, however, believes that these years will bring with them not only new phases of old problems but new problems altogether. "How are the empty lands to be filled and turned from a liability into an asset?" it asks. "How is the drift of young Canadians across the border to be stopped? . . . Can the burden of railway taxation be relieved?" And the answers to these questions it gives in these sentences:

"The solution of these, and many other problems, undoubtedly lies in the stimulation of immigration into Canada, and for this reason the recent activities of the Dominion Government, as outlined in another column by Mr. Forke, are specially welcome. It is questionable whether anyone would wish to see a return to the haphazard days before the war, when hundreds of thousands of settlers were figuratively poured into a chute in the pious hope that they would come out at the other end as ready-made farmers. But if the somewhat reluctant wheels of the Empire Settlement Act can be greased sufficiently to enable a steadily increasing number of young British settlers to make the short journey across the Atlantic, it will be all to the good, not only of Canada and of the settlers themselves, but of this country and the Empire. It is possible to make that journey at a smaller cost than the fare from London to Edinburgh, and there will be many to join today in the hope expressed by the Minister of Immigration that this jubilee year will find practical celebration in the attainment of the full quota of 3,000 British families provided for under the present agreement.

"Like all ties of affection," The Times article concludes, "the love of the British people for Canada is based on a reciprocity that is easier to put into practice than the reciprocity of trade agreements. They remember the devotion of the Dominion in time of war and realize its contribution to the welfare and the progress of the British Commonwealth in time of peace. They respect the Canadian people for the assertion of the nationhood that is still compatible with membership of that Commonwealth. They regard the Dominion, so to speak, as the partner that represents the firm in the great English-speaking community of the North American Continent. They rejoice in what Mr. King, the Prime Minister, himself calls 'the golden thread of allegiance to the Crown, the symbol of united Canada, even as it is the bond of union between all the self-governing communities within the Commonwealth of British nations.'" —Brockville Recorder and Times.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Don't forget your Diamond Jubilee decorations. Every house should have its flag.

Prince Edward Island probabilities may be summed up in the phrase "continued dry."

It looks as if Miss Agnes MacPhail, who didn't want any "crazy military parades" in connection with the Diamond Jubilee, will have to take to the woods over Dominion Day.

Joe Wright can add to the joynous of Canada's celebration of the Diamond Jubilee by winning the diamond sculls.

The invasion of Canada by American tourists is beginning to assume major proportions. Ontario will be able to report a banner year in this respect.

It is perhaps significant that Peterborough's celebration of the Diamond Jubilee starts out on water.

Angle parking is not likely to make angels of Peterborough motorists, or is likely to, depending upon which way you look at the question.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE

MONTREAL, June 28 (Canadian Press). — A feature of the local grain trade yesterday was the offering of some 300,000 bushels of American No. 3 white oats from Chicago at 65½c per bushel duty paid, c.i.f. Montreal, for shipment via Port Colborne, but no sales were reported. There was some demand from local exporters for Manitoba No. 4 wheat, and sales were made at 9½c per bus. under the Winnipeg July option, c.i.f. Montreal.

Owing to the sharp advance in the future corn market at Chicago, local prices for cash article were marked up 5 cents per bushel. Car lots of American sample corn were quoted at $1.05, and Argentine corn at $1.04½ per bushel, ex-store. Canadian Western oats were also 1 cent per bushel higher in sympathy with the strength at Winnipeg.

A fair trade was transacted in the spring and winter grades of flour, and values were well maintained.

The demand for all lines of millfeed was moderate and prices were firm. The market for standard grades of rolled oats was steady.

The egg market was moderately active and firm. The receipts were 1,164 cases.

A weaker feeling developed in the market for potatoes, and prices for American new crop grades declined $1.50 per barrel, and old crop Canadians 5 to 10 cents per bag. This was attributed to the liberal offerings coming forward. Sales of odd cars of Quebec white B grade were made at $1.60 to $1.70 per bag, and reds at $1.40 per bag of 90 pounds in bulk, ex-track, while the trade in United States potatoes was fairly active at $6.25 per barrel for No. 1 grade and at $4.00 per barrel for No. 2 grade, ex-track.

A feature of the butter trade yesterday was the further demand from Western speculators, and it was reported that sales of several car lots of Eastern townships No. 1 pasteurized creamery butter were made to them at 34c to 34¼c per pound, and in two instances as high as 34½c per pound was paid, but this butter remains in storage here. The local trade was dull. The receipts were 707 packages.

Extreme dullness marked the trade in cheese, but values were unchanged. The receipts were 10,789 boxes.

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, June 28 (Canadian Press). — Sensational steep upturns in the value of corn yesterday hoisted the market nearly 7 cents a bus. A stampede to buy followed exceptionally pessimistic crop reports from the main producing states, and then a Government report showing 1,800,000 more pigs in the country than last year.

The finish in the corn market was excited 6¾ to 6¾ cents a bushel net higher, with wheat 1¼ to 1⅞ cents up, oats showing 1⅝ to 2¼ cents gain, and provisions at a rise of 19 to 37 cents.

With the corn market sailing upward almost from the first moment, traders soon found themselves competing at a strenuous rate for offerings which rapidly became more and more scarce. On top of increasingly bad crop news came a bulletin from Washington confirming that the demand for corn would be much enlarged this season because of 1,800,000 more pigs to be fed than was the case a year ago. A wild scramble to buy future deliveries of corn ensued, and the market closed but little below the day's top figures.

Wheat and oats owed much of their strength to the action of corn. Wheat was also affected by advices that black rust has started to show in South Dakota, and that the Australian yield promises to be largely reduced owing to the drought and frost.

Provisions climbed with corn.

Heart Palpitation Dizzy, Sinking Spells

Mrs. M. A. Gagnon, Donatville, Alta., writes:—"Some time ago I was very nervous, could not sleep at night, often had dizzy, sinking spells and palpitation of the heart, and was so run down I could not do my housework, but just leave everything and sit down.

I spent a lot of money using medicine from the doctor, but it did not do me any good.

At last a friend told me to use MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS and after using a couple of boxes I was not the same woman. I began to feel so much better, and after a few more boxes I was in perfect health. I always recommend them to all those I know who are suffering from heart trouble."

VENUS RESPONSIBLE FOR STRANGE LIGHTS

Engineer Returns From Northern Quebec After Investigating Matter.

CHICOUTIMI, Que., June 27 (Canadian Press). — That the lights or signal seen at intervals in Northern Quebec for the past two weeks were the result of the planet Venus' proximity to the earth was voiced the second time here by R. E. Joron, forestry engineer, who arrived here today after being in the region for fifteen days in an effort to trace the source of the mysterious lights which were thought to have been signals from Nungesser and Coli, the missing French aviators.

A Thought For To-day

IT TAKES TWENTY MINUTES

A young married man left a sealed envelope on his office desk addressed to "Whom it may concern," and in the envelope was this short note:

It takes twenty years for a Mother to make a man of her son, but it take the wrong woman only twenty minutes to make a fool of him."

This note will strike some reader with full force.

WISE AND OTHERWISE.

IT'S ALMA MATING TIME

With college daze, sweet college daze coming to an end, and the old grads returning for happy reunions, it suddenly is discovered that the old school only needs a new million-dollar stadium, a couple of chemistry buildings and four dormitories. It looks like pocketbook research day for the old boys who not only would die for dear old Siwash but must pay as well. . . . It's time for the old songs again, boys. MISS M'GINNIS WINS CONTEST

London Street Girl To Represent Peterborough in Screen Competition.

GETS CAPITOL CUP.

Miss Muriel G. McGinnis, of 141 London Street, is the "Miss Peterborough" of the Screen Opportunity Contest being conducted just now by the Famous Players Theatres throughout the Province of Ontario. She was chosen by the audience at the Capitol Theatre last night. The applause which greeted the other two contestants, Miss Nora James and Miss Jessie Hodgson, was prolonged and hearty, but Miss McGinnis received more acclaim than either of the others and therefore received the silver cup donated by the local Capitol Theatre and the chance of a trip to Toronto during the week of July 9th, to compete with other entrants from the Province at the Uptown Theatre, for a trip to Hollywood, California, and an Overland Whippet Six Landau. Extra prizes are a second award, an Overland Whippet Collegiate Roadster, and cash prizes of $200, $100, with two last prizes of $50 each. The expenses of the girls and their chaperones are paid to Toronto and the winner has the same expenses paid to Hollywood and return.

Asked who she would take for a chaperone, Miss McGinnis replied: "Why, my mother, of course."

Five young ladies were entered in the contest, but two failed to appear at the last moment. The judges, whose duties consisted in estimating the amount of applause received for each candidate, were members of The Examiner editorial staff, Mr. Fred Craig and Miss Cathleen McCarthy.

Miss Nora James received a pretty bouquet of flowers on the stage last evening.

Call Money Rate Is High; New York Market Weak

NEW YORK, June 28 (Canadian Press).—The highest call money renewal rate since last January and another bear raid against amusement shares turned the course of stock prices reactionary again today after an opening period of strength. Early gains of 1 to 3 points in many issues were largely obliterated, while nearly a score of specialties sagged to new low ground on losses of 1 to 5 points. Fox Films "A" was heavily sold after mid-day, breaking from an early high of 56⅝ to 50. Paramount, Famous Players, Warner Bros., and Loews reacted in sympathy, although losses were not as large. New low prices for the year also were registered by Kresge Department Stores Common and Preferred, Weston Electrical Instrument, and Hupp Motors. United States Cast Iron Pipe showed independent strength, soaring seven points, while the general market was losing ground.

Grain Prices React After Strong Opening

CHICAGO, June 28. Canadian Press—Wheat and corn both reacted today after upturns at the start. Selling which increased on bulges, was based largely on talk that the corn market advances had been too rapid and that profit taking sales were in order. Opening unchanged to a ½c higher, wheat rose a little farther and then sagged to about yesterday's finish. Corn started at 3-8c off to 1c up and later showed a decided setback. Oats were easy. Provisions tended down grade.

Opening prices were: Wheat, July 1.42¼; Sept. 1.40 5-8; corn, July 1.00 3-8; September 106 5-8; oats, July 47¼; September 47 7-8.

Break In Brazilian Features Toronto Session

TORONTO, June 28.— (Canadian Press.)—A sharp break in Brazilian was an outstanding change in the easier trend during to-day's session of the Toronto stock exchange. Brazilian firm at the opening, quietly slumped to 153, down 3½ points on a couple of sales. Gooderham and Worts lost 1 1-8 at 51 5-8, Hiram Walker ¼ at 48¼, Seagram a half at 20, and Canada Bread 1 at 105. Industrial Alcohol firmed ⅝ at 29½. Massey Harris and Nickel were only fractionally lower, at 33¾ and 59 7-8 respectively. Northern Bakeries firmed a little at 27. Trading was quiet.

Mine Trading Is Light With Trend Downward

TORONTO, June 28.— (Canadian Press.)—In light trading, prices tended downward on the standard mining exchange to-day. The leaders all sold down, Keeley losing twelve cents at 110 and Amulet eight at 238. Area eased one at 45, Kirkland Lake five at 133, and Dome Mines 25 at 7.25 The body of the list was unchanged. Goldale, coming into demand, firmed 2 at 25. Argonaut at 28½ was also slightly higher.

THE COFFEE DRINKING CHAMPIONSHIP

No Sunday School picnic would be complete without a pie eating contest. Parents who work so hard to elect their prohibition candidates will eagerly enter their children in these pie eating contests and apparently do not consider it wrong or intemperate. Children who are encouraged to enter such contests are given a very bad start in life.

The gormands have found a new champion in a real estate man from Texas, who succeeded in drinking one-hundred cups of coffee in seven hours and fifteen minutes. He sat in a restaurant and drank one cup after another until he had put away one hundred full sized cups of coffee. This broke the record of eighty-five cups formerly held by a misguided youth from Minneapolis.

You can look for this feat of guzzling to be shown in the movie theatres, and you may even have the pleasure of seeing a demonstration made by the champion on your local stage. This champion will probably be offered a good sum of money by some enterprising coffee company for a statement to the effect that their coffee was used, and that it never hurt him one bit.

It is doubtless true that many people drink a cup or two of coffee daily without noticing any perceptible harm, but my experience with my patients has shown conclusively that a cup of coffee with sugar and cream taken at breakfast will impair a man's efficiency two or three hours afterwards. If cream and sugar are used with the cereal coffees, about the same amount of harm will result.

The kidneys are forced to eliminate this muddy liquid and are unable to perform their normal function. The elimination of toxins is thereby retarded. This results in a physical and mental depression, which is actually shown by certain diseases.

The man who works with his brain will be interested to know that mental tests made three hours after a coffee breakfast will show a depression of mental faculties of from twenty to thirty per cent. I have made such tests with hundreds of subjects, making the same test each day for several days. Exactly the same breakfast was used each day, except that on some particular morning a cup of coffee with cream and sugar was added.

Without knowing on which day the coffee was taken, I have always been able to tell by this mental test. The difference is not small, but is quite pronounced, and leaves no room for doubt but that this drinking has more of a depressing effect than a stimulating one.

Those who wish to keep their efficiency up to the highest possible point should take note of this fact and avoid such useless enervation.

PRESENTATION TO PASTOR AND WIFE

Rev. S. T. and Mrs. Tucker Receive Chest of Silver.

MILLBROOK, June 28.—A genuine and very pleasant surprise was provided for Rev. S. T. and Mr. Tucker, with their daughter, Miss Gladys, at the Park street United church, Orono, on Friday evening, when a mass congregational meeting was held in the basement as a farewell social gathering before the conclusion of the pastoral term. Rev. Mr. Tucker, who has spent three years on the Orono circuit, has exchanged into the London Conference, and expects to leave for his new charge at Dorchester on Monday.

The Woman's Missionary Auxiliary and the Ladies' Aid Society of the church had the arrangements for the evening especially under their charge, and with the full co-operation of the officials, the other organizations, and the congregation generally, the event was carried to a most successful conclusion. The large room was beatifully decorated for the occasion, masses of early blossoms [illegible] arranged in every available space, filling the air with fragrance. The seating capacity of the auditorium was taxed to the utmost to accommodate the audience, about 50 friends of Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker and their family, motoring over from Millbrook, a former charge on which a pastoral term of five years had been spent, and helping to swell the large representation of local church and community friends who showed their warm interest by being present.

An ovation was accorded the guests of honor when they entered the room, a prolonged clapping of hands greeting their arrival about 9 p.m., and giving marked evidence of the genuine affection and high esteem in which the pastor, his wife, and family are held.

The Sunday School orchestra provided excellent music while the audience was gathering. Mr. Andrew Knox, superintendent of the Sunday School, took the chair for the formal program, and in his opening remarks expressed emphatically the general regret felt at the removal of Mr. Tucker from the circuit, and appreciation of the efficiency of the work done during his three years' pastorate on the charge. "I believe that the work of this church was never before so fully and effectively organized, nor has the general condition of the circuit been as prosperous as it has grown to be under Mr. Tucker's leadership."

Other numbers on the programme were:

Piano duet by Misses Marian Greene and Edna Best.

Solo, "Sunrise and You", by Miss Laura Allen.

Piano solo (by special request), with encore, by Miss Gladys Tucker.

Solo, "When the Great Day Dawns" by Mrs. Smiles.

Address by Rev. Jos. Wilks, Millbrook, reminiscent of his early days in the minstry when preaching at Kirby (now part of the Orono circuit), and other points in the district; and also expressing his warm personal friendship with Rev. Mr. Tucker, Mrs. Tucker, and their family.

P. Stinson also spoke on behalf of the contingent of Millbrook folk present, confidently pointing out that the ready acceptance of the invitation to attend was the best testimony to the regard and affection with which the pastor and his wife were held by friends from a former circuit.

Nelles Rowland, member for East Durham in the Sixth Older Boys' Parliament, spoke briefly, on behalf of the Tuxis Square, and Trail Rangers, of Millbrook, referring especially to the splendid work which Mr. Tucker had accomplished among the 'teen age boys while on this charge.

Rev. A. J. Terrill of Pontypool was then called upon and added his message of appreciation and friendship. "This gathering will lend wings to the faith of your minister and his family, and its memory will be 'as ointment poured forth'".

Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker, and Miss Gladys were then called to the platform, when Miss Mabel Davey read the following address and Mrs. Robert Sherin, who has succeeded Mrs. Tucker as president of the Woman's Missionary Auxiliary, on behalf of the congregation, presented the retiring pastor and his wife with a handsome and complete cabinet of silver in the Grosvenor pattern, the silver plate on the cover being suitably engraved with the names, the date, and the occasion.

To Rev. S. T. and Mrs. Tucker,

Orono, Ont., June 24, 1927.

"We, your friends of Park Street United Church, are met together tonight to show, in some small way, our deep appreciation of your work while with us, and our sincere regret at your departure.

"We have found you and Mrs. Tucker untiring in your efforts—wide in sympathy and understanding—a friend in sickness in trouble, and extending always the same hand of Christian helpfulness and friendship.

"Through your faithful zeal and endeavor the several organizations of our church have expanded largely, and are richly endowed with the Spirit of Our Master. Especially has you work been evident among the young people. With them rests the church of tomorrow, and the seeds of God's truth which you have so carefully and diligently sown, in their lives must indeed bear abundant fruit.

"At parting we ask God's richest blessing on your future work. May He guide you and keep you through the sunshine and the shadows, of life; may He be beside you on the mountain tops, and in the valleys. May His presence abide in your home, and with your family, and may you each look back with kindest thoughts to your many loyal friends in Orono.

"We ask you to accept this gift as a mark of our respect and honor, and of our sincere appreciation for your years of labor among us.

"Signed on behalf of the congregation of Park Street United Church, Orono.

MRS. ROBERT E. SHERIN,
MRS. T. H. POWERS,
VERA E. ROLPH."

Mrs. Tucker was specially remembered with a sheaf of American Beauty roses, and both she and Mr. Tucker expressed their gratitude for the beautiful gifts, and the kindly words which were their accompaniment, in a few brief remarks, the surprise of the entire event, and the emotion always incident to such an occasion, making it practically impossible for them to say all it was in their hearts to have stated of the pleasure and profit of the three years' association together, and the keen regret experienced because of the inevitable parting.

On behalf of the group of Canadian Girls in Training, Miss Gladys Tucker was then presented with a French ivory clock, Miss Mary Smith making an informal address, and Miss Ethel Winter offering the gift. The girls were especially appreciative because it was owing to Gladys' influence that the C.G.I.T. movement had been organized in Orono. Suitable reply was made by the recipient of the dainty gift.

W. Fred Fallis, superintendent of the Millbrook United church Sunday school, spoke briefly of the help received locally in all branches of the Master's work during Mr. Tucker's pastorate, and the ladies served refreshments while an hour or more of delightful social intercourse was enjoyed by all present.

G. E. Burnham moved the formal vote of thanks, on behalf of the Millbrook group of visitors, for the privilege of being present, and the hearty welcome extended, and T. H. Aiken seconded the motion.

On Sunday, June 19, Mr. and Mrs. Tucker had been married twenty-five years, and after evening service, some of the ladies, having somehow learned of the anniversary, called at the parsonage and gave Mrs. Tucker a beautiful bouquet of flowers, and money for a silver teapot, leaving the choice of pattern to her individual preference.

CHOIRS PRESENT BAG TO ORGANIST

Appreciation of Services of Mrs. Allen Expressed By Musicians.

MILLBROOK, June 28.—A very pleasant surprise was prepared for Mrs. (Rev. Canon) Allen last Sunday evening, when members of the choirs of the parish gathered in the vestry after the service, and presented her with a dainty silver mesh bag, containing a substantial sum of money, in loving appreciation of her faithful services as organist and choir leader through a long period of years.

This month Mrs. Allen has completed fifty years as a church organist, counting the years spent in this service in her home town at Shenley, England, where her marriage to Rev. Canon Allen, then a curate in the parish took place, and the continued years of service since coming a bride to Canada, her husband returning to be assistant clergyman in the parish of Millbrook and Cavan, his father, the late Venerable Archdeacon Allen, being the rector in charge.

Mrs. Allen intended having a reunion of as many of the members of the choirs she has had under her charge in the years of service in the local parish, this month at the Rectory, but owing to the fact that she and her husband are going abroad for a three months' vacation, sailing on the 29th, this gathering has been left over until fall.

The presentation on Sunday evening was a complete surprise to Mrs. Allen, and touched her so deeply reply was decidedly difficult. Her gratitude and appreciation, however, were voiced in a few brief sentences, and Canon Allen also spoke before the informal gathering finally dispersed.

CHILDREN HURT BY EXPLOSION IN FARM SHED

Boy Dies From Injuries Received —Sisters Are Badly Wounded.

PLAYING WITH DYNAMITE.

Little Ones Found Cap, Apparently Left By Former Tenant.

BARRIE, June 28.— A dynamite cap discovered by three children in the driving shed of their father's farm at Beeton yesterday was hailed as an intriguing toy, but a few minutes later there was a dull explosion and beneath a dense pall of smoke the three tots lay painfully injured. All were under 11 years.

Little Hope Held Out.

One of the children, William Neville, died this morning in Barrie Hospital where his sister Martha, lies at death's door. The boy had his left hand completely blown off; his both eyes were injured and he had a multiple of wounds about the chest, abdomen and legs. Martha suffered a facture of the wrist and terrible wounds about her head and chest. It was reported from the hospital that the outlook was very grave.

Another sister, Viola, received compound fracture of the hands and of the left knee, and her body is covered with small wounds, but it is thought possible that she may recover.

Doctors K. F. Rogers of Beeton, and F. A. Ross, of Barrie, worked over the children in the operating room late into the night, and when at last they had done all they could their tones were very doubtful. The small bodies had received the full force of the terrible explosion.

Cap Found in Shed.

The father, Samuel Neville, has not occupied the farm at Beeton for long, and it is thought that the dynamite cap had been left in the driving shed by a previous tenant. There was no one very near the shed at the time, and it is not known what caused the cap to explode.

A neighbor, attracted by the dull thud of the explosion, went to her doorway, to see a dense cloud of smoke rising from the near-by farmyard. She rushed over and found the children lying in the debris.

Dr. F. K. Rogers was summoned, and after administering first aid rushed the children to Barrie Hospital, where they were immediately admitted to the operating room.

At the time the accident occurred the mother was lying in a delicate condition in the farmhouse.

A fourth child, the youngest girl of the Neville family, escaped by a margin of minutes. She had been with her brother and sisters, but just before the cap exploded she ran into the house.

GARDEN PARTY GREAT SUCCESS

Many Attend Annual Social at St. Andrew's Ladies' Aid.

CAMPBELLFORD, June 28. — To make the year 1927 Garden Party just the best that has ever been was the high ideal the Ladies' Aid Society of St. Andew's Presbyterian Church had set before them. That they succeeded is beyond all question, and it is perhaps safe to say that the great measure of success attending their efforts in connection with the garden party, was never for a moment anticipated.

Far up on the summit of the hill, nestling amid the beautiful trees lays the spacious and richly carpeted lawn of St. Andrew's, for location, size and beauty, a lawn it would be hard to surpass.

With hundreds of 60-watt lights, specially strung for the occasion, and numerous British flags and an abundance of bunting and other decorations ornamenting the booths, St. Andrew's lawn presented an exceedingly attractive appearance last night.

Amid these surroundings a crowd estimated at from 800 to 1,000 and made up of smiling and rollicking boys and girls, prim young ladies, and their sedate elderlies, moved from booth to booth sampling the many good things offered for sale by the pleasant "salesladies," or standing in little groups throughout the grounds renewing old acquaintances. Then there were other groups, seated among whom we noticed that estimable lady, Mrs. William Varcoe, who thought in her 87th year, was enjoying the music of the Northumberland Regiment Band, and carrying on a sustained conversation with those in her company.

At this writing it is impossible to get an account of the proceeds of the evening, but they are considerable as the spending was liberal. In leaving the grounds we overheard the remark that the gate receipts were over $250.00.

The flower booth, in charge of Mrs. Hume, was exceedingly pretty and did a lovely business.

The Coney Island Red Hot booth, under the excellent supervision of Mrs. R. N. Morrison, was well patronized. The Fish Pond, in charge of Miss Bertha Blue, was the centre of attraction for the young folk, and they got real value for their money, the articles drawn all being worth the price paid. Mrs. H. T. Scott had charge of an ice-cream and soft drink booth, while Miss Verna Hay conducted a sale of candy not far away.

To Mrs. James Alex. Anderson, as convenor of refreshments, and her excellent assistants is due the credit for the excellent supper served. Mrs. Jack Carter was convenor of dish washing, which was not an easy, if a pleasant job.

Among the visitors present were: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Locke, Toronto; Miss Annie McCulloch, R.N., Kingston; Miss E. Graham, R.N., Cleveland; Mr. Joseph Smith, Adrian, Mich.; Miss Dorothy Ackerman, Toronto; Miss Emma Massie, Peterboro; Eric Russell, Buffalo. Large numbers were present from Burnbrae, Warkworth, Keene and other surrounding towns.

Among the clergymen noted were Messrs. Daniel, Wallace, Harston, McKenzie, Reid and McCleary. The Rev. Mr. Reid of Stirling was accompanied by his mother. Mr. and Mrs. H. Rollins of Stirling and Dr. and Mrs. Armstrong and Alex. of Warkworth were also seen among the hundreds from out of town whose names will appear later.

SEBASTAPOL, June 28 (United Press).—Sweeping the entire Crimean Peninsula and extending into the Ukraine, a powerful earthquake, the first in seven years, caused enormous mountain avalanches to-day. Several houses were destroyed in the sparsely populated earthquake district and many were damaged.

No deaths were reported, but seven persons were injured—all in fleeing panic-stricken from their homes.

BOYS THROWN OVER RAILWAY

Car Hits Side of Bridge Over the Creek Near Thomasburg.

OCCUPANTS SHAKEN UP.

THOMASBURG, June 28.—While driving on the Tweed gravel on Sunday morning three boys in a coupe were thrown about twenty feet over the side of the bridge over the Dingman Creek near here when the car struck the rail of the bridge and was turned upside down in the ditch.

One of the boys had four ribs broken and the others were slightly bruised. Dr. Welsh of Roslin was called and the boys were taken to Belleville General Hospital. Their names are unknown here. The car was damaged considerably.

A farmer in Lincolnshire, England, recently sprayed his field of potatoes by airplane. It took 25 minutes. Ordinarily the job would have taken two days.

STIRLING WINS FRIENDLY GAME

Picked Team Defeats Campbellford Clerks at Softball.

FINAL SCORE 15-12.

CAMPBELLFORD, June 28. — By far the nicest game of softball played on the local diamond this season was the game last night between a picked team from Stirling and the Clerks, in which Stirling won by 3 runs, the score being 12 to 15.

Stirling counted few errors and every man seemed to have been made to order for the place he held on the team. The field work was perfect, and Halpenny's catching three fouls off the bat, in succession, is perhaps not often duplicated.

The Clerks played well, but were wretchedly weak in one or two places.

A large number of the gentler sex came over with the ball team, and the committee in charge of public entertainment saw to it that our human radio was on the grounds. The broadcasting machine seemed to have a special pick at that sweater worn by Ward, Stirling's third base man.

The line-up:

Stirling — Whitty, p; Halpenny, c; Atkins, 1b; Tullough, 2b; Ward, 3b; Scott, ss; Meiklejohn, cf; Rollins, lf; Hulm, rf.

Clerks — Darling, p; McArthur, c; Ivey, 1b; Cowell, 2b; Gay, 3b; Atkinson, ss; Runions, cf; Blake, lf; McGuire, rf.

Umpires—Bush and Massie.

Score by innings:

Stirling ..... 040431102—15
Clerks ..... 023211102—12

POLICE DOUBT DAUDET'S FLIGHT

Think Report of Royalist's Escape to Switzerland Untrue.

ALL THREE IN PARIS.

PARIS, June 28 (United Press).—The French Press today prominently displayed an unconfirmed report that Leon Daudet, Royalist leader, who was released from the Sante prison through a hoax, had crossed the Swiss frontier and was in Lausanne.

Authorities were skeptical of the report and were more inclined to believe that Daudet and the other two fugitives, Delst and Semard, who were in hiding in hiding in or near Paris.

HIAWATHA WINS SOFTBALL GAME

Defeats Zion 21-19 in Exciting Exhibition Match.

HIAWATHA, June 28.—On Thursday evening the young men of Zion, accepted the challenge to a game of soft ball with the Hiawatha team, which was managed by George Paudash.

The numerous runs on both sides (the result was 21-19 in favor of Hiawatha, kept the spectators in great glee. Mrs. R. Manross lead the local rooters and Thomas Heffernan with other Zion men, encouraged their team.

The Zion battery, Hayes pitcher, and Burns catcher are hard to beat, but basemen and fielders who attended a bee on the farm of Mr. J. Fitzgerald, seemed tired.

Hiawatha with G. Paudash, pitcher and R. Shilling, catcher, held Zion down to one run for four innings. Faulty fielding gave the Zion boys their chance to get runs.

C. Crowley and W. Muskratte both made spectacular plays.

The game continued till 8.20. In the last two innings, because of the darkness it was difficult for both sides to see the ball.

The players were:

Zion: p. N. Hayes c. G. Burns; 1b B. Orde; 2b G. Hayes; 3b, N. Powers; ss, Pickle; fielders H. Stewart, F. Greystock, C. Carey; subs., T. Heffernan and W. Fitzgerald.

Hiawatha: p and manager G. Paudash Sr.; c R. Shilling; b W. Muskratte; 2b F. Northey; 3 Crowley, ss G. Paudash, Jr; fielders, R. Loucks, G. Coward, E. Hinton; subs. Moses Anderson and C. Coward.

Umpires, at bat, J. Fitzgerald; on bases, E. Loukes.

The congregation of the Mark Street United Church, met in the church last evening to make a formal presentation of a purse of gold, accompanied by a complimentary address, to their pastor, Rev. R. T. Richards, and Mrs. Richards who leave this week for their new home in Port Perry. Mr. Henderson Niga made a capable chairman for the occasion. The address, which follows, was read by Mrs. W. H. Morton, and the presentation was made by Miss Verne Stenton. During the evening the Sunday school class taught by Mrs. Richards, presented her with a salad bowl, fork and spoon, the presentation and accompanying address, being in the hands of Masters Craig and Pearce, and the Mission Band presented little Miriam Richards with a gold locket and chain. Suitable acknowledgments were made, after which refreshments were served. The address to the pastor and his wife was as follows:

"To Mr. and Mrs. Richards:

"With the passing of years many changes come into our lives. Among them is the removal of friends from the church where they have labored and rendered valuable service. It is with regret we realize that the ties that have bound you to Mark Street are about to be severed by your removal to Port Perry, so we could not forbear taking possession of you during your almost last evening with us.

"We are assured you will not deem us rude however for you have encouraged us to regard you as "of ourselves," and have practically given yourselves to our community in social and citizenship aid and enterprise; as well as in active interest in every department of our church, which has imparted a stimulus, the seed of which will bear most beneficial results in the future development and welfare of our congregation.

"Your eloquent addresses,Mr. Richards, have inspired all your hearers to a higher spiritual life, which your interest in the welfare of the younger members and adherents of the church, has been exemplified in many ways by your work with them.

"You both came among us with noble aims, and you have endeared the highest of these principles to the hearts of many, at the same time as you have gained a very warm place in our Friendship Circles.

"Mrs. Richards will always be remembered for the untiring devotion to every branch of the church work, rendering her assistance in a sympathetic unselfish manner, "stepping into the gaps," as it were, till we have come to appreciate very highly the worth of a willing worker.

"Thus it is you are remembered with many kindred interests and we pray you may be blessed in every good effort in the direction of the true service as the Maker has taught:

"You will meet and touch many others
As day succeedeth day.
Whom you will influence silently, surely
Along life's rugged way,
You cannot tell what the impress
You may leave on another's heart,
But we pray that all may see plainly, clearly,
You have done the Master's part.

"We ask you to accept this little gift as a slight token of our regard for you."

"Signed on behalf of the Congregation."

DRESS
By MARY MARSHALL

It is only the very old-fashioned woman or the very new-fashioned woman who wears curls. The one wears her little ringlets because it is part of her youthful notion of hair arrangement to do so and because—rightly or wrongly—she feels that they soften the lines of oncoming age on face and forehead. The young very new-fashioned woman wears her curls because she sees all around her middle-aged women with sleekly brushed or faultlessly waved short hair. She doesn't want to be a counterpart of her own boyish mother.

You may have seen her—the new-fashioned girl with curls peeping out from the sides of her new-fashioned bonnet or drooping poke-shaped hat—or clustering round the nape of her fair neck. You may have stopped and stared a little—you had forgotten perhaps the charm that lies in the gleaming ringlets of a young woman's soft hair.

There is nothing fussy or frizzy about these new-fashioned curls. They are as neat and self-contained as the ambrosial curls of the Greek gods. No one has patience with frowsiness nowadays, and the girl with hair that naturally curls in a wayward, riotous manner must needs use brilliantine.

Many women who, for one reason or another are letting once-short hair grow long resort to the use of curls at some stage of the awkward operation. But fashion still demands a fairly clear outlining of the shape of the head. So hair must be brushed rather smoothly back—smooth or with a broad wave—and only the ends must be actually curled. Some women hold these curls by means of a strong shell pin at the nape of the neck. If the hair is long enough to permit, it may be brushed across the back with the ends forming a curl at one side which may be held securely against the head or left free like a diminutive Janice Meredith curl.

Artificial flowers made of snake-skin are the newest boutonnieres, and are appropriately worn with frock or suit trimmed with snakeskin bandings or with snakeskin shoes and purse.

HOROSCOPE

The Stars Incline, but do not Compel.

This is a threatening day according to astrology, and for that reason it is well to watch all important affairs.

Early in the morning there is a sign that makes for depression and despondency and for that reason a positive attitude of mind that denies apparent worries should be maintained.

There is a menacing sway for aviation and all who travel by air should be unusually cautious.

Women are subject to unfavorable planetary influences today, which tend to make them exacting and difficult to work with.

This is read as an inauspicious wedding day, since the configuration appears to presage deception on the part of one or both of the contracting parties.

The total eclipse of the sun on this day is held to be most evil in its foreshadowing for Great Britian.

For the first time in 200 years this is an eclipse, visible in England and for that reason of special significance. The astrologers find it forecasts progress for a revolutionary sentiment.

Crimes and incendiary fires are prognosticated for Great Britain, which may go through with a period even more anxious than any in recent history.

There is an ill omen for Chihuahua, Mexico, San Antonio, Texas and Ottawa, Canada, according to foreign astrologers.

Epidemics may be prevalent in many countries through the summer, which appears to foreshadow many calamities.

While nature apears to be subject to convulsions, man is making great intellectual progress, the seers declare.

Persons whose birthdate it is should not make any changes in the coming year, which should be fairly prosperous.

Children born on this day may have eventful and changeable lives. Many become sailors or travellers.

Mrs. Hannah Parkhouse ,an English woman of 104 years, is not much of a traveller. During her long life she has been out of her native county only once.

SAINT and SINNER
By ANNE AUSTIN

After Cherry had had a soothing warm bath and had obediently drunk a tall glass of hot milk, Faith tucked the covers about the small body, fragrant with bath salts and exquisitely dainty in a chiffon nightgown from the trousseau which Ralph Cluny had paid for and which he had never seen.

"Don't leave me Faith," Cherry begged, her breath still coming in little gasps, like a child who is "snubbing" itself to sleep after a hard cry. "I want to talk to you. I—I never get to talk to you like we used to. You're always thinking about Bob even if you're not talking about him. I believe you love him better than you do me!"

"Not better, darling—differently," Faith answered gently, drawing the low, painted rocking chair to Cherry's bedside and reaching for the little languid white hand, with its pointed, rose-tinted nails. "Don't you think you can sleep now? You need sleep, honey."

"I want to talk," Cherry persisted stubbornly. "Faith, I didn't tell Selman and George that I—I'm going to have a baby. Don't blame George. He wouldn't have taken me to the dance if he'd known. Nobody would," she added bitterly. "After a little I won't dare—oh, Faith, I can't bear to think I'll soon be ugly and different —" Her tortured eyes glanced down her slim length beneath the flowered silk coverlet.

"Where did you go?" Faith asked, trying to keep reproach out of her voice.

"The University Club," Cherry flushed and lowered her eyes. "George belongs, you know. There were about thirty couples—some of the richest young men in town, with the real society girls. George said he would have asked me before, if he had known I was ready to go out again. I told him I was simply dying for a good time, so he took me. He—he was awfully good to me, Faith."

"I'm glad," Faith said slowly. Her mind travelled swiftly back over the fall before, when George Pruitts, artist, and son of the rich and influential Lincoln Pruitts, had paid violent court to her, had wanted to marry her. He had not cared particularly for Cherry then, a fact which Cherry had never been able to forgive and understand. But he had come to Cherry's aid during the trial, had offered to advance any sum of money for the hiring of lawyers. "And everyone else—nice—to you?" Faith brought out the words with difficulty. It had never been discussed between them, but each of the girls had wondered and worried as to what the attitude of the town would be when Cherry should show herself again socially.

A red tide of shame crept up Cherry's throat, spread over her cheeks and ran into the tousled, shining curls that lay like a baby's upon her forehead.

"The girls were horrid," she confessed jerkily. "But the men fell over themselves to dance with me. I was the belle of the ball, in spite of the fact that I had on a dinner dress instead of an evening dress—thank heaven it was sleeveless!—and in spite of the fact that the girls looked daggers at the men while they were dancing with me. And how I danced!" she smiled suddenly. Then her mouth twisted piteously: "I can't dance any more until afterwards. Oh, Faith, what's going to become of me? What? What? I can't live with you and Bob forever, with—it, being an expense on you, crowding your house—"

Uncle Wiggily

To-day's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY'S SNAP DRAGON.

Copyright, 1927, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Don't you want to buy a ticket to our show, Uncle Wiggily?" barked Jackie Bow Wow, the little puppy dog boy one morning. He held out some square tickets made of white birch bark.

"Why, yes, I guess I'll buy one," answered the rabbit gentleman. "But what kind of a show is it going to be, Jackie? Are you going to do tricks as you and Pettie once did when you ran away to join the circus?"

"Oh, I don't guess there will be anything like that!" laughed Jackie. "But it will be a good show and you'll like it. Come to the back lots this afternoon. Here's your tickets—two cents, please."

"Here you are!" chuckled Uncle Wiggily, handing over two pennies made of round green leaves from the money vine.

"And don't forget to come to the show!" invited Jackie as he ran along so he wouldn't be late for school.

"I'll be there!" promised Mr. Longears. He was twinkling his pink nose and wondering what sort of a show it would be, when Johnnie Bushytail, the squirrel boy, scampered down out of a tree, chattering:

"Don't you want to buy a ticket to our show, Uncle Wiggily? Only two cents and you'll see a lot of funny things."

"Why, I just bought a ticket from Jackie Bow Wow," answered the rabbit gentleman. "I can get in the show with that."

"But if you buy a ticket from me, you can get in the show twice," chattered the squirrel. "And believe me, Uncle Wiggily!" he went on, "it will be a show you ought to see twice."

"Oh, well, what do I care for two cents!" exclaimed the bunny, reckless like. "Give me another ticket." So he bought one of Johnnie.

Then the squirrel chap scampered to school and Uncle Wiggily hopped along looking for an adventure when after him came running Charlie, the chicken boy.

"Buy a ticket for our show!" crowed Charlie.

"That will make three I have," said Mr. Longears.

"Then you can come in three times!" crowed Charlie. So Mr. Longears bought another bit of bark for two cents. And to make a long story short before the animal children were all in school they had sold Uncle Wiggily about thirty-five sixteen tickets to their show.

"I must take some of my friends, now that I have so many tickets," Mr. Longears said when it was afternoon and time for the show. "I'll take my wife, Nurse Jane, Uncle Butter, the goat, and Mr. Twistytail, the pig. We'll all go to the show."

It was easy to find the place, in the back lots, where the show was being held, for such laughing, shouting, yelling and hooting of animal boys and girls you never heard. By following the noise Uncle Wiggily and his friends reached the place where a lot of planks had been laid from one old stump to another, making a number of low counters like those in the six- and seven-cent store.

And on these counters were—what do you think? You'd never guess so I shall tell you. On the counters were all sorts of wild flowers that grew in the woods and fields where the animal children played.

"This is a queer show!" said Uncle Wiggily as he gave up the tickets for himself and his friends and looked at the wild blossoms.

"The Lady Mouse Teacher told us to have this kind of a show," said Susie Littletail. "She said it would teach us to know the different kinds of flowers."

"And so it will. It's a fine show!" agreed Uncle Wiggily. He hopped about looking at the daisies, the buttercups, the violets, the Jacks in the pulpit, the Indian pipes, pitcher plants and other wild growing things the boys and girls had gathered for their show. Really it was pretty and clever and Mr. Longears was glad he had bought so many two-cent tickets. The little animals stood back of the counters to tell the visitors the names of the different flowers.

But all of a sudden, something unpleasant happened. Into the midst of the flower show the Bob Cat jumped, snarling:

"I came to get Uncle Wiggily!" Mrs. Longears, Nurse Jane and some of the animal ladies screamed. But Uncle Wiggily quickly hopped to the flower counter where Jackie and Peetie Bow Wow stood and the rabbit picked up a large Snap Dragon. Now a Snap Dragon is a blossom that looks like a Dragon opening its mouth to bite when you pinch it. And Uncle Wiggily pinched this flower, made it open its mouth and then held it toward the Bob Cat's nose.

"Look out or you'll be bitten!" cried the rabbit. And the Bob Cat was so afraid that he ran away, taking his silly little tail with him. And then Uncle Wiggily and everybody else laughed, for of cousre the Snap Dragon flower really couldn't bite. It just looked as if it might.

Then the flower show went merrily on.

Was Nearly Crazy With Boils All Over His Body

Mr. S. L. Burke, Barronsfield, N.S., writes:—"For some time I was nearly crazy with boils all over my body. I tried everything I could think of to get rid of them, but to no avail, for as soon as one was healed up another would appear to take its place.

I was advised to take

and after I had used two bottles the boils had all disappeared and I have not been troubled with them since."

MANY PREPARING JUBILEE FLOATS

Lake eld Celebration Fund Has Reached Total of $400.

LAKEFIELD, June 28.—As Dominion Day draws near, one hears of various floats and decorated cars which are being prepared for the occasion. Several organizations, including the Fire Brigade, are entering, and, of course, the Citizens' Band will head the parade. There is evidence of friendly rivalry among organizations. The arrow on the dial in the New office window has reached the sum of $400, given by public subscription to enable the village to make July 1st, 1927, a day long to be remembered. Old timers say that Lakefield had no celebration in 1867, being only a small hamlet, not yet incorporated as a village.

The members of L.O.L. Beresford Lodge No. 122 will parade to the Baptist Church on Sunday, July 10th, accompanied by the Citizens' Band.

WEDDING BELLS.

HARRISON—PARKS.

On Wednesday, June 22nd, a quiet wedding was solemnized when Minnie, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. E. Parks, Hay Bay, Ontario, was united in marriage to Rev. Richard Bruce Harrison, B.A., son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. C. Harrison, Lakefield. The Rev. J. Merriam of Napanee officiated at the ceremony, which was performed at the home of the bride at one o'clock, in the presence of the members of the two families and a few close friends.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was very charming in a frock of white satin crepe, with the conventional veil and orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of Columbian roses, lily of the valley and maiden hair fern. The bridesmaid, Miss Olive Russel, of Kingston, was lovely in orchid georgette, and carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses. Mr. Frank Parks, brother of the bride, assisted the groom as best man. Miss Myrtle Harrison, sister of the groom, played the wedding music. The groom's gift to the bride was a pair of field glasses in a leather case; to the bridesmaid and pianist, gold bar pins, and to the best man, a gold pocket knife. Following the ceremony a buffet luncheon was served. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison left by motor on a trip to Kingston and Gananoque, where they will spend ten days, camping. The bride travelled in a suit of sand and brown, with sunni crepe de chine blouse, and hat, shoes, hose and gloves to match.

On their return about July 4th, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison will spend ten days with relatives at Lakefield, before leaving about the end of July for a mission field in Africa.

MALONEY—SULLIVAN.

A pretty June wedding was solemnized on Tuesday, June 21st, at nine a.m., at the Church of the Sacred Heart, by Rev. Fr. Maloney, when Catharine Ann (Kathleen), daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Sullivan, Otonabee, became the bride of William Edward Maloney, second son of Mrs. Johanna Maloney and the late Daniel Maloney, of Lakefield.

The bride entered the church leaning on the arm of her father, to the Wedding March played by Mr. Armstrong, and looked charming in a dress of peach georgette, large blonde picture hat, blonde satin shoes, stockings and gloves to match. The bride was assisted by Miss Josephine Maloney, sister of the groom, who wore a gown of pink flat crepe, blonde hat, shoes, stockings and gloves. The groom was supported by the bride's brother, Mr. Frank Sullivan.

Immediately after the ceremony the bridal party motored to the home of the bride's parents, Otonabee, and a wedding breakfast was partaken of by about twenty-five guests, friends of the contracting parties.

Mr. and Mrs. Maloney left later for a trip to Toronto and Niagara. The bride travelled in a sandlewood satin dress, navy blue charmeen coat, and hat, shoes and stockings to match. On their return they will reside in Douro.

TURCOTTE—GORDON.

A quiet but very pretty wedding was solemnized on Saturday morning at seven o'clock at the Church of the Sacred Heart, Rev. C. Maloney officiating, when Mary Irene Theresa, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gordon, Wilson Avenue, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to John Vincent Turcotte, youngest son of Mrs. Josephine Turcotte of Toronto and the late Mr. Turcotte.

The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a lovely gown of peacock blue crepe de chine, trimmed with cut velvet, and hat to match. The bridesmaid was Miss Mary Ryan, and the groomsman Mr. Thomas Gordon.

After the ceremony, a dainty wedding breakfast was served at the home of the bride's parents. Later, Mr. and Mrs. Turcotteleft by motor for Toronto. On their return, they will reside in Peterborough.

The young people received many beautiful gifts. The gift of the bridegroom to the bride was a kid purse and to the bridesmaid an encased pen and pencil.

The first three innings of the game were very close with neither team scoring, but in the fourth for the Cogs the first man up walked, the next singled, and the third man was given a pass also With that Manager Coursey pulled Masterson and sent in in his southpaw "Scotty" Maudsley, who before the side was retired had allowed three men to cross the plate. In the fifth Maudsley walked three Crary doubled and Rooke and Vannest singled, giving the Cogs three more runs. In the last frame Wilson singled but Maudsley came back to form and struck the next three men out. Vannes issued two passes and struck out six men. Rooke and Crary were the hitting stars of the game, each getting a double and a single. Crary made a wonderful pick of Corrin's line-drive in the first innings when he jumped into the air and picked it off with one hand.

H. Nichols, Hillier and Johnston pulled off a nice double play in the third for the Raybestos.

TRIBESMEN EVEN SERIES

Thormahlen and Stout Only Effective Pitchers—Onslow Put Off Field.

BEARS WIN SERIES.

NEW YORK, June 28 (Canadian Press).—Rochester gained an even break on the series by winning at Syracuse, 10 to 6. Thormahlen and Stout were the only effective pitchers. Thormahlen, relieving Horne, stopped the Stars cold and Stout fanned two men in the ninth, relieving Haid. Eddie Onslow, first baseman and captain of the Tribe, was put out of the game in the fifth for using abusive language to Umpire Gaston.

Newark made a clean sweep of the five game series at Reading by taking the final day, 11 to 2. The Newark team slammed out 19 base hits, including tripies by Elliott, Conlan and Mackin. Bill Moore pitched his second victory of the series. He beat the Keys in the first of the series.

Only two games scheduled.

YANKEES WIN FIFTH GAME

Athletics Held Scoreless By Dutch Reuther Until Ninth Innings.

HOMERS FEATURE.

NEW YORK, June 28 (Canadian Press).—Dutch Reuther pitched the Yankees to a 6—2 victory over Philadelphia yesterday in the fifth game of the series. Sharp fielding by the New York team enabled Ruether to hold the visitors scoreless until the ninth, but in that inning two singles and a walk filled the bases, and Ruether forced in a run with another pass. Pennock took up the pitching burden and checked the rally.

Home runs beat Ehmke, who started on the mound for the Mackmen. Coombs hit for the circuit in the first inning and Lazzeri duplicated the performance in the fourth with Meusel on base.

The White Sox and Cleveland divided a double header at Chicago, the Sox hamering out a 7 to 2 victory in the first game, and the Indians turning the tables on them in the second encounter 12 to 4. Lyons was master of the Indians in the first game, but Southpaw Bert Cole and his relief pitcher, Charley Barnabe, were shelled for 19 hits by the Indians in the second game.

Wins Opener from Browns.

Detroit took the opening game of the home series from the St. Louis Browns, the score was 4 to 2. The Tigers made only six hits but five of them were grouped in the sixth inning when they scored all of their runs. Sam Gibson, after several disappointing starts, worked the full distance for Detroit and held the opposition well in check. Gibson received brilliant support after the first inning, when Woodall's low throw contributed to the first St. Louis run.

This Speaker's single in the eighth inning scored Washington's last two runs at Boston and enabled the Senators to take their fourth straight victory from Boston, 9 to 8. It was the ninth loss for the Red Sox in seven days. Boston outhit the visitors, but could not bunch their blows effectively. In the seventh, Marberry forced in two runs by issuing bases on balls.

CARDS ADVANCE ON LEAGUE LEAD

Pound Four Pittsburgh Pitchers For 7-5 Victory at St. Louis.

GIANTS BLANKED 6-0.

NEW YORK, June 28 (Canadian Press).—The Cardinals pounded four Pittsburgh pitchers for eleven hits at St. Louis yesterday, and won, 7 to 5, thus advancing to within a half game of the League leadership Flint Rhem allowed the visitors nine safeties, but not more than one to an inning except in the sixth when a single, double and home run brought in three runs. Frankie Frisch got two hits and stole his twenty-second base this season. Bottomley got two doubles and a single.

Willoughby was in rare form at Philadelphia and the Phillies blanked New York, 6 to 0. The Phillies pounded Clarkson from the box and continued the attack on Grimes, his successor. Willoughby allowed the Giants only six hits and kept them scattered. Lindstrom went to left for the Giants and Reese occupied third base.

Reds Defeated

The Chicago Cubs avenged themselves yesterday for the defeat they received from the Reds Saturday by walloping two Red pitchers to win the second game at Cincinnati 11 to 4.

Cincinnati, true of scoring form, brought over one run in the first inning, but then waded away to the seventh before striking a run of three more scores.

Mays lasted until Chicago filled the bases in the second inning and drew in two runs, after which Kolp took the rest of the route. The Cubs hit for four runs in the third and piled up their remaining score in the eighth and ninth.

Saturday's fixture is a league game between the Thistle and Masseys at King Edward Park. Referee John Ward. A new feature of this encounter is ten o'clock kick-off in the morning, which will allow the fans to witness the festivities in the afternoon.

STARR STERLING'S PROBLEM

A Serial for Boys - By BERT REED

The white churning waters of the Mad River flung themselves in riotous abandon against the sharp black rocks that lined its course. Further down they would be turbulent, but none the less swift. Pushing, tumbling, swirling on toward the sea, its waters in less than four miles dropped more than 1,200 feet, and alive with the blue and red-spotted aristocrat of fishdom—the speckled brook trout.

Starr Sterling, who with Paul Gray, Larry Larkspur and Harry Northway, had planned to visit the Mad River even before the baseball scheme had been hatched, were camping less than a mile from the canyon.

Few people came to angle in its wild waters. Not only was access difficult, but there was also a certain element of danger to be encountered in the scaling of the precipitous sides of its rock confines.

But to Sterling this element of danger increased his desire to track the place where two pound beauties fought in foamy depths.

The four boys on leaving camp had decided to fish in pairs; Sterling with Northway had come down the river while Larkspur and Grey had struck up.

All afternoon a storm had threatened. Now a stiff wind had sprung up. Clouds black and ominous were scudding before it, while, like some sinister spectre, great inky shapes swept up from over the tops of the Black Hills. Northway, who had been fishing some hundred feet from Sterling, pulled in his line and walked back to Starr.

"I'm afraid we're in for a ripsnorter, Sterling. Don't you think we'd better hike back to camp"

"I think you're right, Harry——" began Sterling. At that moment with a deafening roar the storm broke.

It had come so suddenly that neither Northway nor Sterling was prepared. The wind raced down the valley, sweeping the rain before it. In an instant the boys were drenched.

"Can't go back!" shrieked Sterling in Harry's ear. "Go ahead."

The sky had assumed an inky blackness. Great ragged rents of lightning were momentarily tearing its face to shreds. The wind, shrieking through the trees and down the valley, literally swept the boys off their feet.

They were on a rocky plateau. One side fell sheer into the riotous waters, the other to a series of rocky terraces, leading into a wooded area that nestled at the base of the Black Hills.

Clinging to each other, the boys were pushed on in a staggering run. Then the awful truth dawned upon Starr. Unable to stem the tide of the wind, in a staggering slide, they were headed for the churning waters of the Mad River.

At that moment a blue flash lighted the landscape and Sterling saw too late that they were on the edge of the rocky canyon. Fifty feet beneath them, torn by the fury of the storm, the Mad River boiled in white violence. Then suddenly he felt Northway go. In vain he attempted to stop him. His empty hands clinched and gripped—nothing. Northway had gone over the edge down into the roaring depths of the Mad River!

Horror-stricken, Starr stumbled. In an effort to save himself he gripped at the slippery rocks. His attempt was futile. He, too, was swept off his feet, over the edge and down in a sheer plunge toward the waters which weer boiling in their mad race down the narrow gorge.

The distance Starr fell could not have been more than ten feet. With a jolt he stopped, caught by the branches of a jack pine springing from a crevice in a narrow ledge on the face of the cliff. He was momentarily stunned. The rain stung him into consciousness. Miraculously for the moment he was safe.

Gripping the pine securely with one arm, he groped with the other. He was on a ledge, Pushing himself back he lay flat on the narrow sill that afforded him protection, and then he touched something—and gasped. A low groan answered him.

At any rate Northway was living—he might be badly hurt. Sterling himself was badly shaken although the pine had broken the force of his fall. Cautiously Sterling threw one arm over the motionless form.

"Harry, old man," he called, "are you hurt?"

Starr was answered with another groan.

The ledge, Sterling guessed in the dim light, was about five feet wide. He could see dark shapes of bushes against the face of the cliff. He would have to move Northway back.

"I'm going to move you in, Harry, away from the edge," suggested Sterling, bending close to Northway's ear. "Are you badly hurt?"

"Just—just knocked my wind out," he gasped painfully. "I think I hit a tree. Where are we"

"On a ledge not far down," replied Sterling, "but we've got to get away from the edge."

Slowly, carefully he dragged Harry away from danger. In doing this he backed into the bushes. To his surprise his feet seemed to sink into the face of the cliff—as if it had been hollowed by human hands—was the mouth of a cave.

"Harry—a cave!" he shouted.

Northway looked up.

The opening was not large but Sterling, backing in, was able to squeeze past the thick bush that almost obscured the entrance. Harry by this time had recovered sufficiently to assist himself, and with the aid of Sterling was able to follow.

How far the cave extended the boys could not tell. Sterling felt for a flash he always carried. It had escaped disaster in the fall. An instant later its white beam was streaking a pathway of light down the cave. That the cavern extended farther than the light carried was at once apparent.

"Well, what do you think of this?" cried Harry in amazement. "A cave in the side of a cliff."

"I'm not thinking about the cave," replied Sterling grimly. "I'm thinking how we're going to get out."

"This cave may lead us out," suggested Northway hopefully. "At any rate, we're still alive when, according to the law of averages, we should be somewhere in the Mad River."

Down the rocky floor of the cavern they slowly picked their way. In places the cave narrowed to the width that would permit but one of them to pass. On these occasions Sterling with his flash light led the way. They had traversed some two or three hundred yards when Starr's flash clicked and they were left in darkness. Harry felt Sterlings hand close over his mouth. "Quietly," whispered Starr, "there's some sort of light ahead." With hands gripping the rocky walls, they cautiously groped their way forward.

GARDEN PARTY AT MILLBROOK

Annual Social of Ladies of St. Thomas' Church Very Successful.

GOOD PROGRAM GIVEN.

MILLBROOK, June 28.—The annual garden party, under the auspices of the ladies of Saint Thomas' church, was held on the Rectory grounds on Thursday evening, the attendance being satisfactory considering other events in the vicinity, and the cool atmosphere which was not conducive to comfort in an out of doors gathering.

The tables were laid on the lawn on the west side of the house, and menu being of a most satisfying character. There was a happy buzz of conversation as guests coming and going to and from the section where the supper was served, made the most of the opportunity for social intercourse.

The program was given from the verandah on the east side of the rectory, the French doors and windows wide open making it possible for those taking part to have the use of the piano in the drawing-room, while the audience found comfortable accomodation on the seats and benches arranged on the sheltered lawn.

The orchestra from All Saints' church, Peterborough, furnished music while the service of the tea was going on, and filled in the time most agreeably for those first at the tables ,and while all late comers were given attention. Full credit for the items on the programme is due Mrs. (Canon) Allen, who had charge of all the arrangements. The numbers were:

Selection by the All Saints' orchestra.

Solo, "The Open Road", by Mr. H. Rush, Peterborough; encore, "In the Morning", Recitation by Miss Hazel Armstrong.

Song (humorous), by Messrs. Clare Winslow, Harry and Tom McCamus.

Guitar selection by Mr. H. Wagner.

Selection by the orchestra.

Solo, "Macushla", by Mr. Rush; encore, "My Sweetest Child I have No Song to Give You."

Patriotic recitation by Miss B. Brown.

Song, "I Never See Maggie Alone", by the Messrs. C. Winslow, Tom and Harry McCamus.

Selection, ukelele, by Mr. Wagner. Orchestra.

Recitation, "Lady Nora" by Miss Brown.

Song, "I Wonder How I Look When I'm Asleep", by the boys.

Orchestra selection.

Previous to the singing of the National Anthem the rector, Rev. Canon Allen, expressed his personal appreciation of the good attendance, the help willingly given by those who had assisted with the programme and in all the work of providing the supper, and all the labor connected with the event, adding the pleasure which both he and Mrs. Allen felt in extending the hospitality of he rectory and its grounds, for the garden party each season.

Mr. J. A. Vance was the efficient manager in charge of the booth which was well patronized during the entire evening, and among those assisting with the tea were Mrs. John Allen, convenor of all the arrangements; Mrs. J. E. Allen, Mrs. A. J. Fallis, Mrs. T. H. Bradley, Mrs. L. Morton, Mrs. E. Whyte, Mrs. T. Dew, Miss E. Needler, and Miss M. Christie; as waitresses were: Mrs. J. A. Vance, Mrs. (Dr.) H. Young, Misses Gladys Gray, Francis Turner, Rose Macnamara, M. Curtiss, Ada Attwool, Edna Lowery, Anna Kells, Janet Needler, and Mrs. H .Wilton.

Messers. H. J. Grassett and A. H. Barnes looked after the sale and collection of tickets, and Messrs. A. A. Needler and R. I. Fallis, were responsible for seeing that all the guests at the table wer supplied with tea.

Financially the receipts were not quite as large as last year, but were considered up to expectations considering the cool season, and the fact that similar events are of practically daily occurrence, every evening being claimed by some church, or oranization, in the community and surrounding district, for garden party or lawn social, with entertainment following.

The woman golfer can now play on equal terms with the men. The last word in sports attire is plus-fours for women players.

The American League was originally organized in 1894 under the name of the Western League. The name was changed to the American League in 1900.

ADVANCE PARTY PREPARES CAMP

Little Damage Done By Elements at Rotary-Y.M.C.A. Camp.

The advance party of the Rotary-Y.M.C.A.boys' camp was in at the site yesterday making preparations for the coming of the boys on Monday next. Floors and shelving was scrubbed and everything left in shipshape manner awaiting the supplies, which will be sent in at the end of the week.

So far as could be seen no article of camp property had been molested since the camp was closed last fall. The dock has withstood the ice and remains complete, even to the high lookout chair from which the swimming is supervised. Unfortunately, the high wind—which did so much damage in the upper lakes a few weeks ago—conspired with the water to overturn the runway from the front of the boathouse. No serious damage was done in the over-turning and the runway and water chute will be replaced by the carpenters before camp opens.

The clues to the hidden camp treasure were placed in all parts of the camp grounds from the water to the ball field. Painted on rocks and trees are numbers from 1 to 15, which when found will give a further clue to the whereabouts of the treasure. No. 1 is so placed that everyone starts from the centre of the camp being in plain view on the pile of rocks near the cottage which serve as a chair for the camp barber when a boy's hair needs trimming. The rest are not so readily accessible.

QUEBEC OFFICER DOUBTS RUMORS ABOUT AVIATORS

Ghost Lake Not Known To Forestry Department of Province.

MYSTERY INCREASED.

Messages Signed 'Frank James' Cannot Be Traced By Recipients.

QUEBEC, June 28. — (Canadian Press.)—C. C. Price of Province of Quebec Government Forestry Department, frankly discredited the rumor that Nungesser and Coli had been found alive on the shore of Ghost Lake, as claimed in untraced message sent out by "Frank James."

Mr. Piche said he did not know of any Ghost Lake and the fact that the message could not be traced it its source inclined him to the belief that the rumour was groundless.

TOWN NOT KNOWN.

Chicoutimi, June 28.— (Canadian Press.)—Rumors that Nungesser and Coli, the missing French airmen, were found in North-eastern Quebec, were declared to be false by M. Kane, manager of Price Brothers here, this morning. No reference can be found to any town of Calquet nor can "Ghost Lake" be located.

RUMORS CURRENT.

TORONTO, June 28. — (Canadian Press.) — Rumors were current here this morning that the two missing had been discovered alive in Quebec.

These rumors appeared to have been based on a message alleged to have been sent by Frank James ,of Seattle, Washington, to Hon. Charles Stewart, of Ottawa, saying the fliers had been found forty rods inland from the north shore of Ghost Lake, 80 miles north and slightly east of the town of Calquet in North-eastern Quebec. It is said that Mr. James' message added that both fliers were alive, but badly needed medical attention. Their plane had crashed.

Both the Canadian Press and the Associated Press are investigating this rumor, which so far has no authoritative grounds.

MORE MYSTERY.

OTTAWA, June 28. — (Canadian Press.)— The Hon. Charles Stewart has received a message from "Frank James" stating that the French fliers have been found as indicated, but the message so far has merely added an adidtional mystery to that of the unfortunate airmen. Nothing is known here of Frank James nor has department as yet been able to locate the spot where they are supposed to have been found.

ARMY FLIERS BEGIN FLIGHT TO HONOLULU

Take Off From Oakland at 7.09 a.m. Pacific Standard Time.

RIVAL COMES BACK.

E. L. Smith Returns To Airport Few Minutes After Start.

OAKLAND, Calif., June 28 (Canadian Press).—The giant tri-motored army Fokker monoplane, piloted by Lieut. Lester J. Maitland, and with Lieut. Albert Hegenberger as navigator, left here on its attempted non-stop flight to Honolulu at 7.09½ a.m., Pacific standard time, to-day.

The army plane passed through Golden Gate, San Francisco, at 7.20 a.m. and sung out over the Pacific towards its goal. The hop-off from the municipal air port was without effort or much ceremony. As the plane was opposite Land's End, the most westerly point on the San Francisco coast line, it was three thousand feet in the air.

The steamer Matsonia, coming in from Honolulu, the destination of the aeroplane, blew its whistle in one long blast, bidding the aviators goodbye.

Farewells Brief.

As the fliers climbed into the plane they were approached by Major-General Mason Patrick, chief of the Army Air Service, who shook hands with them with a warm, lingering clasp.

"God bless you, my boys," the General said to the two fliers. "I know you are going to do it."

Maitland replied, "General, you know I am going to do my best." Then he and Hegenberger waved to the crowds and climbed into their plane.

Just as the motors started, E. L. Smith, pilot of the civilian plane which was expected to follow the army plane into the air within the next few hours, ran in front of the army plane and, clasping his hands together, thrust them over his head and imitated a handshake so that both Maitland and Hegenberger could see him through the window of the pilot's cabin. "Good luck," Smith shouted at the top of his voice, and the friendly rivals who were beating him to the take-off smiled and nodded.

Smith Returns.

Ernest L. Smith, aviator attempting the Golden Gate-Hawaiian flight, returned to the air port here a few minutes after his take-off. The reason for his return was not apparent at once, but the pilot of an escort plane that landed near the Smith plane said it appears as though the monoplane was "nose heavy," and that Smith would have landed in the bay.

Smith said he came back because the mica window which protects his face from the wind was blown out of position.

In 1868 the railways in England were prohibited carrying persons going to a prize-fight.

LAUDER INTERRUPT MYSTIC DOINGS IN GRIPPING PICTURE

If you care for real entertainment then by all means see "The Mystery Club," the Universal-Jewel which is drawing crowds to the Regent Theatre this week.

It is a thrilling comedy drama with a most unusual turn of plot having to do with an organization of millionaires known as "The Mystery Club," the members of which believe that they are able to commit all sorts of depredations without being discovered by the police, whose methods they decry.

To this end they agree that six members are to be selected, each of whom posts a large sum to be forfeited in the event that his scheme goes awry. In the midst of their plans, crime after crime is committed by some mysterious agency. The members of the club suspect each other and are compelled to spend thousands of dollars in order to divert the suspicion of the police and outside world from the organization.

The action is fast and stirring until the very last when a surprising twist upsets every calculation. Director Herbert Blache did a masterly job on "The Mystery Club." He has given us a picture that is "different" in every sense of the word.

The all-star cast functions perfectly. Not one member can be singled out for individual comment. Each player works smoothly and with precision, the team work being perfect.

AT THE CAPITOL.

GLORIA SWANSON IN "THE LOVE OF SUNYA."

There are people who like Gloria Swanson very much, and there are others who don't care for her at all. However, there are probably very few who will disagree with the assertion the lady can act. She fills the picture at all moments and she puts a large amount of enthusiasm into her roles. In "The Love of Sunya" she has a peculiar characterization, or series of characterizations, that give her plenty of scope for her talents and plenty of opportunity to wear wonderful and weird gowns and jewels and coiffures.

Although the picture has a slight element of dragginess, it has an interesting atmosphere, projected by the prologue, in which an Egyptian priest pursues a girl of the temple and causes her to suicide. His punishment is the obligation to wander through the ages until he finds someone to whom he can do a great deal of good and thus atone for his sin.

In the following modern episodes, he works out his destiny, appearing to Sunya Ashling, in a moment of difficulty, as a crystal gazer who helps her to seek her true sphere in life.

Looking in the crystal, she sees her future as it may work itself out in two different ways. She has received an offer from an impresario, Paolo di Salvo, to go to Paris and become a grand opera star. The crystal shows her what lies in store for her if she accepts this destiny, in a career given up to luxury and finally to vice, with a tragedy marking its end.

Later, she once more consults the magic glass ball and sees her future as the wife of the financier, Robert Goring, who has approached her father with an offer for her hand. Her father, in financial straits, urges her to accept, but the crystal shows her another tragic existence, with Goring unfaithful to her and finally trickling her into divorce and degradation.

The final scenes show the girl choosing Paul Judson, the man who loves her and whom she loves, but who had not enough money to help her father and her family.

It is an entertaining picture, with Gloria Swanson at her best in the different characterization of a rather involved story.

On the stage last night at the Capitol was decided the Screen Opportunity Contest being conducted by the Famous Players Theatres throughout the province. This is outlined in another article in this issue.—Jeanette.

CHAPTER XXVIII

Prentiss glanced at Vilak in fright a moment, then suddenly turned and darted out of the room. They heard him mount a flight of stairs, then dart down again.

Vilak, despite the other's absence, swiftly began making a survey of the empty chamber, from whose flimpsy walls great sections of plaster and brick had fallen in such quantities that in many places the moonlight showed brightly.

"This room won't do," he muttered. "High powered bullets would pierce it in a hundred places. Let's look over the house."

He flicked on his flashlight. With Elise and the old man close behind him, he stepped carefully past the raging dog, then swept through room after room of the melancholy structure, disturbing here a few ghostly bats, there an ugly brown splochedtoad. He found nothing which suited his purpose, however, until they had reached a room at the rear. Here a window looked out upon a low stone water tower, three or four hundred feet from the house.

"That tower's just the place," he flashed. "Excellent position. Has a view of all sides, and is almost certainly bullet-proof."

They hurried out, crossed the low gully which lay between the tower and the house and strode through the door forming its entrance. A quick examination proved it to be in better state of preservation than the residence, though ever here two or three of the red volcanic stones of which it was constructed had fallen and lay on the ground. It had evidently been used as a store-room, for it was filled with broken boxes, almost obliterated by cobwebs, and a few rotting pieces of cast-off furniture.

One section, however, separated by a small wooden partition, showed signs of recent use, for here the debris had been cleared away; smoked meats and other kitchen supplies had been brought in and hung from long hooks or were placed on shelves along the wall.

Vilak shrouded a candle and put it in a corner so that it would give them a faint light without being seen outside. Then he smashed an old iron stove with an ax, and taking the separated plates set about sealing up the tower's two small windows. Prentiss hurried in to join them, and shakily aided Vilak in preparing a barricade.

The three men and the girl dragged some heavy boxes forward, and with them blocked the narrow doorway. The dirty floor of the room was wet and slippery, making the work more difficult.

Vilak glanced down to ascertain the reason for the dampness and saw in a shadowy corner a tiny thread of water coursing up from the soil. "Spring from those little lakes on the high ground back of your house" he demanded of Prentiss.

The other nodded sullenly.

Vilak began making loopholes in the window barricades. "Wet feet won't hurt us. Get rifles, if you've got them."

Prentiss disappeared into the house again, returning with half a dozen new rifles and a box of ammunition. Two of these Vilak put by each window, "I think we're ready for them now," he said. "As ready as we can be."

He began distributing the cartridges. He looked at Elise gravely as he watched her slip a clip of bullets into the chamber of her rifle. "I reproach myself bitterly for having let you come along. Bitterly. Both you and Nanny. But you're here. And what's done is done."

He took another bit of betel, then peered out through one of the window apertures. "Moon's quite bright and I can see plainly, but no signs of attack yet. All you had better have some cigarets."

He offered the cigarets to Elise. She smiled and refused. "Too powerful for me now. Won't be able to shoot straight if I do. I'll take one of Mr. Nunnally's mild ones." She touched his hand. "Don't worry about my being here, or you having brought me here. You didn't. I brought myself. Forget about me....You've far too much to think of anyway .... Please."

"All right....that's ended."

He showed the old man a second time how to operate the rifle. "Think you can do it Nanny?"

The old man took off his glasses, wiped them nervously, then once more pressed his tiny thumb against the magazine spring. "I...er...must do it. I must."

Prentiss kept his eyes fixed out the other window, his face one instant sullen, the next trembling.

Vilak took a position beside him. He rubbed a drop of grease from the sight of his rifle. "Be sparing of the ammunition. It's the only thing we have. We'll have to make it last a long time."

A long eerie call like the cry of some night wandering bird drifted up from the creek.

"A signal," Vilak murmured. "Probably give us a straight frontal attack," he went on as Elise hastened to join the old man at the window. "At the gate. It's our weakest spot. Keep a sharp lookout."

The dog who had been left in the house began to bay again. Suddenly Prentiss jerked his rifle to his shoulder. "Shadows. Shadows. At the gate!" he whispered hoarsely.

"You're right." Vilak swung his rifle into position. "We'll give them a volley. Better let me handle it Prentiss," he added quietly, when the other quivering as though from a violent chill, feverishly touched his gun, took wild aim and was about to shoot. "Don't fire till I say so."

A few seconds later came his placid soothing voice once more. "Steady.. ..Steady.... Good aim....Fire...."

The reports of four rifles were almost simultaneous. An outcry followed. The shadows disappeared. "Two on the casualty list, I think," Vilak said.

There was a brief interval of inaction. Then the call of the nightbird sounded again, and again vague shadows appeared at the lofty barred entrance. A second volley blazed from the defenders rifles. Again there was a cry of pain, again the shadows vanished.

"At least one more that time," Vilak grunted. "Learn pretty soon they can't do that. Seem to be intent on forcing the gate. Maybe afraid the barbed wire on top of the wall has high voltage, but I doubt it."

A third time the attackers tried to reach the gate, a third time they were routed and sprang back into the brush. A brooding silence fell over the fazenda. With her pen-knife Elise dug out a shell which had stuck in the magazine of her rifle; the old man wiped the powder and prespiration from his face with his minute handkerchief; Prentiss kept his glassy eyes fixed to the loophole before him, his lips constantly moving though they emitted no sound; Vilak viciously chewed betel nut.

Suddenly heavy firing began in the high branches of the trees along the creek, many feet overtopping the wall. A fusillade of bullets rattled against the house. "Steady..... Steady." Vilak counselled. "Take your time. Fire at the bursts."

The fusillade continued. Here and there the putt-puttering of a rifle would abruptly cease, mute testimony that a shot of the defenders had found its target. But neither were the bullets of the attackers without effect, as the firing went on plowing often and aftener through a joint in the inadequate barricade.

The firing ceased for a few moments, then burst out again with increased vigor. The old man gave a low exclamation and dropped his gun. (To Be Continued.)

OUTLINE OF SCIENCE — CCXX—It Pays to Ignore the Doubters. — by MAX HAHN

CAN YOU PICTURE THE PUBLIC'S ATTITUDE TOWARD FLYING IN 1900? THE DOUBTING THOMASES OUTNUMBERED THE LITTLE GROUP WITH FAITH IN AERIAL NAVIGATION A MILLION TO ONE. IF YOU EXPERIMENTED WITH GLIDERS VIRTUALLY EVERYBODY CONSIDERED YOU QUEER. PEOPLE WERE CAREFUL NOT TO RIDICULE WILBUR AND ORVILLE WRIGHT OPENLY, BUT PLENTY OF UNKIND REMARKS WERE VOICED WHEN THEY WERE OUT OF HEARING.

THERE WAS SOME EXCUSE FOR THE GENERAL SKEPTICISM. AS LONG AS MAN CAN REMEMBER HE WANTED TO FLY, BUT UNTIL THE WRIGHTS ENTERED THE AIR NO ONE HAD CONQUERED THE SKY. EXPERIMENTER AFTER EXPERIMENTER HAD FAILED. LILIENTHAL CRASHED. TWICE LANGLEY FELL. THUS IT WAS THAT WHEN THE WRIGHTS BEGAN EXPERIMENTS IN A PUBLIC FIELD NEAR DAYTON FEW PAID ATTENTION TO THEM AND MOST OF THEM WERE SUSPICIOUS.

EXPERIMENTS AT DAYTON SHOWED THE WRIGHTS THAT THE SO-CALLED SCIENTIFIC PRINCIPLES OF FLIGHT HAD LITTLE VALUE. THEY DIDN'T STAND UP UNDER ACTUAL AIR CONDITIONS. THE YOUNG EXPERIMENTERS, THEREFORE, BEGAN TO COMPILE THEIR OWN TABLES OF DATA ON FLYING.

WARNING OUT TO 'REPEATERS'

Those Who Call More Than Once in Rush Hours To Be Checked.

BOUQUET FOR STAFF.

Col. Frank Bradburn, in charge of the Peterborough store of the Ontario Control Board, this morning issued a warning that "repeaters," especially on Saturday mornings and before holidays, are to be checked up.

By "repeaters" is meant of course customers who make several calls a day, sometimes for but small quantities at each visit.

This repetition interferes with other customers, and causes a needless congestion in rush hours.

The local staff is being complimented by visitors on the courtesy and attention shown to customers at store No. 45. "They give you real service here," a visitor remarked to The Examiner this morning. "Everybody is obliging and helpful, while in some of the Toronto stores customers are treated like cattle."

Free from all petty details, you can cruise along the wonder belt of the world, over the Great Prairies, through the Canadian Pacific Rockies, Across the Great Lakes, the two inspiring motor drives, seeing everything worth while, bringing back a rich store of vivid impressions, unspoiled by the memory of annoyances and discomforts. DIRECTORS VIEW PEONY GARDENS

Board of Horticultural Society Meets at J. H. Callander's Home.

BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS.

On invitation of J. H. Callander, the Board of Directors of the Horticultural Society held their business meeting at his peony gardens on Weller Street last evening. The hour from seven to eight was spent in an interesting study of the great number of beautiful varieties of the peonies, which was a practical demonstration of the wonderful combinations of delicate tints and the multitude of shapes, that have been developed in these queenly flowers. The hour was thoroughly enjoyed by all, as naturally every member is a flower enthusiast, and a review of probably not less than 5,000 blooms was a real treat to each one.

The members then gathered on the lawn, each bringing from the field a bouquet of the finest specimen blooms garnered as they passed up and down the rows, and took up the serious business of the meeting. The discussion was largely in connection with an exhibit of peonies in some uptown store and the preparation of the Society's float for the Dominion Day parade. These were finally settled, and the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to their host for entertainment that had made this particular business meeting a pleasure to attend.

RALPH DAVIS FACES TRIAL

street. On May 25, Mrs. Wilson stated that on going upstairs, a man had jumped from her bedroom and leaping down the stairs had shouted, "I guess I am in the wrong house." She had then searched the house and found that a dollar and some change had been stolen.

Mrs. Edgar Puttick, 502 Gilmour street, the next witness called by the Crown, told the court that on the afternoon of June 15 she and some friends were sitting on the front verandah when a neighbor had called her across the street and had told her about a man going in the rear door.

She then excitedly ran back to her own home folowed by her friends. She opened the door and all but fell into the intruder's arms. Mrs. Puttick remarked that when she had opened the door she had been asked by him if that was Mrs. Mowry's house, and that she had replied that he knew perfectly well that it was not. The thief told the ladies to be calm and apologized for frightening them so. "When I went to call the police," said Mrs. Puttick, "he ran out the back door and over the fence."

"Have you any doubt that the man in the witness box was not the thief?" Mr. Hatton asked. "None in the world," answered Mrs. Puttick.

Mrs. Bennewith, a friend of Mrs. Puttick toold the same story as the latter, stating that the man ran to Monaghan road.

No cross-examination was made by Mr. McElderry acting for the accused.

Back was so Weak Could not Turn in Bed

A study of symptoms enabled this lady to obtain complete relief from Kidney troubles.

This letter describes a remarkable experience which Mrs. Landry had with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. Because of their unique action on both the liver and kidneys these pills frequently relieve complicated ailments which puzzle the family doctor. This point is well illustrated in this case.

Mrs. Pamis Landry, Gracieville, Richmond Co., N.S., writes:—

"After the birth of my first child, my back was very weak and kept getting worse, until it was so bad that I could not turn in my bed without help. I consulted five doctors, but to no avail. One day a friend gave me Dr. Chase's Almanac, in which I read of cases similar to mine being successfully relieved by the use of K. & L. Pills and started to take them. I was so broken down and depressed that I felt I did not care to live, but after taking the pills I began feeling very much better and kept on taking them until I had obtained thorough relief. I would not now be without them and always keep a full supply of all Dr. Chase's Medicines on hand, as in a small country place, where often it is extremely difficult to get a doctor in case of need, Dr. Chase's Medicines often successfully fill the gap."

Advertising Then And Now

It was the custom back in 1850 when farm animals were lost for the owner to have notice sheets printed, such as the one exhibited in The Examiner's window, in order to bring them back into the fold.

Nowadays, however, a small advertisement in the newspapers is not only cheaper, but reaches more people.

TORY CABINET UNDER ATTACK ON ALL SIDES

Staunch Conservative Papers Condemn Policies of Baldwin Government.

MEMBERS REVOLT.

Many Supporters of Party Oppose Changes in House of Lords.

LONDON, June 28 (United Press). —The Government of Stanley Baldwin is in deep water. It does not enjoy a single whole-hearted supporter among the entire conservative press.

To-day the Morning Post, usually a most faithful ally, attacks Chancellor of the Exchequer Winston Churchill for his attempt to appoint inquisitors who would decide whether the larger firms in Great Britain are placing more in their reserve funds than necessary, with a view to levying a super tax on them.

The Express is likewise hostile, denouncing the proposed reform of the House of Lords and asserting that a grand political crisis exists, while the Daily Mail derides the Prime Minister for the lack of a land policy and his Government in general for its failure to make a "complete sweep" of the Reds. Even the Sunday Observer rends Mr. Baldwin's administration for the Lords' plan in some phases of a most caustic character.

To add to the Conservatives' troubles, a number of leading Tory members, under the leadership of Sir John Marriott, are opposing any reform in the constitution of the House of Lords at the present time, declaring that the proposed alterations are being rushed. What they want during the life of this Parliament is only the creation of a joint committee, of Lords and Commons, to decide definitely what a "money bill" really is.

The Express is of the opinion that the Lords' scheme might still be scrapped in spite of Lord Birkenhead's declaration that it will be passed during the life-time of the present Parliament. However, Premier Baldwin is expected to make a statement within a few days clarifying the situation.

Then, too, fifty Tories last night decided to submit amendments for the purpose of killing the Chancellor's plan for the collection of a super tax on the excessive placing of money in reserve funds despite his attempt to water the proposals down. In this connection fifty Conservatives will vote against them unless they are radically changed. Naturally these signs of mutiny in the Tory camp are causing much political excitement, and the Government is showing evidence of hard wear.

The situation is being exploited by Lord Beaverbrook, whose papers declare the Baldwin Government has reached a critical point in its career.

Censure from Laborites.

LONDON, June 28. — Canadian Press. — The Labor party to-day framed a motion of censure which their leader, Ramsay MacDonald, will move in the House of Commons next week declaring that Baldwin's House of Lords reform scheme "jerrymanders the constitution in the interests of the Conservative party, deprives the House of Commons of control of finance, entrenches the Lords on a hereditary basis, and in defiance of every precedent of modern times, "robs" the electors of the power to deal with the upper house.

Diamond Jubilee Confederation Day

THREE SCORE YEARS AGO, the Fathers of Confederation planted the Seeds for a United and Contented Canada. From those Seeds, imbedded in fertile soil on July 1, 1867, the Sturdy Oak of a Solidified Commonwealth grew. To-day Canada holds an Honored Place among the Nations of the Earth---dedicated to the Principles of Righteousness. To these Principles we of 1927 renew our Pledge.

Great Commonwealth Within the Empire

By WILLIAM EDGAR

On the evening of Friday, June 17, 1864, three men sat in a room in the St. Louis hotel in Quebec, engaged in very earnest conversation. They talked long and volubly; the interchange of ideas flowed, now with the placidity of a gentle stream meandering through the plain, now with an undercurrent of irony discernible on the part of one or other of the speakers; and at times the very thinly veiled hostility of two of the party threatened to bring about a speedy termination of the interview. But, at length, an agreement was effected and the three men separated, each feeling that a good night's work had been accomplished.

Few meetings of such tremendous import are recorded in the pages of history. The two men who had visited the hotel were John A. Macdonald and Alexander T. Galt, members of the ministry of Sir Etienne Tache which had fallen three days previously. The third was George Brown, leader of the Reform party, and a keen and uncompromising opponent of the late government. The object of the meeting had been to find a way out of the morass of difficulties in which constitutional government found itself, torn as it was, between the dissensions of British and Protestant Upper Canada and French and Roman Catholic Lower Canada, unequally yoked in loveless wedlock as United Canada.

These difficulties were such as might well have appalled the boldest and most sanguine. The gulf between Upper and Lower Canada had been steadily widened by the acrimonious controversies concerning the numbers of representatives allotted to each in the Legislative Assembly. Four ministries had fallen in three years and two general elections had failed to produce stable government. As is often the case when parties are almost evenly balanced, feeling ran high and the larger interests were sacrificed to the temporary advantages of partisanship. South of the border line, two mighty armies were engaged in the greatest civil war of history and there were ominous predictions that the arms of the victors would be turned against the British colonies after the extinction of the Southern forces. Rumors of impending hostilities between the Mother Country and the United States caused thoughtful men to speculate on the possible fate of Canada should the threatened rupture come to pass.

Such was the state of affairs when the deadlock in the Canadian Assembly induced the rival chieftains, Brown and Macdonald, to agree to a suspension of active political warfare, in order to make the attempt to devise a scheme which would end for all time the constitutional difficulties between Upper and Lower Canada. Their deliberations resulted in a compact to form a coalition government for the purpose of negotiating a confederation of all the British North American colonies with the understanding that if this scheme failed they would attempt to apply the federal principle as between the two Canadian provinces.

The idea of a federation of the British provinces was one that had attracted men of vision for nearly a century before. Indeed, as far back as the time when the New England colonies first wrenched themselves from the parent trunk, an article was introduced into the constitution of the new confederacy authorizing the admission of the remaining British possessions in the continent into the Union. Federation of the loyalist colonies was advocated by Lord Dorchester, after the American upheaval, as the best means of ensuring their survival. In 1789, a plan of union was drawn up by William Smith, a former Chief Justice of Canada, who proposed a federal nominated council and an assembly elected by the provincial legislature.

Chiefly through the chaotic condition of the politics of that day, Smith's proposal came to nought only to be revived 25 years later by another Chief Justice, Sewell, of Quebec, who submitted a plan of confederation to the Duke of Kent, Governor-General of United Canada. Lord Durham, in his earlier studies of Canadian problems, looked on the union of the colonies with a kindly eye in 1837, but later came to the conclusion that the idea was not yet within the sphere of practical politics. At that time were lacking both the physical and psychological basis for union. Communication between the Maritimes and the Canadas were still too primitive and difficult to permit of their being governed from one centre; racial and political animosities which seemed to be almost irreconcilable, divided the various parties within the provinces, and local feeling was so strong that a common national sentiment was still a thing of the future.

With the introduction of railways and telegraphs, one obstacle to confederation was removed; and the speeches of men like Macdonald, Brown, D'Arcy McGee, Tilley, Cartier, Galt, and Tupper helped to create the necessary background. In 1850, the British American League issued a call for the federation of the provinces as the only way out of the labyrinthine passage of intrigue and difficulty in which the colonies found themselves involved, and in 1854 the legislature of Nova Scotia adopted resolutions recommending a closer union of the North American possessions of Great Britain. Gradually the Imperial Government in London awoke to a realization of the fact that in such a union the colonies could best be retained under the British crown. Eminent statesmen welcomed the idea, which, by the year 1858, had so far made progress that, under the influence of Alexander Galt who represented Sherbrooke in the Canadian Legislative Assembly, a deputation was sent to confer on the project with the authorities in London. But the hour of union had not yet struck, and the mission produced no practical results. Federation within a smaller circle then engaged the attention of statesmen and the germ of the idea had developed by 1864 to such extent that the legislatures of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island appointed committees to meet in the fall of that year to discuss the feasibility of a legislative union of the Maritime provinces.

Thus, in an atmosphere of union, was born the Coalition Ministry of United Canada in which George Brown, Oliver Mowat, and William McDougal, of the opposition, patriotically sunk their political and personal differences to join with their erstwhile opponents in the task of establishing government on lasting foundations. All at once, it flashed across the astute and calculating mind of Macdonald that the meeting of the Maritime delegates at Charlottetown might be turned to account by the Canadian Government in the promoting of a plan of a scheme of larger union which should include Canada as well as the provinces by the Atlantic. Permission was asked and granted for the Canadian delegates to lay the proposals of Canada before the Maritime Conference, and John A. Macdonald, George E. Cartier, George Brown, Alexander T. Galt, Thomas D'Arcy McGee, William McDougall, Hector Langvin and Alexander Campbell joined the assembly which met at Charlottetown on September 1, 1864.

The meeting was held behind closed doors and no report was issued, but the results became speedily apparent. The Canadian ministers had no mandate to confer respecting legislative union; consequently they had no official standing; but they were invited to join in the discussion which they did with such effect that within three days the lesser plan of legislative union of the Maritime provinces was shelved and the question of the federal union of all British North America occupied the exclusive attention of the delegates. "The Canadians descended upon us," said a Maritime delegate, "and before they were three days among us we forgot our own scheme and thought only of theirs." Maritime union had sunk into the background: all were dazzled by the great vision of a Canada stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific which had captivated the imagination of Macdonald: the project of a general federation which guaranteed local and central control made a wide and instantaneous appeal.

"This scheme of ours," observed Macdonald to some of his colleagues on the way to their hotel, "like Aaron's serpent, has swallowed up all the rest."

At the suggestion of the Canadians, the conference adjourned with the agreement that a second meeting would be held in the immediate future to discuss the larger union which, it was hoped, would comprise all British North America.

On Monday, October 10, the adjourned conference met at Parliament House, Quebec, under the presidency of Sir Etienne Tache. For an event of such historic importance, no better setting could have been chosen than the ancient capital, with its striking situation and its hallowed memories of bygone days. In the immediate neighborhood, the British and French armies had chivalrously fought out their great quarrel with Canada as a prize. On the very site of Parliament House had stood the residence of Bishop Laval in which the first parliament held on Canadian soil had conducted its deliberations. The delegates were practical and experienced men of affairs, but they lacked neither poetic sense and imagination nor knowledge of the past; and it may well be that their labors were inspired by the historic associations of their meeting-place.

For seventeen days, the representatives of United Canada, the Maritime provinces and Newfoundland examined the questions from every point of view in their efforts to build the fabric of confederation.

Upon one subject all these Fathers of Confederation were in complete harmony. Men of all creeds and parties, political opponents of a lifetime, Protestant and Catholic, British and French, all spoke with one voice in declaring their resolve to continue unimpaired their allegiance to the crown of Britain.

This fervent declaration evoked from the British Government a historic reply, in which the armed forces of the Empire were pledged to defend the young nation against the might of the world.

All decisions were arrived at by vote: each province had two votes, Canada being considered as two provinces. Macdonald, and a minority of his colleagues, openly avowed a preference for a legislative, as opposed to a federal union, but the delegates from Quebec, anxious to preserve their church and local autonomy, frustrated the fulfilment of this desire. Nevertheless, there was a manifest wish to create an all-powerful central government, a fact which is forcibly brought out in the first draft of the British North America Bill in which the heads of the provincial governments are styled as simply "superintendents."

The task of reconciling the different interests and viewpoints was not an easy one. Sharp divergencies of opinion were revealed when the subject of the composition of the Senate came up for consideration. One party favored a nominated Upper House: another wished an elected Senate and the tenacity which each side manifested in clinging to its own pet theory nearly led to the breaking up of the conference. Long and bitter discussions were held relative to the proposed financial arrangements under which the Confederation scheme was to be launched and it was only through the exercise of tact and forbearance on the part of the original sponsors of the project which prevented total shipwreck of the plan. After 17 days of discussion the conference finally adopted 72 resolutions, which, subsequently, formed the basis of the Act of Confederation. Prince Edward Island did not then accept the plan. Newfoundland definitely rejected it and still remains a separate dominion.

Equally onerous was the duty of securing the acceptance of the plan by the various legislatures. New Brunswick held two general elections before endorsing the proposals and there was considerable opposition in Quebec and Nova Scotia. United Canada finally gave official approval of the plan at the first sitting of the Legislature of the newly elected Houses of Parliament in Ottawa in 1866.

The remaining steps in the negotiations were conducted in the Old Country. On November 7, 1866, delegates representing Canada set out for London where they were joined by the representatives from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Under the chairmanship of Macdonald, the delegates sat in the Westminster Palace hotel—in a room which is now marked by a tablet recording the historic fact—and drafted the bill of union. Following the precedent of Charlottetown and Quebec, discussions were held in secret. The resolutions of the Quebec conference were taken up anew, and amended in certain clauses which gave more favorable financial terms to the Maritime provinces. From these amended resolutions was drawn up the first rough draft of the bill that was necessary to put them into effect. This draft was then submitted to the law officers of the Crown, who framed successive measures expressive of the wishes of the conference until the project reached its final form and was brought before the Imperial Parliament.

Only in one instance did the authorities in London exercise what was at that time their constitutional right to amend the conclusions of the conference. According to a record left by Macdonald, a clause in the Quebec resolutions provided that Her Majesty should be asked to accept the designation of "Kingdom of Canada" for the new Confederation. This, however, was disallowed by the Home Government on the not very cogent grounds that the term might wound the susceptibilities of the United States and Macdonald and his colleagues reluctantly gave way. Only the merest fragments of the deliberations have come down to us so that, unfortunately, there is no exact record to substantiate the picturesque tradition that the title "Dominion" was accepted on the suggestion of Sir Leonard Tilley of New Brunswick who, in reading of the Old Testament in his room before leaving for the meeting, encountered the word in the eighth verse of the 72nd Psalm: "He shall have dominion from sea to sea and from river to the ends of the earth." Whether the tradition be true or not, the selection of this title was an inspiration and has for Canada, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the great St. Lawrence river system to the North Pole, an appropriateness that belongs to no other country.

This upshot of the London Conference was the framing of the British North America Act which was passed by the Imperial Parliament almost without alteration and received the Royal assent on March 29, 1867.

Whether the tradition be true or not, the selection of this title was an inspiration and has for Canada, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the great St. Lawrence river system to the North Pole an appropriateness that belongs to no other country.

The upshot of the London conference was the framing of the British North America Act which was passed by the Imperial Parliament almost without alteration and received the Royal assent on March 29, 1867.

Few of the lords had ever set foot in Canada, the majority of them had only the most vague ideas of the country and its conditions: but even they realized something of the magnitude of the task they were accomplishing. The peer who had charge of the bill in the Upper House closed his introductory speech with these words, "We are laying to-day the foundations of a great state which may one day overshadow ourselves."

The British North America Act, the written constitution of Canada, came into operation on the first of July and the task of forming the first government of the new Dominion was entrusted by the Governor-General, Lord Monck, to the man whose consumate skill and genius for conciliation had rendered him the chief architect of Confederation, Sir John A. Macdonald, the poor Scottish immigrant boy, who lived to become the chief magistrate of his adopted country.

The Canada of Confederation year comprised only the regions between Cape Breton and the western shores of Lake Superior. Between the Great Lakes and the Rockies stretched the vast territory of Prince Rupert's land, the home of the hunter and the Indian, still ruled by the Hudson Bay Company, and beyond the mountains lay the isolated but growing province of British Columbia, blessed with the finest climate in North America.

Canadians had long held the belief that this empire of the West was really their natural heritage and this sentiment was gratified by the transfer by Great Britain of the enormous territories of the Hudson's Bay Company which became effective on July 15, 1870, and Manitoba was admitted as the fifth province of the Dominion. One year later, British Columbia entered Confederation under an agreement stipulating for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Prince Edward Island joined its fortunes with those of the Dominion on July 1, 1873. Canada's area was further vastly increased by an Imperial Order in Council which annexed to the Dominion all British possessions in North America, except Newfoundland and its adjacent islands, and extended it far northward into the Arctic Circle.

Thus the physical union of the far-flung British domains in North America was consummated. Succeeding years have brought about a vast increase in material prosperity and the complete spiritual fusion of all the divergent elements into one indissoluble whole appears to be only a matter of time. To-day, the tramp of the oncoming legions which fell upon the prophetic ear of Sir John A. Macdonald are to be heard appreciably nearer. At Confederation, Canada's population was 3,371,594; now it is in the neighborhood of 10,000,000, and as it is confidently predicted that the population of the Dominion will reach the 25,000,000 mark before the year 1950, it is not beyond the bounds of possibility that the Dominion will one day in the not very far distant future become the centre of gravity of the British Empire and the greatest single influence in the affairs of the world.

Surely D'Arcy McGee, the generous Irish rebel who became the martyr and seer of a British Canada, spoke from the true second sight of the Gaelic bard when he drew that wonderful picture which had unfolded itself before his mind's eye: "I see in the not remote future one great nationality bound, like the shield of Achilles, by the blue rim of ocean."

Canada to-day honors her Fathers of Confederation. "They builded better than they knew," and they live for all time in the hearts of their countrymen.

Royalty and Canada

Members of the British Royal Family have made more visits to Canada than many people probably imagine. The first recorded visit, by the Duke of Clarence, goes back to 1787, when George III. was on the throne. The Duke of Clarence was captain of the frigate 'Pegasus,' and is chiefly remembered because he was with Nelson in the West Indies, and acted as best man at his wedding. The Duke of Kent, father of Queen Victoria, arrived at Quebec in 1791 from Gibraltar, as commanding officer of the 7th Royal Fusiliers. He made his home at Quebec for three years, occupying what was known as Kent Lodge, near Montmorency Falls. He returned in 1799 as commander-in-chief of the troops at Halifax. There is a fine bit of description, in one of Haliburton's novels, of his home near Halifax, also known as Kent Lodge.

The Prince of Wales, afterwards Edward VII., visited Canada in 1860, and laid the corner-stone of the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa. His brother Prince Alfred came here in 1861, as a naval officer. In 1890 the Duke of Connaught travelled across the Dominion on his way home from a visit to Japan. He returned to Canada as Governor General in 1911 and remained until 1916. Princess Louise, daughter of Queen Victoria, spent the years 1878 to 1883 in Canada as wife of the Governor General, the Marquis of Lorne, afterwards Duke of Argyll. The Duke of Cornwall and York (afterwards George V.) and his wife visited Canada in 1901. The present Prince of Wales made his first visit to Canada in 1919, and has returned more than once. He has shown his interest in the country by buying a ranch in Alberta, where he can occasionally escape from the cares of state.

Some of us who are not as young as we used to be can remember the delightful hospitality of Lord Lorne and the Princess Louise at Rideau Hall in Ottawa, and the simplicity of their home life. The Princess was always a warm patron of art in Canada, and was herself an artist of no mean ability. Her husband will be remembered, among many other memorable acts, by the fact that he was chiefly instrumental in founding the Royal Society of Canada. His public life probably overshadowed his ability as a poet, but it will not be forgotten that he wrote that splendid hym beginning:

"Unto the hills aound do I lift up
My longing eyes."

The influence of such members of the British Royal Family as the Princess Louise, the Duke of Connaught and the Prince of Wales upon public and private life in Canada, although always exerted unobtrusively and with characteristic tact, must be regarded as a very real factor in the development of the country. All three of them have known how to win not only the respect but the affection of the Canadian people. That thought was very happily expressed by Lord Byng in London when, turning to the Prince of Wales, he said: "I know you hate eulogy and I am not going to indulge in it, but I should like to say this: 'We respect you, sir, for your position, but, damme, sir, we love you for yourself.'"

Peterborough Had Big Forest Resources

Lumbering as an industry came to Peterborough County on its journey Westward. The exploitation of the Canadian forest began in the Lower St. Lawrence area and the Maritimes; extended to the Ottawa; moved toward the Great Lakes, reaching Peterborough on the way; thence to Georgian Bay, Rainy River and the spruce regons north of the Prairies; and westward to, British Columbia. In Peterborough as elsewhere the forest was the central fact of existence to the pioneer, furnishing him with his house and fuel, but bitterly opposing his plough.

At Confederation, the lumber industry had fairly found its feet in Peterborough. Operations in the woods were then primitive as compared with those carried on by our two leading firms of today, the Peterborough and the Alfred McDonald lumber companies. Most of the work consisted in the felling of pine and the squaring of timber by hand in the woods ;the timbers them being hauled by oxen or horses to the nearest stream, assembled in rafts and floated down to Peterborough, thence by the Otonabee to Rice Lake, then into the Trent River to Trenton. At Trenton, the logs were made into rafts, which were floated down to Quebec and the logs were loaded in vessels for shipment to the United Kingdom.

Limits Near City

Sixty years ago, the timber limits were somewhat nearer the city, and the lumberman with his mackinaw, breeches, long stockings and mocassins or high rubbers was a familiar sight in the streets of the small town on the banks of the Otonabee. The principal companies then engaged in the business of cutting timber were Dickson's (the germ of the present Peterborough Lumber Company), Hazlitt's, Hilliard's, Irwin's, Dennistoun's, McDougall and Ludgate's, Rathburn's, and A. H. Campbell's. The company of which George Hilliard, later M.P., was head, cut timber where the Auburn Mills now stand.

Pioneer Lumbering

In the early days, the lumbering industry was conspicuous for the extent of its operations and the value of its product. In and around the town were many mills of what, was in that day, considered large capacity. The Nassau Mill owned by Charles Perry, was one of the finest in the province, and on one occasion cut over 90,000 feet of lumber in twelve hours. The management issued a challenge to cut lumber against any other mill in the province; a challenge which was never taken up. Scattered over the district were about forty other mills—a fact which affords some idea of the importance of the lumber business to the town and territory surrounding.

Lumber Companies

Many names prominent in the lumbering industry were associated with places around the cit. Strickland, with Lakefield; Irwin, with Nassau; W. A. Scott, on the Massassawga, and still further off, Gilmourat Trenton. Millions of feet of lumber were carted through the city streets, and many were the complaints of the adverse effects of the heavy loads drawn over the not too-scientifically constructed streets of the growing town.

White pine was the product of our forests and the bulk of the exported material went to Great Britain then as now our best customer. An old lumberman, who seems to think the present age has degenerated from the standard of its predecessor declares that the lumbermen of Peterborough at Confederation were on the whole hard-working men, eager to do their best for an employer. Twelve dollars a month was considered a good wage. In those days, Peterborough had but one policeman, says the veteran, and no augmentation of strength was needed even when two or three hundred lumberjacks descended on the town, manifesting eagerness to get rid of their winter's wages after spending the season away from society in the woods. The Examiner's informant is responsible for the statement that the lumbermen of this district were chiefly French Canadians or Old Countrymen. The nearest virgin forest was north of Buckhorn, Stoney Lake district was then more heavily wooded than now. In Burleigh, Cavendish, Anstruther and Methuen were located the large limits of the Dickson Company, the successors of which, the Peterborough Lumber Company, still having holdings in these townships. The Peterborough Lumber Company now employs about 150 men in its operations in the bush.

Big Deal.

An important deal in the history of lumbering in this district took place in 1906, when the Dickson Company sold out their limits in the Townships of Cavendish and Anstruther to a large syndicate—the biggest deal till then recorded in Peterborough. The price at which the limits changed hands was $600,000. The new owners were connected with a large number of concerns in the United States and a large export busine was inaugurated.

Few F.-D.

One outstanding fe of the history of lumbering in district has been its comparative freedom from destructive forest fires. The lofty pines of the virgin forest, many of them over eighty feet in height, were spared the ignoble fate of falling victims to the preventible holocaust, and were cut down to form masts for the ships of the rapidly growing British mercantile marine. The timber kings were stripped of all bark, and were loaded on bob sleighs drawn by several teams for shipment across the Atlantic.

Three Companies.

The march of time has reduced the number of lumber companies in Peterborough to three—the Peterborough Lumber Company which has had a continuous existence of over 100 years, the Alfred McDonald Lumber Company, over 75 years in existence, and the Purdy Lumber Company, a more recent concern.

Hard Life.

The life of the lumberman, away from home and civilization for months at a stretch, has never at any time been one of sybarite luxury, but the lot of the woodman to-day is infinitely more comfortable than was that of his predecessor of Confederation times. Shanties were then built with saw and axe, and if the snow came in at times through shinks the hardy occupant blessed himself that matters were no worse. Spruce brush was considered quite the thing as a substitute for mattresses. In lieu of the present well laden tables, containing all the most tasty viands and pastries, the fare consisted usually of pork and beans and hard boiled tea. But the life was healthful, then as now; the lumberman, like the sailor, went the whole hog whe nthe time came to cease work and to start play, and the boys from Lower Canada with their quaint French songs, and their English-speaking fellow woodsmen formed a picturesque element in the pioneer town, which is somewhat the loser by their disappearanc

W. CARTER.

William Carter was born in Yorkshire, England, has lived here since 1855. Employed for many years as a cook in the lumber camps of the neighborhood, he is well acquainted with Peterborough's lumber story. He worked for the Dickson Company in Chandos township in the days when the appearance of frightened deer pursued through the woods by hungry wolves was a sight which frequently greeted the teamster and choper in the bush.

One of his most interesting recollections describes the baking of bread in the shanties. A pit two feet deep was du gand hot ashes were thrown into it and banked around the side of the bake kettle. The rest of the pit was filled with cold ashes. If any steam was seen coming out through the banking, the exit was blocked. The bread made this way, says Mr. Carter, was the best ever eaten.

T. W. ROBINSON.

T. W. Robinson, 525 Weller street, is one of the few inhabitants of Peterborough who were in Ottawa on July 1, 1867. He remembers the event very clearly, and graphically described to the Examiner a sail which he enjoyed on the Ottawa river on Canada's first Dominion day. One of the things that struck him forcibly was the large number of soldiers in uniform to be seen then in the country's capital.

Mr. Robinson was born 85 years ago on the middle line of Smith. Fairview United church stands on a site which was part of the farm of Mr. Robinson's childhood home, and was granted to the congregation by his father.

Forty years ago he opened a store on Juniper Island, Stoney Lake. He retired from business 18 years ago.

It is worthy of remark that on looking bac kover his past years, the events of his long and honorable career, that give him most satisfaction are his associations with George street United church. He held offices in the congregation, was superintendent of the Sunday school and was in harness until forced to retire through failure of his physical health.

Mr. Robinson has been totally blind for several years.

TRENT RIVER MAN RECALLS CONFEDERATION

John Waters Was Born in Percy Township 82 Years Ago.

MARRIED IN 1868

Remembers When Oxen Were Travelling Link With Warkworth.

TRENT RIVER, June 29.—The oldest resident living now at Trent River who can recall the times around this district at Confederation, before and after, is John Waters, who was born in Percy township, the part known as "Armour's Hill," some 82 years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Waters, if spared ,wil celebrate the 60th anniversary of their marriage January 12th, 1928. Long before Confederation, Mr. Waters remembers when there was only three small shanties occupied here. There was no road between Trent River and Havelock at that time. The only way of travelling was by oxen and jumper or cart and between Trent River and Warkworth there was only a blazed trail through the dense woods. Some farmers cut the timber and made a little clearance when settled and they would carry part of a bag of wheat on their back as far as Warkworth (19 miles) to a stone mill to get it ground. There wasn't a horse and buggy to be found anywhere, just oxen. Farmers tilled the land with a V drag and oxen and ploughed with a wooded mold board. The farmers made a living by raising wheat (that was the common crop). They had to cut down trees and clear the land and put in the crop with oxen. Often while they were chopping at the butt of a tree the deer would be browsing at the tops. The deer were so plentiful that they would get into the garden and destroy a patch of peas; they preferred cabbage. Indians camped and made baskets for sale fished, hunted and trapped. They only received 10 cents for a muskrat pelt, as not so many fur coats were worn at that time. There were no apples and people had to go to Brighton for them, with ox-cart, one day to go and one day to return. Mr. Waters recollects when he helped his mother to carry butter to Hastings (known then as Crook's Rapids), and trade one pound of butter for one pound of sugar, 12½ cents a pound. Eggs were from 5 to 7 cents a dozen. Meat 10 cents a pound. The farmers did not buy bread ,but all made their own. There were no cook stoves, all fireplaces, and people used a frying pan with a long handle and jack a foot square, with a post through the jack which had notches. They made their bread in bake kettles hung in the coals. The first store was opened by a Mr. Thompson on the place where Mr. Water's house stands now. Before this they had to trade at Hastings. Then a Mr. Waller kept store and after ten or fifteen years sold out to Henry Pollock, where his son Frank runs the store and post office at the present time. There was no church and the settlers used to meet on Sunday at Polmont (3 miles south of here) in a log schoool house. The preacher travelled on horse back and often had services at the houses. The men went to church in summer in shirt sleeves and full cloth trousers, the women in calico dresses and sun bonnets. The preachers were local men not college bred. They supported the preacher (after he was settled in a little log house) by donations of pork, flour, tea .He had no salary. The stewards would go around and collect. The preacher generally remained two or three years. There were no large boats on this river only Indians with canoes. They sent square timbers, put in cribs and taken by water to Quebec. There were no saw logs at that time. At Quebec they were made into masts for vessels. Mr. Waters has many a time lifted the large square timbers in the water. A Mr. Wannamaker kept the first hotel, succeeded by George Tommy Cummings. The hotel was afterwards taken over by George Brown, and it is known as the Sedgwick House.

The first church was erected at Kilbank's Corners, and this church was taken down and the brick brought to Trent River to erect the present edifice which was then known as the Episcopal Methodist church. Trent River was known at that time as the "Narrows," the river being narrow at this point. The first post office was 45 years ago, kept by Mrs. Lee in a little log house known now as the David Davidson property on Browning avenue. Mr. Lee owned most of the land and sold it off for town lots.

Mr. Waters and wife have resided here 41 years. Mrs. Waters has in her possession to-day an old spinning wheel and reel and loom. They often had 100 pounds of rolls of wool and her mother would weave yarn up into cloth and color it. Mrs. Waters also has an old-fashioned potato strainer with a long handle.

Mr. and Mrs. Waters are enjoying good health at the present time, although Mr. Waters has given up hard work some years ago, but is always active He held the positin of bridge tender for years.

PETERBOROUGH PEOPLE HERE AT CONFEDERATION

MR. AND MRS. JAS. W. LILLICO.

Mr. and Mrs. James W. Lillico live at 579 Homewood avenue, and are well deserving of particular mention in this number, as they are among the youngest citizens of Peterborough, in spite of their age. There are only a few months between them, Mr. Lillico having been born in 1855, on December 15th, and Mrs. Lillico on April 23rd of 1860. Both came of real pioneer stock in Canada, Mr. Lillico and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Lillico, having seen their birth in North Monaghan, and his grandfather, Richard Lillico, being one of the first English settlers in the district, the three generations living on the old Lillico homestead in turn until sixteen years ago, when Mr. and Mrs. Lillico came into town. Mrs. Lillico's father, the late Robert Irwin, came from Ireland to Canada at the age of eight years. He was for many years caretaker of the local Post Office.

Katharine Irwin, who taught school in Peterborough, Lakefield and Bobcaygeon before her marriage in 1890 to James Lillico, had for one of her own early teachers the late Mrs. James Kendry in the old North ward school an Aylmer street and the Union School which was in the old building still used as the Central School, on Murray street, and was called the Union School because Catholics and Protestants alike attended it. Here the Lord's Prayer in the morning was followed by a Bible reading.

Where the C. P. R. station now stands was Spalding's Bay, a marshy place. The long discussed cemetery on Hilliard Street was in use then as a burial ground. Where the Bradburn house now stands on Monaghan Road was the first hospital of Peterborough.

Mr. Lillico, who has two brothers living, one in Moose Jaw, and one, Mr. Thomas Lillico, on Stewart street, remembered how his elder sister, Mrs. Robert Colin, who lives three miles out on the highway, was wont to make bread in the early days. She would pack clay over a framework of boughs, and build a fire beneath, to form an oven of heated clay. When it was red hot the cinders would be brushed out and the bread made of flour ground between stones, placed therein, to cook to the sweetness of a nut.

Mr. and Mrs. Lillico farmed until sixteen years ago and had many vicissitudes to meet in that time. Their dwelling collapsed upon them during a violent snowstorm and they built a new house, which was damaged a year later by a lightning-born fire that swept away their barns and crops. But they built anew and commenced again, waiting for twenty years to take a wedding trip, and then having an extended tour of the Western provinces to make up for a long delayed holiday. They remember when wheat sold for $1 and $1.25 a bushel, and when apples were $1 a barrel and farmers would think nothing of delivering half a peck for ten cents. Eggs were eight and ten cents a dozen and butter fourteen cents a pound. They recall the customer who said it was like eating money to consume butter at that price. Men working in the shanties of those days would get $1.50 a day and board for themselves and their team. Pigs sold for five cents a pound, dressed, on the market, and live pigs were $5 a pair. Mr. Lillico can remember his sister, this same Mrs. Colin, shearing the sheep, washing the wool, and then, after the carding mill was through with it, spinning it and weaving it into one of the black and red checked dresses that were popular for feminine wear in those days.

MRS. SARAH J. STUBBS.

At the age of seventy-four years, Sarah J. Stubbs keeps house at 661 Water street, and is as active and alert in her appearance as many a woman of half her age. Mrs. Stubbs, whose husband, James Stubbs, died ten years ago, was born on Bethune street in 1853, and was married on Christmas Day, 1873. Her parents were the late Mr. and Mrs. James Donald, and their daughter Sarah was one of the teachers of the district. Before her marriage she taught school for three years at Buckhorn, when the late J. R. Stratton was a school inspector and the three Rs, with a smattering of spelling and geography for good measure, formed the mental fare dished out to the scholars.

When Mrs. Stubbs was a small girl, what is now Central Park was a cemetery, and the land that now occupies a space in front of her Water street home was a water filled hollow. The bridge which spanned the stream near her home collapsed on a windy day in Confederation year and an unfortunate foot passenger named Jim Clegg was drowned.

Mrs. Stubbs who was fourteen years old at the time, remembers little of the great day itself, beyond the fact that it was a very hot season of the year. At the time that the historic ox was roasted whole on the market place, she wished to go down to view the proceedings, but her mother would not allow this, and, as those were the days when the parents' wishes were law, she did not attend the festivities.

Those were times of hotels and taverns. Where the Examiner now stands, up to Mason's store, was the old Simpson Hotel and MacFarlane's Hotel occupied the premises of the present Bank of Toronto building. Fair day took place every three months then and much fighting and quarrelling would ensue, particularly across the river in Ashburnham. There was one policeman to keep the peace in all parts of the town.

Mrs. Stubbs remembers the "Saved Army" that had quarters in the old market hall, the first Methodist Church which was opposite the present George Street Church and the old choir at St. Paul's Church, composed of two men and four women, with the precentor, Mr. McGalletay, who frowned on the idea of an organ, and said, "I would as soon have the devil in my church as an organ."

Mrs. Stubbs remembers well how handsome the Prince of Wales looked in his grey suit and hat, and his resemblance to the present Prince, "only he was taller." And she remembers when crinoline was worn and the roughnecks standing outside of Sam Jay's saloon on Dublin street would mock the ladies going by, in their hooped skirts. Dresses were made with seven widths to skirts, "because mothers tried to cover up their children then."

Mrs. Stubbs took a trip to the Old Country fifteen years ago, but was very glad to get back again, and hear the little bell on the Canadian trains that contrasted so favorably in her mind with the English train whistle. She agreed with her husband when he said of the Old World: "Those people are fifty years behind the times."

Mrs. Stubbs has one brother and one sister living in Toronto, but her three children are dead and her husband died ten years ago. She is very enthusiastic about this celebration and its observance, because she feels she will not see another one of its magnitude.

MRS. ISABELLA WALLACE

Mrs. Isabella Wallace of 719 George street is one of the older residents of the city who was living in this district when the Fathers of Confederation signed the historic document which united in one the various provinces of the great Dominion of Canada. She was born in North Monaghan on May the 24th in 1854, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Redhead, being children of one of the first settlers from England in this district. Pioneer stock in the Dominion thus stretches behind Mrs. Wallace for three generations.

When she was nineteen years of age Isabella Redhead married John Wallace and came to live in Peterborough, where the settlement in that year of grace, 1873, offered many striking comparisons to modern conditions.

Taverns flourished on many corners in those days, although Mrs. Wallace says that drinking was not as general as it became later, and huge jars of liquor were the order of refreshment at the threshing bees and similiar gatherings which formed the entertainment of the communities. Horses and buggies were the only means of travel. Opposite Mrs. Wallace's present abode on George street, where Central Park now occupies the landscape, was an old wooden drill shed, and there the annual Fair was held, with the "merry-go-round" for the children located on the present Y. M. C. A. grounds.

A popular amusement of those days was the walking matches in what is now Central Park, where the innovation was commenced by the late Mark Spenceley, engaging in a walking match from Bridgenorth. Ladies took part in these matches and used to plod around the ten mile course for prizes of ten and five dollars. Their husbands, according to the reminiscences of Mrs. Wallace, were in attendance with oranges for the refreshment of the tired walkers.

There were the times when the farmers carried their grain into Port Hope from Monaghan, as her father did, blazing a trail on the tree trunks to guide him home again. Men in the field would often be summoned by the sound of a horn which warned them of Indians trying to get into the house, kept always close barred and locked by the womanfolk inside.

Men worked for 75 cents or a dollar a day then, and hired girls received from $2 to $4 a month. There were no ready-to-wear stores like in the present, and clothes were made at home, or by an itinerant tailor. Factory cotton was 25 cents a yard and tea a dollar a pound. A good dress would serve its owner for best wear for years.

Mrs. Wallace went to Sunday School in the basement of St. Paul's Church in those days, and warmed herself at the old box stove in the corner.

Seven children were born to her and her husband, who died fourteen years ago. There are six children living, James, of Oshawa and Peter of London street, Mrs. W. Hopkins of North Monaghan, Mrs. Frank Gilbank and Mrs. Wm. Watson of Orono and Miss Lily, at home. Another daughter, Mrs. Peter Campbell, died in Winnipeg three years ago.

JAMES A. BELL

James A. Bell, of the 5th Concession of Smith, boasts that he took part in the celebration of the first Dominion Day in Peterborough. He was born on the 4th Concession of Smith in 1853.

MRS. GILES STONE

Mrs. Giles Stone (Anna E. MacDonald), of 618 Bethune Street, remembers the fireworks and the procession and the ringing of bells that marked the first celebration of Canada as a Confederation. It was a big day in Peterborough, and Mrs. Stone will help to mark this Diamond Jubilee Celebration as an equally important occasion.

Born in East City in August, 1850, Mrs. Stone has lived here continuously except for a period when she was teaching school in the county, and another period just after her marriage. She remembers using the old pounds, shillings, and pence currency, and vividly recalls going to Swanston's store with threepence or sixpence, for groceries—and sometimes a penny for candy.

Her father was Daniel MacDonald. Giles Stone was born in Norham in 1851, coming to Warsaw in 1858 and to Burleigh in 1861. He has lived in Peterborough for thirty years.

50 Years DE LAVAL 50 Years

For nearly half a century we have served the dairy industry, and before many years have flown we too can celebrate our Diamond Jubilee.

TO-DAY WE JOIN MOST HEARTILY IN THE CELEBRATION OF

CANADA'S DIAMOND JUBILEE

Commemorating sixty years of Confederation. It represents sixty years of work well done, sixty years of co-operative effort put forth in the making of a nation. If we look back at the Canada of sixty years ago, a land being hewed out of the wilderness by sturdy pioneers, and compare it with the Canada of to-day, spanned by railroads and linked with wires of the telegraph and telephone, filled with a happy, contented and prosperous people, we can realize the changes that have been wrought.

Our wish is that the work so well under way may go on to completion, and when sixty years shall have again rolled around Canada may shine more luminous than ever as the brightest gem in the Empire's crown.

UNCLE DICK'S STORY OF CONFEDERATION

By Norman R. Cole "Uncle Dick" of the Radio

My Dear Boys and Girls of Canada:

Birthdays are such funny things! While we are young we just love them. Then, as we grow older, we try to forget them. Even the young ladies don't like them mentioned at all—when they get past thirty. Yes, Birthdays are funny things. Do you remember YOUR Birthday? Of course you do! Have you ever had a Birthday Party? Sure, you have, and such a jolly time it was too.

Have you ever stopped to think what a variety of Birthdays there really are? Those that we remember chiefly are our own Birthdays, and the Birthdays of those near and dear to us. Father's Birthday. Mother's Birthday. The Birthdays of Sisters and Brothers, of Aunts and Uncles, of friends and playmates. And then, too, we remember the Birthday of the King, and specially rejoice because we have a holiday on that occasion.

Little girls I have known have even had Birthdays for their dollies; and, when I was a wee, small boy, ever so long ago, I used to celebrate my little doggie's Birthday—almost every week! Of course, that was before I really understood that Birthdays, real Birthdays, only come once a year.

While we are young, we look forward to heaps and heaps of Birthdays in the future, but when we have grown old we look back on our Birthdays with regret—for having passed them. Yet all the same, we seldom forget them, for are they not milestones on the way of life?

What excitement there was over our youthful Birthdays! How eagerly we planned them weeks and weeks ahead. How impatiently we inquired for the date and the day, long before it was due. And how excited we grew as we issued invitations to our friends for our new Birthday party. What wonderful decorations were put up for our celebration of the great event. What mysterious comings and goings there were in the old home as the magic date drew nearer and nearer.

What strangely shaped parcels were smuggled in by Father and Mother, and what skilful and laughing perryings there were to our persistent questionings as to just what those parcels contained! But at last the Great Day arrived, and we were up so early in the morning, long before anyone else was awake. Then, what a hunt took place. What screams of surprise! What hugs and kisses given and received. What joy, what rapture, what delight!

Yes, yes, we all remember our Birthdays, and especially the ones of our youth. All too quickly they pass away, and we grow older and more dignified. Yet, somehow, Birthdays never quite lose their charm and magic, for they conjure up so many happy memories, sacred memories, of the days that are gone for ever.

Nevertheless, it is of another kind of Birthday that I want to tell you now. Not a personal Birthday, not a Birthday of anyone I know, but the Confederation Birthday of this beloved Canada of Ours! Yes, the Birthday of the mighty Dominion of Canada. Perhaps you have never thought before that the Dominion had a birthday all its very own, but it has, and it is about that great event that I want to tell you in this Chat. For the Dominion of Canada, this dear Homeland of ours, is celebrating its Sixtieth Birthday on the First of July this very year, and so we call it Canada's Diamond Jubilee of Confederation.

How Canada has grown! How great she has become. How world-renowned, how glorious, how beautiful. Year after year she has become stronger, and richer, and more famous, until, at this, her Diamond Jubilee of Confederation, Canada is known and respected the whole wide world over.

Far, far beyond the borders of her East and Western Gates,
Beyond the tide-washed shores of distant strands,
Has gone the fame and glory of these wide Canadian States,
The work of Providence in good men's hands.

I well remember, a few years ago, showing my Son, now grown tall, a pair of shoes that he used to wear when he was a baby. And as he examined those tiny shoes nestling in the palm of his hand, a sweet smile overspread his features as he turned to me and said,—"Oh, Dad, surely I was never able to wear these!" Methinks the same happy smile would overspread the countenance of those brave, heroic men of vision whom we now call the "Fathers of Confederation" could they but wake and see the present Dominion of Canada that they helped to fashion in those long, long years ago!

Therefore, it is only right and fitting that, in this Diamond Jubilee Year, we, who are their successors and heirs, should pause awhile and recall, out of the dim past, the names and deeds of those ambitious men who made this Canada of Ours possible. What struggles they had to overcome. What privations and difficulties they had to endure. Yet what a glorious structure they reared! What emotions must have stirred their breasts as they labored for the future of their beloved Country—and Ours!

With the unquenchable love of Freedom burning in their hearts, no effort was too great, no sacrifice too much for them to make, so long as they secured for Canada this great blessing of a United, yet free, Dominion stretching from sea to sea. And how wondrously their cherished dreams have come true!

Reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans, embracing the North Magnetic Pole, stretching to the Islands of the Arctic Seas, Canada contains within her boundaries all that is necessary to make this Dominion the happiest and most prosperous and contented Nation on earth. From Arctic fields of ice and cold to rolling prairies bathed in sunshine; from deeply wooded hills to snow-capped mountain ranges; from fruit-laden valleys to fish-teeming rivers; every known natural beauty and richness lies within the borders of this Canada of ours.

We glory in her mountains and her grandly-rushing streams;
And we weave her snowy beauty in the rainbow of our dreams.

Let us take a peep, You and I, into the dim past, into the very beginnings of Canada's greatness. In the year 1497, John Cabot, one of the Merchant Venturers of Bristol, England, in his little vessel named the "Matthew," reached the shores of Cape Breton Island, and hoisted thereon the Royal Standard. From 1534 to 1541 Jacques Cartier, of France, explored the St. Lawrence River as far as Montreal; but it was Samuel de Champlain who was the real founder of Canada, as he was associated with de Monts in establishing Port Royal in 1605, and himself founded Quebec in 1608. In 1663 the Charter of the Hundred Associates, which had been organized by Cardinal Richelieu in 1627 to govern New France, was cancelled, and Canada came under the immediate control and government of the King of France.

This system of government lasted until the end of the French period in 1760. Many French names of fame are associated with this period of Canada's development, among them being Frontenac, Laval, Talon, Maisonneuve, Dollard, La Verendrye, and La Salle, to name only a few of the men who opened up part of what is now the Dominion to the knowledge of the civilized world, and whose names are still kept alive in many notable institutions in Canada.

In the year 1713, by the Treaty of Utrecht, Nova Scotia (Acadia), was surrendered to the British; and the Seven Years War saw the great struggle for the Valley of the St. Lawrence between Wolfe and Montcalm—a struggle which cost both leaders their lives at the Plains of Abraham.

Canada, including Cape Breton Island and what is now known as New Brunswick, became, after the Treaty of Paris in 1763, a British Crown Colony with a government of a purely military character. In 1774 the boundaries of the province of Canada were extended, and the passing of the Quebec Act gave to the French-Canadians the fullest permission to practise their own religion, as well as many other rights. This generous Act brought its own reward in 1775 to the British, when the Americans invaded Canada, for it rallied the French-Canadians to the defence of their country, and, under the able leadership of Sir Guy Carleton—later Lord Dorchester—Canada was saved to the British Empire. In the year 1791 Canada was given a new Constitutional Act, which divided the Canada of that time into two separate provinces—Upper and Lower Canada—now known as Ontario and Quebec.

During the war of 1812-1815, between the United States and Canada, many famous battles were fought on both sides of the boundary, among them being the Battles of Detroit, Niagara, Queenston Heights, Stony Creek and Beaver Dams, Chateauguay and Crysler's Farm, and Plattsburg, as well as several naval engagements on Lake Ontario. Many of Wellington's Peninsular War veterans were sent to Canada by the British Government to assist the Canadians in the defence of their country; and Sir Isaac Brock, at that time the Administrator of Upper Canada, and a gallant general, was ably assisted by Colonel De Salaberry and his brave French-Canadian voltiguers, as well as by the native Indian Chief Tecumseh and his fearless followers.

In the year 1814, Great Britain and the United States came to terms of peace, and from that time onward the population of the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada was steadily increased by many thousands of settlers who came overseas to take up residence in the two provinces; as well as in the Maritime provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island.

Unfortunately, during these years, many misunderstandings occurred between Upper and Lower Canada, and many sad mistakes were made in the attempts to reconcile the two provinces. Even rebellion was resorted to as a means of enforcing a settlement of the troubles; until, in 1839, a Bill to join the Upper and Lower provinces into one United Canada was drawn up. Though this idea had been suggested before, it was never taken seriously until it was suggested by Lord Durham as a remedy for the difficulties of the situation then prevailing.

This Bill, which contained certain provisions for setting up a Responsible Government, passed the British Parliament in 1840, and in 1841 the Act of Union came into force, and the First Parliament of United Canada met at Kingston, Ontario, on June 14, 1841. From this time on conditions gradually improved; new settlements were founded; various communities received a certain measure of local self-government; educational facilities were increased; transportation was improved; the country generally grew and prospered; and the majority of the people worked for harmony and progress.

Let us now turn, for a few moments, to consider the history and conditions of the three Maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Following the discovery of Cape Breton by Cabot, a great many years passed before any appreciable settlement took place in Nova Scotia, and it was not until the foundation of Halifax in 1749, that the British stock took firm root there. Of the present population of nearly 550,000, about 85 per cent are of British descent. At the close of the American Revolutionary War a great number of United Empire Loyalists settled in Nova Scotia, and it is from such sturdy ancestors that three of Canada's most famous sons, Joseph Howe, Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Robert Borden, are descended.

The Island of Cape Breton, which had been ceded to Great Britain in 1763, was, for a while, attached to the government of Nova Scotia. In 1784 it was made a separate province, but in 1820 was reunited to Nova Scotia. From this time on Cape Breton has been identified with its larger sister island for governmental purposes.

New Brunswick's history is largely a parallel of Nova Scotian history, though somewhat less strenuous. First sighted in 1534 by Cartier, it was not until 1604 that the Bay of Fundy coast was carefully explored by Champlain, de Monts and some eighty companions. This province was originally a part of Nova Scotia territory, but in 1784 the district lying North of the Missaguash was formed into New Brunswick, with the Capital at Fredericton. The Port of St. John has since become famous as the national winter steamship terminus of Canada, and has extensive facilities for the loading and unloading of vessels plying across the Atlantic.

Turning now to Prince Edward Island, named after the Father of Queen Victoria, it was originally called "Abegweit," by the Indians, meaning "Resting on the Wave." It has also been called the "Garden of the Gulf." The island lies parallel to the New Brunswick and Nova Scotia coasts, and is the smallest province in the Dominion of Canada. Its authentic history dates back to 1534, when Jacques Cartier, that doughty old sea-rover, landed there under the impression that he had reached the mainland. It was for a while held in tenure by the French, but after the fall of the great fortress of Louisburg, Cape Breton Island, in 1758, British forces took possession. It was at Charlottetown, the Capital of the Island, that the famous Conference of Canadian leaders took place that led to the formation of a Canadian Constitution, thereby earning for itself the unofficial title of "The Cradle of Confederation." Prince Edward Island also has the distinction of being the most thickly populated province in the Dominion. It is also interesting to notice that while Ontario and Quebec were granted Responsible Government at the time of the coming into force of the Act of Union in 1841, it was not until 1848 that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were granted Responsible Government; and Prince Edward Island did not receive it until 1851.

During all these years of such historical interest in Eastern Canada, a very momentous movement was also taking place on the far away Pacific Coast. Near the close of the 16th Century, when England and Spain were deadly rivals for the mastery of the seas, that brave old Admiral, so well known to us all, Francis Drake, in his equally famous ship the "Golden Hind," rounded Cape Horn, at South America, and boldly sailed North to tackle the Spanish ships. Taking them entirely by surprise, he captured treasure ship after treasure ship, and having loaded his own vessel to the rails with spoils, sailed for home. But before doing so, he landed on the coast, somewhere near the present site of San Francisco, and claimed the territory in the name of his Sovereign, calling it "New Albion." On his return to his native land, he received the Order of Knighthood at the hands of his illustrious and grateful monarch—Queen Elizabeth.

For some two hundred years thereafter the curtain fell over the vast lands of the Pacific coast, until, in 1778, the British explorers returned, particularly in the person of Captain James Cook, who was then searching for the "North West Passage." He landed at Nootka, on what is now known as Vancouver Island. And then the race was on in deadly earnest—between the rival countries for this fertile territory. It was only in 1790 that it was finally settled, when Spain gave up all claims to Vancouver Island to the victorious English.

About the year 1792, a daring young Scotchman named Alexander Mackenzie, who was in charge of a fur-trading post on Lake Athabaska, to the north of what is now the province of Saskatchewan, explored to the shores of the Polar Sea. The following year, 1793, he again set out with one white companion and eight Indians, in an attempt to reach the Pacific coast, and to explore the land on the way. For hundreds and hundreds of miles, through tree-clad slopes, down winding, rushing rivers, between lofty canyons, on and on they went. Down the Fraser River, along the Blackwater, over the great Coast Range, and thus to Bella Coola and salt water.

Within an ace of death time and time again, still Mackenzie struggled on, until at last he actually came to the shores of the mighty Pacific, and painted upon a rock there this memorable inscription—"Alexander Mackenzie, from Canada, by land, this 22nd of July, 1793." He was therefore the first white man to cross the Dominion from sea to sea.

On reaching the coast, Mackenzie was told by the natives of a wonderful ship with sails that had recently been seen by some of their number. This vessel was undoubtedly the ship of Captain Vancouver, who was exploring along the coast about that time. By a strange coincidence these two great explorers, one by land and the other by sea, only missed meeting each other by a few days. Of the many remarkable incidents with which the history of Canada teems, surely this is the most remarkable of all.

For his great and glorious exploits Alexander Mackenzie was fittingly Knighted by King George the Third, the following year, and thus was Great Britain's claims to the vast territories of Central and Western Canada made secure for all time. Such are some of the victories which have crowned the magnificence of human endeavor in the history of this great Dominion.

The North-West Trading and Fur Company lost no time in taking advantage of the new fields explored, and many new trading-posts were established. Meanwhile Fort Vancouver had been established in 1825, and Fort Simpson on the mainland in 1834. Victoria, founded by James Douglas in 1843, became the headquarters for the territory west of the Rocky Mountains, and the Hudson's Bay Company constituted its entire government.

In 1849, Vancouver Island was declared a Crown Colony; and in 1858 the British Government declared the Mainland to be a Crown Colony also, under the name of British Columbia. In 1866 the two Colonies were united, and five years later, in 1871, British Columbia entered Confederation and became a part of the great Dominion of Canada.

Before taking up the actual subject of Confederation, it would be well for us to consider for a few moments, the position of that huge tract of territory formerly known as Rupert's Land, now, in part, the province of Manitoba. The story of this region of our Country begins about 1610, with the explorations of Henry Hudson, a distinguished English navigator. In 1609 he explored the Hudson River, and on his last voyage discovered the great Bay and Strait that now bears his name. Early in 1611 his crew mutinied, and cruelly set him and his son, with seven of his crew, adrift in an open boat, upon the bleak and ice-covered waters of Hudson's Bay; and nothing further was ever seen or heard of the intrepid explorer and his unfortunate companions. In 1612, Sir Thomas Button was sent in search of Hudson, and entered the Nelson River—one of the first white men to set foot within the boundaries of the province of Manitoba as we know it to-day.

In the year 1670, the entire territories were granted by Royal Charter of King Charles the Second, at the solicitation of Prince Rupert, to "The Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay." From 1670 until the ceding of Canada to England by the French in 1763, the Hudson's Bay Company was engaged in desperate endeavor to open up the vast territory committed to its charge. To pilot vessels across the great uncharted wastes of the Hudson's Bay and James Bay was full of danger from ice-packs and hidden rocks; to cultivate a friendly trade with savage tribes speaking strange tongues was no easy matter; and to fight against floods, locusts, famine, fire, and the attacks of rival traders, required more than the ordinary amount of courage.

Many brave men continued to explore and map the vast regions round about, and among them must be mentioned the La Verendryes, father and sons, the earliest explorers of the plains of Manitoba, the real discoverers of the Prairie Provinces, and the founders of Fort Rouge, now the site of the busy and prosperous City of Winnipeg, the Capital of the Province, and many other posts.

O, we glory in Our Canada, and proudly do we speak
Of how our brave Ancestors—'mid trials sore—did seek
To plant the Flag of Freedom on this fair and wide Domain,
And make it free—for all to see—on mountain, lake and plain!

In 1821, the Hudson's Bay Company united with its powerful fur-trading rival, the North-West Company, under the name of the Hudson's Bay Company. In the year 1869, Rupert's Land, as Manitoba was then called, was acquired by the Imperial Government from the Hudson's Bay Company, and later transferred to the new Dominion of Canada for the sum of $1,500,000.

Unfortunately this transfer of ownership was much misunderstood by the half-breeds who had made their homes in these territories, and the rebellion of 1870 was the result. Fortunately this was soon put down without very much trouble or bloodshed, and since that time the history of Manitoba has been one of consistent and steady progress, despite occasional set-backs here and there. The boundaries of Manitoba have twice been extended, and now include some 231,926 square miles.

Having reviewed, in a very brief and fragmentary manner, the beginnings, settlement and growth of the various Colonies of early Canada, previous to the coming of Confederation, we are now in a position to understand something of the vastness, the difficulties, and the impenetrable mystery that confronted the "Fathers of Confederation." In their hearts and minds was the vision of a great and united Dominion of Canada, joined by common ties of brotherhood and citizenship, and united in their loyalty to the great British Empire, of which Canada now forms such a distinguished part.

We have now come to the very verge of the subject of the Confederation of Canada, and it is very interesting to note that the idea of the union of the various British American Colonies had been urged as early as 1690. In the years 1755, 1775, 1789, 1808, 1814, and 1822, this matter had been attracting attention, and the report of Lord Durham in 1839 included a suggestion of Confederation. For many years, therefore, the thoughts of long-sighted men had been given to Union of British North American possessions.

To the Maritime Provinces belongs the distinction of having started the Confederation ball rolling. A Conference was called, and met on September the 1st, 1864, at Charlottetown, P.E.I., to consider a union among themselves for mutual advancement, protection, and improved communication with the Motherland. To the late Sir Charles Tupper belongs almost the sole credit of this Conference.

By a strange coincidence, an equally memorable meeting was being held in Quebec at this very time by the leaders of Upper and Lower Canada in an endeavor to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the difficulties that had resulted there by reason of political deadlocks between the various parties. At the suggestion of the then Governor-General, Lord Monck, Alexander Galt who had been urging the Confederation of the Colonies since 1858, had been instrumental in bringing John A. Macdonald and George Brown together to try and settle their differences.

The Quebec meeting having come to learn of the consultation being held in Charlottetown, Mr. Macdonald was quick to see and seize the opportunity for a wider conference. He asked for, and received, permission to send Delegates to the Charlottetown meeting, and the whole history of Canada was changed by the decision to hold a united Conference.

The Canadian Government immediately appointed Delegates to proceed to Charlottetown, among them being John A. Macdonald, George Brown, Alexander Galt, George E. Cartier, Hector Langevin, William Macdougall, and D'Arcy McGee. They were well received, and after an exchange of views, the meeting was adjourned, by mutual consent, to a later date, and the various Delegates separated, in order to report back to their respective governments.

On the morning of October 10, 1864, in the Parliament Buildings at Quebec, the most remarkable and historical meeting ever held in British North America was opened. Delegates from Canada, upper and lower—Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland, assembled together for the first time. "Thus was opened a convention whose deliberations were to have a marked bearing upon the future of British North America." Strange as it may seem to us, nowadays, no record of the proceedings of this historic gathering was ever set down in detail. Even the discussions were held in private, and perhaps it was better so, for many delicate and confidential matters were debated which might have become a subject for public and political controversy had they been published in the newspapers of the time.

Slowly, patiently, loyally, those earnest men built up a new Constitution for a new Dominion, as they sat within sight of the historic Plains of Abraham and the mighty St. Lawrence River, where, for centuries past, the representatives of the Fleur de Lys of France and the Cross of St. George of England had fought in deadly combat for the possession of this great and rich Domain. Little wonder is it that we feel, in this Diamond Jubilee Year, a sense of awe and reverence for those earnest men who assembled in 1864 to lay for us, the enduring foundations of our wide Dominion. Confronted with almost insuperable difficulties, handicapped by widely differing sentiments and many conflicting claims, they strove, with one accord, to embody the greatest good for the greatest number, with justice and freedom for all.

Among the outstanding and conspicuous figures of this historic gathering at Quebec mention must be made of Macdonald, Cartier, Brown, Galt, McGee, Tupper, Tilley, Mowat, and the Chairman, Tache. Yet John A. Macdonald was recognized by everyone to be the ruling genius of Confederation, and never for a moment did he look back, nor lose sight of the great issues involved.

It was inevitable that some mistakes should be made, some matters overlooked, for those men were as human as we are. Yet after some nineteen days of earnest consultation they were in a position to agree upon the momentous conclusions that were embodied in 72 resolutions covering all phases of Federal and Provincial Government. These included such important matters as transportation, taxation, representation, financial awards, judicial laws, means of defence, constitution, education, and a host of other important regulations. These are difficult subjects for young people to understand, I know, and they are equally hard for grown-ups to understand too, yet they were all necessary to the future welfare of Canada and the upbuilding of this vast and spacious Dominion of ours.

At the conclusion of the Conference, on October 28, the Delegates visited a number of cities in Canada to make speeches, and to get acquainted with each other before returning to their own Provinces, where the results of the Quebec meeting were taken up by their respective governments in earnest consideration and discussion. In the Legislature of Canada, the resolutions embodied at Quebec were passed by a large majority. In New Brunswick, the terms of Confederation were only agreed to after a general election had been held for the express purpose. In Nova Scotia, the Quebec resolutions were only passed in the face of great opposition on the part of Joseph Howe, and by the unstinted support and championship of Charles Tupper. Prince Edward Island refused to ratify the agreement entered into by its Delegates, and, for the time being, withheld its support. Newfoundland withdrew entirely from any further part in Confederation, and still remains outside the circle of the great Dominion.

Happily, in 1866, the clouds that had overshadowed the political horizon began to clear, and at the end of the year the Delegates from Upper and Lower Canada, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, met in London, England, on December 4, 1866, and held numerous conferences, finally drafting the revised Quebec Resolutions into a Bill. It is only right and fair to say here, that, during these very important days, the British Government took the keenest interest in the deliberations, and rendered every possible help to the Delegates; at the same time refraining from interfering in the least with the freedom and rights of the Delegates to shape the destiny of their own country.

At last after years of toil and discussion, the final draft was made ready, signed, sealed, and delivered to the British House of Commons, where, on March the 29th, 1867, the Imperial Parliament passed the British North America Act. On July the 1st, 1867, it came into force, and on that date the four Provinces of Upper Canada, Lower Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick became, by Royal Proclamation, The Dominion of Canada, with Ottawa as the Capital, and Confederation an accomplished fact!

Such a huge undertaking as Confederation could hardly be accomplished without some little misunderstandings and unforeseen difficulties. The transfer of the Hudson's Bay Company's territories to the new Dominion, in 1868, indirectly led to the North-West Rebellion of 1870; but on July 15, of the same year, the transfer became effective, and Manitoba, the fifth Province to enter, was admitted to Confederation's family.

Owing to the dissatisfaction which the people of Nova Scotia at first felt for the terms of Confederation, some of her leading statesmen sought to repeal her inclusion in the Union, but eventually better counsels prevailed. On July the 1st, 1873, Prince Edward Island, the smallest of the Colonies of British North America, expressed willingness to join the growing family of the Dominion, and amid great rejoicings "The Garden of the Gulf" was added to the rest of Canada. It is very interesting to note here that only a few months ago, most of the difficulties and disappointments under which the Maritime Provinces have been labouring for years, were finally settled by the awards of the Federal Government, acting on the findings and recommendations of the Duncan Royal Commission.

On July the 20th, 1871, the far-away Pacific Colony of British Columbia agreed to enter Confederation, upon the Federal Government at Ottawa undertaking to link up that Province to the Eastern parts of the Dominion by some means of transportation. At first only a waggon road was contemplated, but this was changed to a railroad, much to the satisfaction of the Pacific Coast people, and eventually the great Canadian Pacific Railway was organized, and, after many unavoidable and unforseen delays, the 3,000-mile iron road was completed, and on June 28, 1886, the first through train from Montreal to Vancouver linked Eastern and Western Canada together.

When, in 1870, the Province of Manitoba was created, the remainder of the vast prairie lands that had been acquired by the Dominion from the Hudson's Bay Company were formed into the North-West Territories, and in 1882 the provisional districts of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Athabaska were established. In 1897, a certain measure of responsible self-government was granted to these districts, and in 1905 the Dominion Government erected out of these four districts the two Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. These two new Provinces officially took their places with the seven older Provinces on September the 1st, 1905, thus making a continuous Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

In 1912, a still further extension of boundaries for Manitoba, Ontario, and Quebec was agreed on, in order that they might conform more closely to the territories of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Canadian Territory North of the 60th Parallel has, for administrative purposes, been formed into the Territories of Yukon, Mackenzie, Keewatin, and Franklin, the latter district extending into and including the Islands of the Arctic Ocean. This is the Canada of the present day; extending from ocean to ocean, even unto the waters of the Polar Sea. Little wonder, then, that we are so fond of, so proud of, so jealous of, this Canada of ours!

This, then, is the story, in brief, of the remarkable conception and birth of our great Dominion of Canada. I have only been able to touch, in passing, the very outlines of this immense subject. It is a story to thrill the mind of the most unimaginative, and to fill with pride the heart of every true citizen of Canada. Dwarfing all other movements of a like nature, overcoming difficulties thought to be impossible, the "Fathers of Confederation," by their patience, courage, constancy, self-sacrifice, and patriotism, achieved results of which we do not even now see the limit.

Beyond the expectations of even the greatest of the Statesman of 1867, Canada has expanded and prospered until, in this year of Grace, 1927, her commerce, her shipping, her manufactures, her discoveries, and the fame of the valour of her Sons, has penetrated to the very ends of the earth. Canada is a name to set the blood tingling in the veins of the most distant peoples, and the beauty and greatness of the Dominion has been acknowledged, even in the ancient haunts of beauty of the Old World.

From every quarter of the Globe, men and women flock to Canada to view the grandeur of the Rocky Mountains and the beauteous Lakes of Banff, Alberta. Every winter the sports of Canada attract the attention and presence of thousands of tourists, and in summertime the hunter and the fisherman find in Canada their greatest joy. Yes, yes, we have a country second to none in the world, and not all the words in the English language can tell the full story of Canada's beauty and Canada's magnificence.

At the time of Confederation, the land area of Canada was something like 338,224 square miles. Since that time, the incoming of other provinces and the results of exploration have increased the area of Canada so extensively that to-day the Dominion covers more than 3,500,000 square miles, figures that very few, if any, of us can really understand or appreciate. And this does not take into account the vast water areas of Canada of which there are some 143,000 square miles!

In the matter of population, the growth of the Dominion is none the less remarkable. To Canada belongs the honor of having taken the first census of modern times, namely, 1665, and at that time, the little colony of New France showed a population of but 3,215 people. One hundred years later this was increased to about 70,000; and the Maritime another 20,000, making a total of some 90,000 inhabitants. The first regular census was taken in 1851 under the new Census Act, and revealed a population of something like 2,384,919; while for the Confederation year of 1867, the estimated population of Canada was 3,327,000.

Since that date the population of the Dominion has gone ahead by leaps and bounds, and to-day it is calculated that the Dominion of Canada contains no less than 9,519,520 men, women and children. This is quite a nice little family to feed and clothe every day, and certainly a family that the celebrated "Fathers of Confederation" would be very proud of could they but wake and see their successors to-day.

And while all these citizens are not millionaires, though many of them are, Canadians as a people are worth the staggering total of 22,195,302,443 dollars, or over 2,500 dollars for each person in Canada. I do hope that you will be careful not to spend your little fortune too quickly!

It would be useless for me to tell you of all the millions and millions of dollars that the trade of Canada amounts to every year, for the figures are too vast and too bewildering for me to think of, let alone make clear to you in this chat. To those of you who love statistics, and thirst after knowledge I would suggest that you obtain a copy of the book, "Sixty Years of Canadian Progress," issued by the Bureau of Statistics, Ottawa. Therein you will find all the figures you need to make clear the astonishing account of Canada's trade—and Canada's progress since Confederation.

As we have already noticed in a previous part of our chat, the matter of transportation was one of the chief problems of Confederation. Even with a country more so vast and wide, it is almost impossible to realize that Canada contains over 40,000 miles of railroad at the present time, to say nothing of the thousands of miles of water-travel on the 1,500 miles of Canals, and the endless journeys possible upon the mighty rivers of the Dominion.

Beside the steam-railroads there are over 2,500 miles of electrified railways, as well as numerous lines upon the Great Lakes. These figures are exclusive of the ever-widening distances that are yearly covered by the thousands of automobiles along the 385,000 miles of roadways of Canada. And even at that, not one half of our country has as yet been adequately equipped with necessary means of transportation. For that reason, among others, the coming of the aeroplane will undoubtedly mean the opening up of vast, and at present inaccessible, tracts of country to the settler, once we get a complete and modern air service and adequately equipped air service into operation throughout the Dominion.

No doubt a great number of young Canadians are wondering what they are going to do for a living—when they grow up. Well, you are certainly going to have a very wide range to choose from, for in Canada there are endless fields for service. There are openings in agriculture, mining, surveying, engineering, fox-farming, transportation, live-stock farming, building, textile industries, manufacturing, newspaper work, literature, teaching, fine arts, pulp and paper industries, forestry, chemistry, exploration, medical science, navigation, Government service, and a host of other professions and industries far too numerous to mention.

Never before in the history of the world was there greater opportunity offered young people, both men and women, to start life in more favorable conditions than in the Canada of the present day. The foundations of this great Dominion were so truly laid that we have but to amplify and continue what was started in the historic year of 1867. To-day, Canada has some of the finest buildings in the world; one of the largest railway bridges ever erected; the greatest nickel and asbestos deposits; the finest Carillon of bells ever cast; the best of apples and the finest of wheat; the choicest poultry and the greatest grain exporting trade in the world.

Canada constitutes one-third of the area of the British Empire, and contains one of the largest gold mines. She has the largest forest resources of the Empire, and the greatest amount of agricultural land open and waiting for the settler, with an assured market for all his products.

Canada's scenic beauties, and her modern cities, are the wonder of every traveller who sees, for the first time, these contrasts—side by side. To be able to step out of an up-to-date hotel—I was almost going to say city—with all the latest electrical conveniences, into view of the wild and rugged beauty of Mount Robson or Mount Edith Cavell, or the shimmering glory of Lake Louise, is an experience possible in no other country on earth,—the latest works of man and the surpassing wonders of Nature—side by side.

Her universities, her educational institutions, her electrical developments, her manufacturing plants, her natural resources and potential wealth, aye, and her Christian homes, place Canada in the forefront of the Nations of the world, and so long as her Citizens—young and old—keep ever in view the memories of the glorious past, and a Vision of a more glorious future, this fair Dominion will grow from strength to strength, until all the world will be compelled to acknowledge the greatness and the pre-eminence of this Nation whose 60th Birthday we keep this happy year, and to pay tribute to those men of courage and foresight whom we are proud to call the "Fathers of Confederation."

And what words of mine are fitting or good enough to tell of the valiant parts that have so heroically been played by the Soldier-Sons of our land in the defence of Canada and the Empire on this continent, and in South Africa. Ten years ago, in France and Belgium during the Great War, the men from the Land of the Maple Leaf stemmed the tide of the world's greatest tyranny and brutality. Who will ever be able to fully chronicle the valorous deeds of that mighty 500,000 men, as the Canadian Army took its place by the side of the veterans of many wars, yet without suffering by the comparison? Nay! They even outshone—yes, and out-fought—the pick of the most perfect war-machine ever devised by man, and, despite the most fiendish devices of the enemy,—"the Canadians held the line—and saved The Day!"

Opportunities? Why, they are just tumbling over each other to be grasped by the strong young hands of Canada's Boys and Girls. You young people have a heritage that no other people on earth can claim—or gainsay. And it is all Yours—to enjoy—to develop—and to hand on unsullied, yet still more glorious—to those who come after you! Think upon the splendid men and women who have gone before you—to show you the way to the very heights of human endeavor. Think of the thousands upon thousands of Canadians, heroic and unselfish, who have blazed a trail—for You—across the mighty reaches of this Dominion of Ours! Look well to the deeds and lives of those hardy Pioneers who opened up the trackless regions of the far West and North; and take heart, O Sons and Daughters of Canada, from their unselfish examples, and strive, with all your great talents and with all your might, to emulate their heroic deeds!

Freedom! bought by conflicts gory,
Passed from Father on to Son,
Come to Us, all wreathed in glory,
Crowned with peace our Sires have won.
Let us then be up and guarding
This, Our Birthright—Liberty!
With high purpose, none retarding,
Great in name and Charity!

PAPER MAKING
A Great Canadian Industry

For more than a century we have been manufacturing paper in Canada, but up to 1860 it was made out of rags, wood pulp being still unknown. The demand for paper outgrew the supply of rags, and in certain woody substances, found, for example, in the aspen and the poplar, the spruce and the fir, and also the basswood, a new raw material was discovered which was practically inexhaustible, and which was to reduce the cost of paper-making and aid in the development of the newspaper. Very large and increasing quantities of wood pulp are now used in the production of newsprint.

The first Canadian paper factory was established at Crooks' Hollow in the Province of Ontario, then known as Upper Canada. It was in the Province of Quebec, at Windsor Mills, that the company of Angus & Logan erected in 1870 the first factory for making pulp and paper out of wood. In 1887, Charles Riordon established at Merritton, Ontario, the first plant for the treatment of wood pulp with sulphite.

The industrial census of 1871, however, makes no mention of any pulp factory, but the census of 1881 takes note of five. There were twenty-four in 1891. To-day we have forty-five, with thirty-four paper factories and thirty-five plants for making both pulp and paper. Pulp is manufactured either mechanically or by various chemical processes.

In this interesting Canadian industry there are three distinct operations: the cutting of the pulpwood, the manufacture of the pulp, and the manufacture of the paper therefrom.

The wood is transported to the pulp mills in different ways: either by floating it down the rivers in cribs containing thousands of logs eight feet or more in length, or by rail, in which case the wood is cut into pieces two or four feet long, and the bark is removed before shipping.

The long logs are cut regularly by operators who float them down to the pulp mill, or to a saw mill where they are cut up and barked to reduce the cost of transportation by rail to their destination.

Our farmers, especially in the newly settled districts, furnish the mills with a considerable quantity of pulpwood. In clearing their land they set aside the wood which they cannot dispose of more profitably in other ways; they cut it up and remove the bark in their spare time, haul to the railway each winter the supply prepared the previous spring, and sell it to the pulp mill agents.

A federal law dating from 1907 forbids almost entirely the export of unmanufactured pulpwood cut upon the Crown lands of any Canadian province, with the exception of Nova Scotia.

The paper produced from the wood pulp is put to many uses, as newsprint, wrapping paper, etc., in sheets or in rolls, tar-paper, wall-paper, cardboard, etc.

In the United States the production of newsprint alone in 1925 amounted to 1,530,318 tons. In Canada during the same year our mills produced 1,529,251 tons, not counting poster paper, wall-paper, and other kinds. This comparison shows that the Canadian production is very nearly equal to that of the United States. During this same year of 1925 the Province of Quebec alone produced almost half the total quantity credited to Canada—more than half the newsprint, more than two-thirds of the wrapping paper and similar papers, more than one-third of the writing paper and the book paper, more than one-fourth of the cardboard. The production of 1925 represents a gross value of $303,078,097.

Statistics for the year 1926 are not yet complete, but it is already certain that the Canadian production of newsprint has exceeded the United States production. Canada has become the greatest producer of newsprint. The immense factories which are under construction in the Province of Quebec, particularly on the Gatineau River and at Lake St. John, will greatly increase Canada's advantage in this line.

In celebrating Canadian confederation it is well to review our progress in all fields of action. Even this rapid glance at the production of wood pulp reveals the truly remarkable expansion of our industry.

Science

It is an almost impossible task to attempt to sketch in a short article the progress of science in Canada since Confederation. The subject is not only a very big one, but it may be studied from a great many variety of angles. There are first of all the two great divisions of science: pure and applied, both equally important. One man or group of men; after years of research, makes an important discovery. What is to be done with it? These or other men get to work and study its possibilities; how can it be applied to industrial or other uses, to increase the health or happiness, comfort or convenience of mankind. The two divisions are interdependent; the discovery is nothing much more than a curiosity until its practical uses have been determined: on the other hand, these practical applications cannot be made until the discovery is available.

Canadians have been by no means backward in the various departments of pure and applied science. Without attempting a long catalogue of names one need only instance such comparatively recent achievements as Dr. Saunders' discovery of Marquis wheat, remembering all that is involved in that momentous discovery; Prof. Banting's discovery of Insulin, and what that means not merely to Canadians but to all mankind in the saving of human lives and human suffering; Dr. McLennan's researches in connection with hellum and what his discoveries meant to the Allies in the Great War.

"Some people," said an eminent Canadian scholar, "admit in a general way the value of abstract science to the world at large, but say that, in a new country like Canada, the opening up of the country to settlement and the development of its natural resources call for all available funds, and that expenditure on abstract science is a species of extravagance which may well be left to older and wealthier countries." His answer was: "It is the new country, developing its resources, that most needs the services of trained scientific men to deal with the new problems that are continually arising in connection with the development, problems of engineering and construction; of conservation of natural resources, of increasing the yield of the lands and the waters."

Although it may be true that in the early years of the country one of our universities was shortsighted enough to decline the services of Huxley and Tyndall, we have long outgrown that kind of provincialism, and both Dominion and Provincial Governments, as well as other interests, have made fairly generous provision for scientific education and research. One need only instance the establishment and growth of such institutions as the Geological Survey of Canada, the Dominion and Provincial Experimental Farms, the Astronomical Observatories, the Biological Board of Canada, the National Museum and the various similar institutions throughout the country, the Geodetic Survey, the National Research Council, the Royal Society of Canada, the Royal Canadian Institute, the scientific departments of our great universities and the technical schools that have been established by the various provincial Boards of Education. In these and many other ways Canada has advanced a long way in the encouragement of scientific teaching and research since 1867.

Architecture

The progress of Architecture in Canada during the last sixty years may be illustrated by the Parliament Buildings in Ottawa. At the time of Confederation it was determined to erect Parliament Buildings of an outstanding character in the new capital City Ottawa and the well-known building which was totally destroyed by fire in 1916 was erected at that time. This building which was of the then prevailing type of architecture known as Victorial Gothic was much admired by the general public for its picturesque ensemble and colorful stonework. The architectural critics, however, were not so lenient and with them it shared with the other works of that period and style their general condemnation of not being worthy of being seriously considered as a work of art.

It is when one comes to examine the building in detail that the progress made in the sixty years becomes evident. The new building is entirely fire-proof. The interior as well as the exterior is very largely built of stone instead of wood. The floors and the walls and in some instances even the ceilings are of stone or marble instead of wood. This in itself adds very greatly to the dignity of the building and puts it in altogether a different class architecturally from its predecessor. Another notable difference is the perfected heating, ventilating and lighting system, telephone and other communicating systems made possibe by electric power which was not available sixty years ago.

A very marked advance considering the period under consideration is that the principal Universities of Canada have added architectural courses to their curriculum. In this period also six of the provinces have established Architectural Associations, and in five of the Provinces membership in the Association is required before one is permitted to practise architecture. These associations in turn have incorporated themselves into the national body of the Royal Architectural Institute of Canada. The influence of the enormous amount of building carried on in the United States during this period has been an immense educational influence in Canada and latterly, architectural students have done considerable studying abroad before starting in to practise at home. The result of all this is that the architectural work in Canada to-day is considered to be on a footing with modern work anywhere. This is exemplified in that the Royal Institute of British Architects conferred their Gold medal upon the late Mr. Frank Darling of Toronto and that the American Institute of Architects, at their exhibition in 1925, awarded Messrs. Sproatt and Ralph of Toronto the first prize for Hart House, Toronto, as a collegiate building. The number of Canadian Architects who have been honored and been made fellows of the Royal Institute of British Architects shows that while the above may be outstanding instances there are quite a number of architects practising in Canada whom the Royal Institute of British Architects consider worthy of their recognition.

Music

Perhaps Canada's advancement in music has not been comparable to her more dramatic advancement in things material; this is both natural and pardonable. In a new country the first claim on a man's labor is the necessity to satisfy his bodily needs and provide himself with the comforts essential to decent living.

The absence of any record of important musical doings during Canada's infancy does not imply that Canadians are not essentially and nationally musical. Art, whether as exemplified by the dancer, the painter, the poet, or the musician, is not the exclusive birthright of certain divinely favored nations or races. The gift of artistic expression has been active in man even long before he adorned the walls of his cave with drawings. Primitive man turned his natural home into an art gallery and all through the history of civilization man has naturally and passionately sought to satisfy his craving to embody in visible and audible forms his love for things and thoughts which are beautiful.

Busy with the endless endeavor to satisfy the clamant needs of existence and the sacrificial service incidental to empire development, Canada has had little time or opportunity to make any serious contribution to the growth and development of musical history. But during this time the burdens of the pioneers were lightened as they plied their task to the accompaniment of song and heightened the pleasure of their hours of rest as they danced the steps taught them by their fathers. The Habitant of Quebec sang the same chansons as his forefathers sang when Canada was under the French regime. Drummond's picture of the French-Canadian boatmen and raftsmen

"Singing some ol chanson
'Bout girl on de reever—too bad dey mus' leave her, but comin' back soon wit' beaucoup du argent"

is but a picture of the provincial life of Quebec as it existed long years ago. In other parts of the country the English-man was simultaneously singing his traditional folk song or the passing favorite of music halls brought out to him by the latest emigrant from his island home while the Scotsman was singing his "Annie Laurie," and the Irishman his "Minstrel Boy." Perhaps a still greater inspiration than all these would be that which came to them when on the Sabbath they sang the majestic hymns of their church to the praise of the common God.

With the coming of the years the vivifying power of music has assumed proportions in Canada which compel attention and admiration. Canada has given to the world one of the greatest singers of all time and some of her sons and daughters hold an honored place among the foremost of living singers. At least two violinists have achieved world-fame and one of the world's best concert-organists is a Canadian. Much might be written about Canada's important musical organizations but it must suffice to state that the highest authorities credit this country with having the finest choral society in existence and an eminent English musician wrote one of our male-voice choirs as being "the best in the world."

In the realm of creative music, while not having produced a composer of immortal gifts, Canada has at least contributed no mean share.

Medicine And Surgery

The art of medicine and surgery in Canada at the time of Confederation, while commensurate with that of other countries, was, in comparison with present-day achievement, somewhat primitive. The etiology of disease was unknown, treatment largely empirical, nursing of the motherly "Sairy Gamp" type and the death rate high.

In the surgical wards of our hospitals bleeding and cupping were still in existence and surgery confined largely to minor operations. Major operations consisted chiefly of amputations, ligature of arteries, removal of tumors, cutting for the stone and for relief of strangulated hernia. Opening of the abdominal cavity was invariably fatal: amputations were usually followed by sepsis and death, and few of those operated upon recovered.

In the year 1877 Pasteur gave to the world his germ theory of disease, which opened up new vistas for the student and tremendous strides were made in every branch of the profession. The application of Lister's antiseptic principles to surgery gave the surgeon opportunity to improve his skill and the art of surgery developed accordingly. These advances in medicine and surgery, coupled with the establishment of training schools for nurses, soon caused a rapid decline in the death rate of our hospitals.

Synchronous with Confederation there came into being the Canadian Medical Association, with the object of unifying the profession and establishing sanitary laws. At the time of its inception, little attention was paid to sanitation; only a few skeleton boards of health were in existence. These were occupied solely in combating epidemics and the words "preventive medicine" were unknown. It was only in 1882 that the first Act to establish a provincial board of health was passed. Now each of the provinces, as well as the Dominion Government, has a department or board of health whose efforts are correlated through a Dominion Council of Health. The growth of hospitals and sanatoria has kept pace with the increasing population.

In the field of medical education Canada excels. Ten medical schools offer every facility to the student and the standard set by these schools is of the highest. The course of study, which at the time of Confederation was three years, has now been extended to six. Illustrious graduates have brought honor to their schools; many of them won high renown in other countries. In respect to her medical men Canada has been indeed fortunate.

In the course of sixty years, the death rate has fallen from 37 per 1,000, with a high peak of 53.47 per 1,000 during the great smallpox epidemic at Montreal in 1885, to 12 per 1,000 in populous districts and 7.5 per 1,000 in the newer provinces.

The epoch-making discovery of insulin for the treatment of diabetes by Dr. F. G. Banting, an outstanding achievement of Canadian medicine, in addition to being a boon to thousands of sufferers the world over, gave a new impetus to research.

Probably in no field of endeavor is more rapid progress being made than in that of medicine and surgery and Canada is keeping well in the van.

Flour made from fish has been found good food for domestic animals.

By protection and proper management the accessible forest land of Canada could be made to produce in perpetuity several times the present annual cut. It will, at best, take many years to bring about this adjustment. On the other hand, if present methods and losses continue the annual cut will have to be reduced.

Peterboro people take the country's prosperity, peacefulness and sound financial position as a matter of course. Sixty years of commercial progress has placed Canada in an enviable place on the world's map, that few really appreciate, because we never faced the adverse conditions quite commonly met with in other countries.

Also, perhaps, Peterboro's share in Canadian advancement is not completely realized or the extent of its home industries entirely understood.

Consideration of these thoughts, involving the idea of loyalty to home industries and home merchants, in the same degree that we are loyal to our broad Dominion, is respectfully suggested.

Glimpses of Peterborough in 1867 From Pages of The Examiner

EXAMINER OF 1867 SKEPTICAL OF SUCCESS OF CONFEDERATION

Recent Political Mismanagement of the Early Sixties.

QUIET CELEBRATION

Militia Prominent That First Dominion Day in Peterborough.

Not one gleaming word of enthusiasm for Confederation brightens any page of the Weekly Examiner during the entire year of 1867. At that close range it seems to have appeared to the editor as a political expedient, a temporary opportunity of clinging to power, rather than the masterstroke of statesmanship which Canadians to-day in fervid eloquence acclaim it. From a sense of citizenship The Examiner hoped for the success of Confederation, but in the spirit of rigid partisanship of the sixties the editor apparently suspected it as an astute manoeuvre for the immediate advantage of the Tory Party.

It should be remembered that in those days a newspaper was usually a political organ. Either Liberal or Conservative, it cleaved to its party and its principles with undeviating and unquestioning loyalty and sent its editors into the arena with ink turned to vitriol.

And these editors not only flourished a devastating pen, but they, too, must have flung their fists about in the safety of the hustings with the flailing and furious gestures of seasoned campaigners, long since freed of self-consciousness,denouncing their nefarious opponents as worse than horse thieves and haranguing the electors to save their country. For we read in the yellowing pages that editors were militant debaters up and down the Peterborough ridings, apart from their armchair onslaughts. Then, mud-slinging was an art, and editors ranked high among the talented artists. They seemed to set the example and the pace in vituperation with an armament of stinging, scathing adjectives and epithets which they employed with such startling effect and utter disregard for the consequences that one fancies the laws of slander and libel must have been suspended until the elections were passed. The editors may have imagined that they were not exemplars of the best campaign manner and ideals, but rather that they were individual adversaries appointed according to historic precedent to settle in single combat the destinies of their respective camps. Some such notion of responsibility must have fired their passion for the license of their verbal affronts is amazing to a reader of this gentle generation.

Fewer Party Organs.

The changes these sixty years have wrought include the decline of party organs, in fact, their extinction in many large communities in Canada, likewise the dethronement of the old dynasty of belligerent editors and their relegation to positions of impersonality, detachment and studied neutrality. Sixty years ago they were incited to offensiveness, and needed little incitement; to-day they are cautioned to inoffensiveness. Their ink pots are sweetened with the honey of irrelevance and inanity instead of being poisoned with wormwood and vitriol.

In that recollection and understanding, the ancient editor of the Weekly Examiner is recognized as the bell-wether of his reliant flock, perhaps the party's voice and also its counsellor confronting new conditions. He was neither prophet nor seer. The problems which Confederation was devised to solve were doubtless plain and clear to him but he could not predict the results even upon the fullest measure of honesty of purpose and performance by the chief actors in that magnificent drama and their destined successors.

For us time has adjusted our perspective of Confederation so that we may retrace its evolution step by step through each extension and consolidation to the final glorious achievement of a country united from sea to sea and trailing off into the sub-Arctic regions where our flag flies as only scattered outposts. But for those who went before us sixty years ago, how could such a vision of greatness and power have been glimpsed by their ungifted fancies. If there were nation builders then, men consciously fashioning this Canada of vast and throbbing life and vigour, they were few among our four million. And of that few how many, think you, lived here in Peterborough?

The editor of the Examiner in 1867 gave to posterity his attitude toward Confederation in the following editorial published in the issue of Thursday, June 13:

The New Dominion.

The first of July is to be a holiday. On that day Canada will be the name of the united provinces and Upper Canada or Canada West will be exchanged for Ontario; Lower Canada or Canada East for Quebec; and British America will assume the form of a nation. If the future is to be more progressive and happy than the past there is then cause for rejoicing, but if the mismanagement of the past is to continue our joy will be of short duration.

Let us, however, raise no difficulties or cherish any misgivings now. It is time enough for trouble when it forces itself upon us. Much of our future weal or woe depends on our exertions; if our new ship be guided wisely, there need be no fear of shipwreck."

Two Political Arenas.

In that cool, non-committal comment the editor damns Confederation with faint hope and praise. He

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE.

WHO IS A. G. GILBERT?

Mr. Editor: As you editors are supposed to know everybody and everything, I have thought fit to put the above query to you, hoping to find answer: if you cannot tell us anything of the animal, perhaps some of your readers could throw a little light on the animalculae.

Is he the creature that was dismissed from the Toronto Bank, because of a certain course of conduct that few required to talk about? Is he the little cur that was a pest round the corners of our streets before he got a place on some of the Montreal papers as a rag-tag gossip hunter? Is he the poor monkey-faced noodle that always acted the part of that species of beast at the 'nigger concert" in Peterborough and other towns? In fine, Mr. Editor, can you tell us, is he the little addle-pated mountebank who left some of our merchants here to meet certain responsibilities that should have been met by another? If it be this same Gilbert, we pity the poor brainless, truthless, dishonorable, dispicable soul, and we pity the readers of The Review who have to read the vile bosh of such a vile scribbler. Let the readers of The Review remember that G. means Gilbert.

Yours truly,

MISS CLUXTON'S SMART WEDDING

Was Social Event of 1867 — The "Elite" There.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS

The social event of Confederation year in Peterborough was the wedding of Claudius Victor Boughton, of Titusville, Penn., U.S.A., to Miss M. J. Cluxton, daughter of Wm Cluxton, on September 11. At least The Examiner devoted half a column to the event, the only wedding so distinguished by the paper that year. The reporter says that "the elite of the town to the number of more than eighty, attended the reception at the home of the bride's father."

Mr. Cluxton seems to have been one of Peterborough's leading citizens, as indicated by the simple fact that at a public meeting to discuss a local railway problem he declined to give his opinion until after the others had spoken, a deference only to be claimed by persons accustomed to it.

At any rate, his daughter's wedding was an exceptionally smart affair, with an eager and curious sidewalk crowd, and all the stock details and features of flowers, luncheon, Mendelssohn, rice, so essential, apparently, to this social rite. And a fair daughter of Peterborough was carried off across the border.

Some other weddings picked at random from the files of 1867 may still have some local interest:

Married—on July 2, 1867, Thomas Bradburn, Esq., merchant, to Linda, eldest daughter of William Helm, Esq., at the home of the bride's father, by the Rev. J. H. Johnson, M.A.

On September 18th, 1867, Richard Hall, to Jane, fifth daughter of Samuel Dickson, Esq., by Rev J. M. Roger.

At Peterborough, July 12, 1867, Robert Sanderson, of Cavan, to Charlotte Fallis, also of Cavan.

At Peterborough, January 1, 1867, by the Rev. J. H. Johnson, M.A., John Graham Weir, of Otonabee, to Lavinia Victoria Tenneson, of Peterborough, late of Madoc, County of Hastings.

April 11th, Wm. W. Milburn, to Louisa A. Scoble, both of Smith, by Rev. J. H. Johnson.

March 6, by the Rev. J. M. Roger, Henderson Nesbitt, to Isabella, second daughter of J. McWilliams, Peterborough.

January 31, at Hampton, Darlington, John Mercer, clothier, Peterborough, to Sarah, fourth daughter of W. Riggs, Hayden.

April 5, at the Wesleyan Parsonage, by Rev. J. H. Johnson, M.A., John McNaughton, to Ann Kingdom.

May 24, Hugh Robertson, to Sophia Wells, all of Peterborough.

January 16, Henry Hutchinson, of Manvers, to Ruth, eldest daughter of Isaac Milburn, Smith.

May 28, at Peterborough, by Rev. O'Kelly, Joseph O'Sullivan, of Seymour, to Bridget Cooney, of Cavan.

THE MARKET STALLS

The occupants of the market stalls in 1867 were:—Jas. Hawden, Noah Laplante, John Laplante, Gues Webber, Ed. Mannell, Chris. Boyd, James Wilson, F. W. Heather. The bidding for the best location carried the fee far above the 1866 figure. Mr. Howden's from $60 to $205 and Mr. N. T. Laplante's from $50 to $195, while John Laplante paid $47 as against $40 in 1866.

R. A. Morrow (Bertie) was secretary of the gymnasium club.

Fire Brigade's Banquet May 24th, 1867, A Reproach to Feeble Epicures To-Day

The Fire Brigade's banquet at Cronn's on the Queen's Birthday, May 24th, 1867, demonstrates by contrast that there is "something new beneath the sun," in that ultra modern social creation, the Rotary luncheon. Sixty years have reduced the old-fashioned banquet to a machine-made monotony of roast beef, canned peas and ice cream. The only new ingredient of the more elaborate dinners is the saxaphone, and fortunately it can't be cooked.

Dieting has reduced the banquet of the 60's to a mere shadow of itself, and a new heresy of conviviality has turned the wine for our toasts into water, except in a moment of recklessness when we fill up the glass with lime juice and charge it with bubbleless soda water.

But new times, new manners. Today we merely eat to live, and refuse to pay the penalty which these Fire Brigade feasts must have exacted from the stoutest of its trenchermen.

At any rate, here is the incredible menu of that banquet in the evening of May 24, 1867:

Roasts.—Beef with Horse Radish; Turkey with Cranberry Sauce; Goose; Chickens; Lamb with Mint Sauce; Loin of Veal.

Boiled.—Leg of Mutton, Ham; Tongue, spiced; Turkey with Oyster Sauce; Chicken; Boneless Turkey.

Vegetables—Potatoes, round and mashed; Turnips; Cabbages; Parsnips; Carrots, Tomatoes, Green Corn, Green Peas, Onions.

Relishes—Cucumbers, Lobster Salad, Cauliflower, Chicken Salad, Cheese.

Pastry—B. Plum Pudding, Mince, Apple and Lemon Pies; Fruit Cake, Pound Cake.

Jellies—Port Wine Jelly, Orange Jelly, Blanc Mange, Charlot Russe.

Experience has taught us that present menu cards are often a snare and delusion, and without casting any reflection on the capability of Mr. Cronn, the caterer to those Firemen, it may be remarked that this banquet, in the days before the Rotarians came to the relief of the groaning board, was superfluous beyond belief.

STAGE COACHES FOR TRAVELERS

From Peterborough to Marmora, Norwood and Bridgenorth.

TRAIN SERVICES

A stage coach, built in Albany, N. Y., was the means of travel between Peterborough and Marmora in 1867. For six months that year Norwood was the eastern terminus, but the gold rush to Hastings County created a demand which J. A. Johnson, proprietor of the stage and a Norwood hotel, promptly met by extending his service. So on June 27 his advertisement read: "From Peterboro to the gold mines. Leave Norwood, Mon., Wed., and Friday 7 a.m. Leave Peterboro same days 2.30 p.m., arriving at Norwood the same evening.

"Leave Norwood for Marmora, Tues., Thurs., and Saturday 7 a.m., leave Marmora at 2 p.m., arriving at Norwood the same evening, calling each way at Havelock and the ore beds."

Stage to Bridgenorth.

Another advertisement sought business for the steamer "Ogemah" between Lindsay, Bobcaygeon, and Bridgenorth. A stage coach between Peterborough and Bridgenorth brought travellers from the upper lake ports, and provided connection with the trains from Peterborough to Port Hope. And at Port Hope the "Corinthian" took on passengers for Rochester.

The mail train left Peterborough at 3.30 p.m., and arrived at Port Hope at 5.50 p.m.; returning, it left Port Hope at 10.10 a.m., reaching Peterborough at 12.35 p.m.

There was also a mixed train from Peterborough at 6.20 a.m., reaching Port Hope at 8.50 a.m. The Grand Trunk advertised a train going east from Port Hope at 9.30 a.m., and the Great Western connected Toronto and Hamilton.

REFERENCES GIVEN BY LOCAL DENTIST

In the scale of the professions, dentistry must have lacked a little class, judging by the taint of commercialism and "puffery" in the following advertisement:

CHEMONG LAKE BRIDGE URGED

Railway to Chemong Lake Another Project of 1867.

FOR LUMBER TRADE

Two projects which agitated public opinion in Peterboro sixty years ago were a railway from Peterboro to Chemong Lake, then known as Mud Lake, and a bridge across the lake to Ennismore. Both were eventually carried out, but only the bridge remains in use today. Sections of the right of way of the railway which served its brief purpose and was abandoned, can still be traced across Smith Township.

As to the floating bridge, George A. Stewart, county engineer, submitted to the Council Council in January, 1867, a report estimating the cost at $3,921.38, and July 25 notice was published by the County of a by-law to raise $10,000 for the construction of the Chemong bridge. It was designed for the benefit of Ennismore residents and indirectly to attract to Peterboro business and traffic that had been going to Lindsay.

Purpose of Railway

With 36,000,000 feet of lumber being cut annually in the district accessible to Chemong Lake, local business and lumber men advocated the construction of the railway to divert this trade from Bobcaygeon and Lindsay. In so far as the records of Confederation year indicate, Peterboro proposed to provide $40,000 to the Cobourg, Peterboro and Marmora Railway for the line to Chemong Lake, Ashburnham agreed to contribute $5,000 (the bylaw carrying by 37 to 0), and the County Council, after first contemplating a $10,000 grant, passed the following resolution as reported October 17: "That it is advisable to elicit an expression of opinion at the next municipal election on the propriety of granting $20,000 to the Cobourg, Peterboro and Marmora Railway and Mining Co. for the extension of their road to Mud Lake and also for deepening it up from Harwood to Ashburnham."

Nov. 21.—A South Ward meeting, presumably arranged by its sponsors to censure Councillor Thos. Leonard for supporting a C. P. and M. Railway by-law, actually declared its confidence in him for voting to refer to the people the proposed grant of $40,000. An amendment condemning his action was defeated. Friends of Mr. Leonard rallied to his aid, and his critics found themselves in the minority.

Wallace Point Bridge

The Town Council gave six months' hoist to a by-law to subscribe stock in the Wallace Point Bridge and Road Company.

A by-law providing for the erection of a town hall in Peterboro was defeated (Nov. 21) by 102 majority. Only in the south ward was the vote favorable, and its poll was 22 to 12.

Edgecumbe Pearce succeeded Walter Sheridan as County Treasurer.

SIR JOSEPH POPE.

"Let us ever continue to hold in honour and remembrance the Fathers of Confederation who, amid difficulties and discouragements innumerable, by the exercise of courage, patience, constancy and perseverance, achieved results which are to-day only in part realized and of which future generations will reap the full fruition."

GOLD RUSH TO MARMORA MINES SENSATION SIXTY YEARS AGO

Eldorado Bloomed Over Night As a Busy Mining Town.

IRON AT BLAIRTON.

Railway Built From Trent River To Carry Ore.

The public sensation in Peterboro during the year of Confederation, according to the news and editorial columns of The Weekly Examiner, was not Confederation, but the discovery of minerals in Hastings and Peterboro Counties.

To the ordinary citizen, the fashioning of the fabric of federation was a rather academic, nebulous and remote concern, when men took time to ponder it. It proved to them an imponderable something that eluded their parochial imagination. But the discovery of gold nearby! Ah! there was elemental and universal appeal in that adventure, a strong man's game through all the ages.

An iron mine operating at Blairton in Belmont Township, gold production near Madoc, and finds of silver, lead and several other minerals in parts of these counties, stirred men to pleasant dreams and action, and affected even the whole community for the editor of The Examiner caught a vision of the town becoming an important mining or ore shipping centre.

Villages sprang up overnight, Blairton was a mushroom growth, as so was Eldorado near Madoc. It is impossible to present the entire picture in this limited space. A few "flash backs" may suggest the prevailing hopes and ambitions that year.

The Richardson mine at Eldorado, a few miles from Madoc, was the most promising of the numerous prospects mentioned in the Spring of 1867.

On April 4 The Examiner said: "There are one hundred buildings at Eldorado where there was only one last fall. There is hotel accommodation (such as it is) for one thousand, and several hundred are there each night."

R. W. Errett was the agent in Peterboro for the Madoc Gold Mining Company.

About May 10th investors who had been refused information as to whether the mine was as rich as it was reouted decided to find out for themselves. One hundred and twenty of them paraded to the property and by a show of force sent their three chosen representatives into the shaft. They examined veins and ore, and one of them named McQuarrie declared to the main body of his associates that the Richardson was the richest mine he had ever seen.

Such was the famous raid in which prominent men of the district apparently violated the law.

January 24th the Reeve of Dysart showed the editor of The Examiner a sample of gold bearing quartz which deeply impressed the editor.

February 28.—An extract from The Madoc Mercury reports a visit to the mining area by a representative of Harper's Weekly, published in the United States. It also estimated that 2,000 persons from Prince Edward County had visited the place that winter, "and 8,000 Chinese coolies are expected."

A veritable gold rush at Peterboro's back door!

Robert Barry of Elzevir Township sold the mining rights to his 300 acres for $25,000, of which $500 was paid forthwith.

April 18.—A troop of 25 Mounted Police left their Belleville quarters for Madoc, where new barracks had been erected for them.

Belmont Iron Works

But there was also mining activity in Peterboro County. The editor on June 27th, 1867, tells of his trip to Blairton as follows:

"In a tour through the Township of Belmont last week, accompanied by P. Pearce, Esq., Reeve of the Township, we happened to pass near the celebrated iron mines of Marmora notoriety; and the chance of seeing the mines was too good to be allowed to pass without visiting them.

"The mountain of iron seemed to possess more than the common magnetic power to take us that way. We found 150 men at work on the face of the mountain, boring, blasting, wheeling, piling and leveling. Huge piles of the ore are ready to be removed as soon the Marmora railway will go into operation which will be opened this day.

"We also passed along the railroad where all was activity. Night and day the men are at work on the road; they had only a few rods to grade and the rails were all laid but about a mile. Mr. Thomas Dumble was just laying the hands, and huge rolls of bills and baskets of silver were scattered around him. That week he had paid nearly $4,000.

"Dr. Beatty, too, was at the works and paid the men over $4,000 of wages, making nearly $9,000 in cash scattered around the Township of Belmont in two days. There is also a little village springing up named Blair, after the principal director of the Marmora Company. There are already 15 houses erected and 20 more are to be erected soon. There

Peterborough Has Made Great Strides In Tourist Traffic in Sixty Years

Viewed purely from a business standpoint, Peterborough's recreational resources are an asset of the first office. They are the lodestone which each year draws thousands of visitors, and they form a varied source of wealth which, though hard to estimate with any degree of accuracy, annually adds a large and rapidly growing item to the income of the district.

Early Visitors.

In the earlier days, the lure of adventure and the hope of fortune in an unknown territory attracted hardy seekers into the lake regions. Later, the construction of our two great railways made rapid transportation in this neighbourhood a possibility to visitors south of the line, and afforded the traveller facility and comfort for all but the last stages of the journey. But it remained for the advance of the automobile to create within the last few years an utterly amazing increase in the volume of Canadian holiday movement and to reveal the potential value of the fields of recreation in this neighbourhood.

Some idea of the extraordinary growth of holiday traffic in Canada may be gained from the records of touring automobiles entering Canada in recent years.

Between 1919 and 1925, the number of cars receiving permits to enter the Dominion for a period of thirty days rose from 59,000 to 481,000, while the number entering for twenty-four hours increased from 177,00 to 1,945,-000. Nearly two and a half million automobiles visited Canada in 1925 for touring purposes, more passenger cars than there are in the whole of Europe.

First Publicity Agent

That the beauties of the Kawartha Lakes were recognized by their original possessors is amply proved by the euphonious title bestowed upon them by the Indian bands. Not for nothing did these poetic spirits of the woods call this string of Nature's jewels — "Bright waters and happy lands." The virgin loveliness of the lakes instantly captivated their first white beholder, Samuel Champlain, the intrepid Frenchman who paddled his way through river and lakes to the heart of the Kawartha district in 1615. In fact, Champlain became the first publicity agent of this district:

"Beautiful lakes and meadows, many islands of various dimensions abounding in deer, and other wild animals, very good fishing spots of excellent fish, and a great variety of very good cleared land which has been abandoned by the Indians on account of their enemies. The trees look as though they had been planted for pleasure." Such was the pen picture of the great-hearted pioneer, whose description none has excelled.

Sixty Years Ago

Sixty years ago, lumbering and associated activities absorbed the energies of the few inhabitants on the shores of the lakes, and such accommodation for visitors as was available was directed with the view of supplying the necessities of lumberjacks. Consequently the occasional stray tourist, attracted by the perennial charm of the lakes and wilderness, or by the abundance of excellent fishing grounds which the lakes then boasted, found on seeking accommodation, that he was limited to the choice of sleeping in a tent or lumberjack's shanties.

Strange to say, proprietors in the district were somewhat slow to envisage the possibilities opened up by the coming of these keen Americans, anxious to get close to Nature, but nevertheless desirous of securing modern comforts at the end of a day on the water or in the woods. Year succeeded year, the numbers of visitors steadily increased, and still no effort was made to bring the hotel accommodation up even approximately to modern standards.

Two New York business men on making their first appearance in the district sought out the most prepossessing lodge to be found, and astounded the proprietor, accustomed to herding as many lumberjacks as possible into the smallest apartment, by asking for individual rooms. When the proprietor, scandalized at such a wasteful request—4 rooms for only 4 people!—got over his astonishment, he abruptly informed his intending guests that he did not let his rooms out that way; and the Yankees departed soon to find a more modern-minded innkeeper. Speedily the inevitable happened, and the "lumberjack" type of proprietor was eliminated to make way for more alert competitors.

Campers and Cottagers.

This failure to meet adequately the requirements of the tourist must have acted as a deterrent to the development of our holiday grounds in the closing quarter of last century. It also explains the fact that a large proportion of the visitors brought their own accommodation in the form of tents, or in later times, built for themselves wooden cottages to which they returned year after year. As the number of such cottagers increased they soon realized the wisdom of acting in concert for the purpose of developing the amenities of their favorite holiday ground; and a Cottagers' Association was formed. This association built the pavilion on Junpier Island. T. W. Robinson, a Peterborough man, still living in honorable ease and retirement, rented sites on Juniper Island and opened a store. Morgan House was built by a Warsaw man of that name at McCracken's Landing. A Lakefield lady, Mrs. Graham, erected a hotel at Viamede. Other hotels sprung up at Mount Julian, Burleigh, and Oak Orchard, and along the other lakes, and the Kawartha Lakes were fairly on the way to becoming regular holiday resorts.

It is a cardinal business principle that a satisfied customer is the best advertisement. From this point of view, Kawartha Lakes have had some wonderful advertising. There are today tourists who come regularly to the lakes, and whose first acquaintance with our summer playground was made over 30 years ago. In other cases, visitors have been induced to come by hearing the enthusiastic praises of friends who had previously succumbed to the lure of Kawartha. After the extension of the Canadian Northern line to Lakefield, the railway companies freely advertised the lakes as a holiday ground. In later years, the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. have given considerable publicity to the attraction of the lakes. The C. N. R. now issues an annual booklet depicting the claims of the Kawartha Lakes upon the attention of the tourist. Then, again, the Peterborough branch of the Chamber of Commerce has proved an invaluable ally by consistently boosting the lakes. The Trent Waterway Development Association has spent over $10,-000 in advertising this district. All these efforts have combined to herald the fame of the lakes beyond the bounds of Canada. To-day the number of tourists is so great that, were it not for the large number who prefer camping or living in private summer cottages, the hotel accommodation would be hopelessly inadequate to meet the demand.

Big Hotel Needed.

Nature has well done her part to make the Kawartha Lakes an earthly Paradise. But it cannot be said that man has seconded Nature to the extent that he might well have done. A modern hotel with about 200 rooms is still the desideratum of all well-wishers of the lakes. Seventeen years ago, the C.P.R. secured options at Oak Orchard and Mount Julian of sites for large hotels, but all hope of this project coming to speedy fruition were dissolved by the outbreak of the Great War. It is believed that the idea has been dropped in the meantime, but it is obvious that the day is not very far distant when this long cherished dream will be realized and the Kawartha Lakes will challenge comparison with any holiday arens on the North American Continent.

WILLIAM CAMPBELL,

(Father of Mrs. Long, Sophia Street).

William Campbell was born in Ireland, and came to Peterborough with his parents and one brother and sister in the year 1869, at the age of ten years. Of a family of five, he is the only one living.

Almost all the houses in those days were built of wood, although there were a few of brick and stone, among the latter being one owned by J. R. Stratton's father and another by Judge Huycke's father.

Ashburnham boasted a few noted buildings in those days, such as Calcutt's brewery and the Swanson Hotel on the corner of Hunter and Driscoll Streets, which was the centre of much activity.

There were a large number of mills running then, including saw mills, grist mills and woollen mills. Where the Quaker Oats building now is there were a number of these small mills. Possibly the largest business establishment on that side of the river was the Mowry Foundry.

Where the new cement bridge now crosses the river was an old wooden one, which had been built in 1848 and was burned on July 3, 1870. On one side of it, extending out into the water, was an old dilapidated pier; a door was cut in the railing and steps extended down to the pier. This was an aid in case of danger. At the end of the bridge, opposite the present Cereal building, stood a hotel owned by a Mr. Ben Reynolds.

Just before reaching the old wooden bridge was a ravine, and to overcome it, and so enable the people to cross over, a pine log was laid, flattened out on top and with a railing attached to the sides by means of holes bored along the sides. From the time of Mr. Campbell's early years improvements were gradually being made. New roads were being built, the forest line was rapidly receding, and houses began to fill in the vacant spaces. The oxen had given place to the horse although many of the country people might be seen coming into town with their yoke of oxen hitched to the ox-cart which was made almost completely of wood with wheels which had been sawn from the circumference of a log, having holes in the centre through which the cross-bar was thrust.

At that time the post office was on Brock Street, where the Windsor Hotel is to-day, and where the post office is now there was a hotel owned by Tate Kavanagh.

Of all those who worked at the building of St. Luke's Church, Mr. Campbell says that he and a Joe Crowe are, to the best of his knowledge, the only ones now living.

Mr. Campbell is very fond of reading and takes much interest especially in history. He thinks Sir John A. Macdonald worthy of praise as are also the other statesmen. The stories of pioneer days and of the pioneers themselves are clipped by him and carefully saved to be used for future reference. He has an interesting picture of Ashburnham as it appeared some sixty years ago, and to compare it with that part of the city as it appears to-day, gives some idea of how conditions have been improved.

MRS. ANNA DUNN.

One of the pioneers of Peterborough, in the person of Mrs. Anna Dunn, now residing at 165 Charlotte Street, can relate some interesting facts about the earliest history of the city.

Mrs. Dunn, who is now almost ninety-three years of age, was born in Brockville on November 16, 1834, and came to Peterborough with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Simons, in the year 1837. Of a family of seven, she is the only survivor.

Mrs. Dunn says: "During all these years I have, with the greatest of interest, watched Peterborough grow from a village of only a few small houses, a general store and post office to a town, and now to the city which we have to-day, with its lovely parks, residences, schools, churches, theatres and public buildings. Only those who have lived in those early days can truly realize how vast indeed this change has been; where once was forest now stands a city.

"It seems but a few years ago that I recall a time when as a girl, in our little cottage, on what is now known as Weller Street, we could sit on the doorstep in the evenings and listen to the music of bagpipes as it would sound from Morrow's Hill, played by Mr. John Hayes (father of John Hayes, contractor), while back in the thickly grown woods, where now stands the lovely convent of Mount St. Joseph, could be heard the howl of the wolverine or the cry of the wild cat. We had no bands in those days to give us music, but the songs of the wild birds and the rushing sound of the waters filled the air. In Jackson Park there was an old quarry and the constant grind of the mill was a familiar sound."

How arduous indeed were the means of travel in those days, when even horses and vehicles, which have now almost completely given place to cars, were scarcely known, and the railway had not yet come into existence.

"I can well remember," said Mrs. Dunn, "my mother having to go to a sick uncle in Lindsay, and as she had to walk, she set out at dawn, her path being guided by the blazes on the trees. After three or four days she returned in an old ox-cart, bringing a great treat for us children—a cake of maple sugar.

"What a wonder it was when the first stage coach came to the village. All the inhabitants were out as soon as the horn was heard to tell us that it was coming. As the only roads were the cow paths, corduroy roads, and an old gravel road in place of the Highway, the occupants of the coach must have had to endure great hardships."

"The only sidewalks were beaten paths and planks were laid in front of the door to keep you out of the mud."

On the blue waters of the Otonabee, in all its wild beauty, the whistle of the boat was an unknown sound, and only the crude rafts of the lumberjacks and the river drivers with their drives of logs were seen. The first steamer that Mrs. Dunn can remember was called "The Shoepack," and it was a very clumsy looking affair.

The brick fire-place was the only means of heating the home, and the huge logs thrown upon it were the trees cut from around the house. The bread was baked in ovens made of brick and stone underneath the ashes and coals. The meat to be roasted in the iron pots in which the foods were cooked hung on a crane above the fire. This crane consisted of a bar across the fireplace from which was suspended a chain with a hook on the end of it. Many a long winter evening was whiled away before the cheerful glow of the fire in telling stories and singing songs. The first wood stove introduced was indeed considered a novelty.

"All we have to do is press the button now when we want a light. How different from my childhood days, when we had to sew or read by the dim light cast by the home-made tallow candle. Few homes boasted even of lamps, and indeed in many the fireplace served the purpose of lighting as well as heating. Every person travelling after dark had to carry a lantern. The people usually hung lanterns outside their doors as a guide to travellers."

Mrs. Dunn's early school training was received in one small room of a little roughcast house next to where now stands the Montgomery Hotel. There, an English lady, a Miss Payne, strove hard and earnestly to lead her pupils along the flowery path of knowledge. Even then kindergarten was in existence as she remembers making paper shades for lamps and candles and building words from small squares of paper on which were written the letters of the alphabet.

The beautiful churches of to-day recall a time when Catholic services were held in a little frame building where now stands the Oriental Hotel, and on the present Cathedral grounds, when the church was being built, the men of the congregation gave their services for two days a week to help in the building. Peter Simon, father of Mrs. Dunn, was the first sexton of the Cathedral.

Hard indeed were those early days when doctors were few and far between. What a vast difference from to-day, when a telephone call can summon the doctor to the bedside of a patient, to the time when many miles of bush had to be traversed to secure medical services. As there were no hospitals, kind neighbors administered to their sick friends.

George Street presents a very different aspect to-day from what it did in those pioneer days, when there were only one or two stores and no sidewalks or electric lights. The first store, a general store, kept by a Mr. Ridley, stood where the Laura Secord candy store now is. The first confectionery store, owned by a Mr. Marshall, did a small business near where now stands the Stenson shoe store. There were no shoemakers then, but shoes were made to order.

As envelopes were scarcely known at that time, a letter was folded and sealed with wax. The quill for writing was in common use. All the water used had to be carried from the creek or river until wells were dug and the pump and draw-wheel put into use.

As Mrs. Dunn has always taken an active part in life she was and is greatly interested in the advancement of what was to her first, a settlement. She can hardly realize the immense change which has taken place when she recalls the little settlement of log buildings, in all its wild beauty and quaint picturesqueness as compared with this thriving city into which it has developed.

Mrs. Dunn has been a subscriber to The Examiner all her life, and still likes to look over the news. She is taking a good deal of interest in this Centennial celebration because, as she says, "I have grown with the city; every epoch in the history of its development seems to be a milestone in my life. And celebrations of to-day recall to my mind the times of hardship and privations which we had to endure and yet were able to overcome and be happy."

Is not as much honor due to these early pioneers for the building of Peterborough as to the statesmen who did so much for Canada?

D. LA PLANTE

D. La Plante, 178 Lansdowne Street, was born in the city in 1856, near the Peter Hamilton Foundry. This gentleman tells of a hotel belonging to a Mr. Casey that used to stand where the C.P.R. Ticket Office on George Street now is, and of the Hilliard Mill near the Auburn Woollen Mills of today.

J. J. HARTLEY.

J. J. Hartley, 234 Antrim Street, was born on June 24, 1847, in a house at the corner of Antrim and Aylmer Streets, just across the street from the house where he now lives. He has spent practically all his life here, and has watched the town and city grow to its present commanding size. And, being a contractor by business he has helped in the most real way to build up the city. He was a member of the City Council for ten years, and on the Board of Education fourteen years.

Mr. Hartley has a splendid memory for facts connected with the early days of Peterborough district, and maintains a keen interest in the affairs of the city and country. He has served the city well in many offices, being for several years chairman of the Board of Health; a member of the City Trust; President of the Trades and Labour Council four years; President of the Liberal Association of West Peterborough for so many years, people have forgotten when he was elected; a director of the Y.M.C.A., and a member of the Little Lake Cemetery Board.

When but a young man he left for the States, locating in Syracuse, N.Y., where he learned the brick and masonry trade, but being a genuine Canadian and thinking that Canada was the land that he ought to help grow, and especially the town of Peterborough as it was then, he threw up a four dollar and a half a day job to return to his home town to work for two dollars a day. For four years he worked as a journeyman and then went into contract work in partnership with the late David Carlyle, who died suddenly after a couple of years. Since that time Mr. Hartley has carried on the contract work for himself.

To numerous to mention are the buildings that he has built for there is hardly a street in the city on which he has not left the mark of prosperity and development. A few of the most important are the Peterborough Hardware block on George Street, the ank of Commerce and adjoining buildings on Water Street, the Stove Works, which later became the Carbon Works; the Cordage Works, now the Nashua Paper plant; the Shovel factory, now the Raybestos; the Crystal block on George Street; the Lock Works; the King George School; Y.M.C.A.; Y. W.C.A.; Isolation Hospital, addition to the Queen Alexandra School; the Sunday School and wings on St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, and a big addition to the Quaker Oats which was burned in the fire.

Some of the important dwellings that are the work of Mr. Hartley's hands are the houses on the corner of London and Water Streets, which is now occupied by Alderman Meyers, and Robert Harstone's, Dr. Carmichael's, Dr. Burnham's, and Dr. Halliday's residences.

The wages paid when Mr. Hartley started contract work were a great deal lower than they are to-day. Then the bricklayer got twenty-five cents an hour for a ten-hour day, and in 1896, when the Y.M.C.A. was built, Peterborough was going through a period of very hard times and the bricklayer was receiving only a dollar and seventy-five cents for a ten-hour day, and the best of labourers, for it took a little better than the ordinary man in Mr. Hartley's work, received a dollar and a dollar and a quarter a day. But times improved and with them the wages paid increased. Material then was

CANADA'S DIAMOND JUBILEE

ON JULY 1ST, 1867, THE FATHERS OF CONFEDERATION LAID THE FOUNDATION OF A MIGHTY NATION.

Were they here to-day they would be amazed at the development of Canada, in every field, since 1867. The Canada of to-day, boasting financial institutions of international renown — whose ships travel with Canadian-made goods to the four corners of the world—a leader in agriculture—in mining—in fisheries, and numerous other claims to distinction bears little resemblance to the Canada of 1867.

CANADA
The World's Bread Basket

Sixty years of Confederation have brought progress far exceeding the hopes of the pioneers who laid the foundations of the Dominion, and the very coping stone of this arch of achievement is "Wheat."

In celebrating the Diamond Jubilee, Canadians should recall the truly marvellous story of wheat. The three prairie provinces produce the greater bulk of the Canadian wheat crop, and almost all of the exportable surplus of about 300,000,000 bushels annually.

It is a story which proves the ability of the Canadian people to conquer the greatest obstacles, to adapt themselves to nature and to unite science with industry.

In 1867 wheat production—and all agricultural production was confined to the central and eastern provinces—was 21,000,000 bushels, barely enough to feed the population of 3,370,000 people. The prairie west, not yet confederated, was a primeval wilderness, a summering land for Indian bands, and a grazing paradise for buffalo.

Twenty years brought the west into Confederation and witnessed the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The faith of Canadians in the western plains was unshaken, but the outside world scoffed at the mad dream that sometime the prairies would yield to the plough. As late as 1881 a responsible British publication said of the prairies that it was as sensible to develop them "as to endeavour to carry out a scheme for the utilization of icebergs. The prairies are frost bound for seven or eight months of the year. Men and cattle are frozen to death in numbers that would astonish and those not killed outright are often maimed for life."

Settlement proceeded slowly. Until the turn of the century Canadians themselves regarded the prairies as a ranching country. Wheat could not be grown successfully because the varieties then in existence required 120 days or more to ripen and the growing season was too short.

Marquis Wheat Appears.

By 1906 wheat production had climbed to 125,000,000 bushels, mostly produced outside of the prairies. In that year Dr. C. G. Saunders, Dominion cerealist concluded experiments he had been carrying on at the Ottawa Experimental Farm with the announcement that he had discovered a new wheat—Marquis—which yielded five bushels more per acre than any other variety and ripened in 110 days.

Clipping ten days off the growing season made the prairies the granary of the world. The era of the wheat farmer had dawned. In 1909, production mounted to 166,000,000 bushels. In 1911, it soared to 230,000,000 bushels, and in 1915 to 393,500,000 bushels. A strip two hundred miles wide across the prairies was turned from a ranching country to a wheat-growing area. In 1923 a record of production—474,000,000 bushels—was established.

However, the end was not yet. Still further northward for a distance of another two hundred miles is a wonderful meadow and lake country. The Canadian agricultural scientists, remembering the achievement of Dr. Saunders, continued their research work. A hardy early ripening wheat was brought from the Himalayas and crossed with the best domestic strains. The result was announced in 1926 by L. H. Newman, who has succeeded Dr. Saunders as Dominion Cerealist. Garnet wheat was started on its way—a wheat equal to Marquis in quality and yield, and ripening in one hundred days.

This was no unconsidered announcement. Garnet had been tested along the Hudson Bay railway and at experimental stations in the northland. It has stood the most exacting tests.

In 1926 the entire stock of Garnet, 12,000 bushels, was distributed to several thousands of farmers. The reports received leave no doubt but that it fulfils all that has been claimed for it.

With the discovery of Garnet wheat the northern limit of the wheat producing area of Canada was rolled back two hundred miles. From 1900 to 1910 the Canadian government advertised in Europe and the United States for pioneers to fill Canada's "Last Great West." Now the Dominion enters the Jubilee year of Confederation with another and equally great "Last Great West" waiting for the pioneer.

World's Greatest Exporter.

With a production of over 400,000,000 bushels of wheat and about 600,000,000 bushels of other grains, Canada is a big exporter of grains, in fact the greatest exporter of grains in the world. In the calendar year 1926, Canada's exports of wheat totalled 250,116,000 bushels, being an increase of 28,000,000 bushels over the previous year. Wheat flour exported from Canada during 1926 totalled 10,456,916 barrels, an increase of 138,000 barrels over 1925. This export of flour was equivalent to over 50,000,000 bushels of wheat. Thus, while the wheat crop in 1926 was estimated at 405,000,000 (not counting any wheat used by the farmers for fodder) the exports for the year were 300,000,000 bushels, or practically three-quarters.

Canada's exports of barley for the calendar year 1926 amounted to 34,727,433 bushels, an increase of 1,400,000 bushels over the previous year. Rye exports were 6,137,410, an increase of about 700,000 bushels. Other grain exports showed a decrease. Exports of oats were 18,371,000 bushels compared with 41,398,000 in 1925; and exports of flax were 2,653,410, compared with 5,502,000. Mill-feed exports also showed a decline.

The total exports of grain for 1926 were 325,000,000 bushels, and with the grain equivalent of the flour exports, a total of 375,000,000. In the previous year the exports of grains were 308,000,000 bushels, and with the grain equivalent of the flour exports, a total of 358,000,000 bushels.

Although Canada's total exports of grain during 1926 were 17,000,000 bushels greater than in 1925, the shipments through the grain elevators of the port of Montreal showed a decline. For the calendar year 1926 all lines of grains moving through Montreal totalled 134,597,000 bushels, compared with 165,000,000 bushels in the 1925.

This decline has been variously attributed to the lack of foreign buying, and the difficulty of securing tramp tonnage arising from the fact that the British coal strike caused a strong demand for steamers to carry coal from the United States to the United Kingdom. It may be noted that the shipments of wheat through Montreal last year were 8,000,000 bushels greater than during 1925. On the other hand the volume of oats moving through Montreal last year was 29,000,000 bushels less than in 1925, and there were lesser declines in the quantities of other coarse grains handled.

Premier Grain Port.

Despite these declines Montreal maintained its position as the premier grain port of the world. Up to November 30, 1926, grain shipments via Montreal and American ports were:

	Bushels
Montreal	134,597,000
New Yrok	75,463,000
Galveston	51,253,000
Baltimore	20,313,000
New Orleans	8,892,000
Philadelphia	6,547,000
Boston	3,659,000

The shipments through the six American ports totalled 147,900,000 bushels, or only 14,500,000 more than through Montreal alone.

The enormous expansion of wheat growing in Canada during the past quarter of a century has made the problem of transporting it to markets one of great importance to the Canadian people, and also to people of Great Britain and other countries who depend upon the Canadian wheat fields for the staff of life. The hundreds of millions of bushels raised in the prairie provinces during the short, fierce summer must be moved a great distance to find their major markets, and the transportation costs must be kept as low as possible. What complicates the problem is that no grain-grower, or even the traders who buy from the growers, can foretell the ultimate destination of any bushel of grain. It must be assembled at strategic points like Winnipeg, Chicago, Port Arthur, Duluth, then moved on to the ports of Georgian Bay or Montreal or Buffalo—or to Vancouver—and then at the call of cable orders it must be shipped in great quantities to overseas markets.

County Elevators.

Beginning its journey in a farmer's wagon or truck the grain goes to a country elevator, one of thousands scattered over the prairies. They are always located alongside of railway sidings. The typical country elevator is usually thirty feet square and seventy-five feet high, with bins able to store about 25,000 bushels of grains. The wagon load of wheat or other grain is run up an incline, and, after being weighed, a machine lifts the front end of the wagon so that the grain runs out and through a trap in the floor into a hopper. An elevator leg then lifts the grain to the top of the elevator whence it is distributed by gravity to the bins according to grade. The "leg" is a device consisting essentially of two pulleys, one in the boot and the other at the head, over which runs a belt, generally of rubber. At regular intervals along the belt are metal cups which scoop up the grain from the boot and carry it over the head where it is turned out by the inversion of the cups, into a spout placed there to receive it. In the country elevators the leg will usually carry up about 1,000 bushels per hour.

The grain begins the second stage of its journey in railway cars. Trains are shunted to the elevator sidings. The grain is drawn from the bottom of the bins, lifted again to the top of the elevator, weighed in hoppers and spouted into cars.

Wheat not destined for grinding in the flour mills of the prairies or for export via Vancouver, is hauled to Fort William and Port Arthur at the head of Lake Superior. There it is loaded in lake boats, usually great, long, barge-like craft, blunt-nosed and broad-beamed, able to carry 10,000 or more tons. These boats carry the grain to Ports in Georgian Bay, to Buffalo, or to Port Colborne, Ont., at the eastern end of Lake Erie. At Port Colborne the grain is discharged into elevators, and again loaded into vessels, small steam craft capable of navigating the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals. These boats carry 70,000 or 80,000 bushels of grain, and take about three days to run to Montreal, as in the canals they only steam at the rate of a mile or two an hour. They can make a round trip between Port Colborne and Montreal in a week, but as they have frequently to wait their turn for loading or discharging the average round voyage is somewhat longer.

At Montreal, or other ports, grain is lifted from the boats by marine legs. On the dock-side of the elevator are tall towers mounted on wheels; inside the tower hangs, like the clapper of a giant bell, a huge leg, framed of steel, 100 feet long or more. This reaches out until it hangs directly over a hatchway of the waiting boat; then descends until the boot is buried in grain. These marine legs are able to raise 25,000 bushels of grain per hour, 25 times the capacity of the small legs of a country elevator. At normal speed they raise about 16,000 bushels an hour.

Lifted to the top of the elevator the grain is carried by belts to the waiting bins.

Not all the grain passing through Montreal arrives by lake boat. On the average about one third is brought by Canadian Pacific and Canadian National trains from the Georgian Bay ports—Midland, Port McNichol, Tiffin, etc. The trains are run into bays at the base of the elevators. Up to a few years ago the cars were unloaded by power shovels, two handled scoops with ropes leading to drums driven by special machinery. Each shovel required a man to operate it, and two could be used in a car at the same time. But as the men had to work within the cars it was a dusty, unpleasant job which demanded high pay.

Mechanical Car Dumpers.

The use of man power is not, however, in accordance with modern ideas of grain handling, and a mechanical car dumper has been invented. The Metcalfe Car Dumper, which the Harbor Commission now employs at all its elevators, automatically opens the car door, picks up bodily the loaded car, tips it sidewise and then tilts it endwise first in one direction and then the other, until all the grain has run out into a hopper below the rail level. This mechanical monster juggles a loaded car—a weight in some cases of 90 tons—very much like a boy juggles a toy bank in an effort to shake nickels out of the slot. Montreal has 11 of these contrivances; all working they can dump 27 cars an hour.

A belt takes the grain from the car receiving hopper to an elevator leg which carries it to scales above bins, where it is weighed and then carried by belts to storage bins as required.

Conveyor Galleries.

In sea ports elevators have a system of galleries built over the top of freight sheds, and through these galleries belts convey grain to load ships lying in berths a thousand or more feet away. Thus many ocean boats can be loaded with grain without shifting their berths, and may be taking grain in one hold while loading ordinary cargo in another. Montreal has the greatest and best system of conveyor galleries of any port in the world, and no less than twenty-nine ocean ships can be loaded with grain at one time.

The galleries have from two to four conveyor belts. These are broad bands of rubber running over rollers, moving without noise or apparent effort. The grain is poured upon the swiftly moving belts and rides away—a yellow ribbon three feet wide stretching out six hundred or a thousand feet towards the receiving ship. At the outer end the conveyor belt rises in a gradual incline to the tripper, an iron frame containing a combination of broad but small diameter rollers, over which the rubber band makes a sharp bend and starts back to the elevator. But the yellow stream of grain goes on, leaping free like a ski-jumper, and without spilling a single golden kernel, without ceasing to be a yellow ribbon, pours into a hopper and down a spout into the hold of the ship.

Each of these conveyor belts can deliver 15,000 bushels of grain to a ship in any hour; that is, their normal working capacity is equal to that of one of the "marine legs." An ocean going boat of 11,000, tons, able to carry some 360,000 bushels of grains, can be loaded in seven or eight hours. Operated to full capacity the grain handling facilities of Montreal could take from lake boats and railway cars 2,000,000 bushels within fifteen hours, the length of the working day of the various mechanisms, and at the same time could load a similar volume of grain into ocean ships.

Exploring The Rockies

The exploration of the Rocky Mountain region of Canada goes back to the famous expedition of Alexander Mackenzie in 1792-93, when he travelled through Peace River Pass on his way to paint that memorable inscription on the shores of the Pacific—"Alexander Mackenzie, from Canada, by land, this 22nd of July, 1793."

It might be thought that there would be very little to tell about the exploration of the Rockies after Confederation, as practically all the mountain passes had been discovered long before 1867, and such of them as Athabaska Pass had been well recognized thoroughfares of the fur trade for half a century or more. But it must be remembered that there are more to the Rockies than mountain passes. As a matter of fact, with the exception of the scientific work of the Palliser Expedition, those who went through the Rockies before Confederation were mainly concerned in getting through as quickly as possible. The mountains were simply a barrier to be got through. No one dreamed then that they would one day become a great national playground, where men and women might go for rest and recreation after a strenuous year's work.

When British Columbia came into Confederation, however, one of the conditions was that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be pushed through to the Pacific at the earliest possible moment. That meant that practicable routes must be found through the mountains, and engineering parties spent several years in examining one way after another, until it was finally decided to use the Kicking Horse Pass through the main range and Rogers Pass through the Selkirks.

At a later date surveying parties were sent into the Rockies, to fix and mark the line of the international boundary, and afterwards the inter-provincial boundary between Alberta and British Columbia, to ascertain the height of the more important ranges and peaks, to explore the principal mountain valleys and to put all this information on the maps.

At the same time travellers, mountain climbers, and mountain lovers, began to make their way into the Rockies, and, in spite of the fact that in those early days there were no great hotels at Banff, Lake Louise and Jasper, no chalets, no roads or trails, no guides, no ways of getting provisions except by carrying them in yourself from the nearest prairie town, they one and all become so enthusiastic that they returned year after year and spread abroad the glories of Rocky Mountain lakes and peaks, roaring streams and glaciers, forested slopes and alpine meadows glowing with many-colored wildflowers.

The result was that the Canadian government made a modest beginning, with Rock Mountain National Parks, and as the facilities there provided brought an ever-increasing stream of tourists, other parks were organized and opened, until to-day there is an almost continuous band of mountain playgrounds, from the international boundary up to the northern limits of Jasper Park.

With the establishment of the Parks, came the organization of the Canadian Alpine Club, and later the Trail Riders Club, which incidently has resulted in the exploration of most of the Rocky Mountain region from the boundery up to Jasper not already covered by government surveyors.

Lord Strathcona was a generous giver and Montreal particularly owes much to his lavish gifts. In 1907 he contributed $250,000 for the encouragement of physical and military training in the Public Schools of the Dominion; but his most spectacular contribution to Canada and the Empire was the sending to South Africa of the Strathcona Horse at a cost of over $1,000,000. Its banner bore the motto of Lord Strathcona "Perseverance," a word that admirably sums up the reason for the success in life of this great Empire builder.

HELPING to MAINTAIN CANADA as "The Bread Basket of the World"

The face of the friendly Quaker, familiar in more than 50 countries, finds a place in the celebration of Canada's Jubilee.

The Quaker Oats Company, as the largest manufacturer of cereals in the British Empire, takes particular pride in associating itself with festivities to mark this historic occasion. With two plants entirely occupied in turning the grain of Canadian farms into cereal foods for man and beast, The Quaker Oats Company has been closely identified with Canada's greatest industry, agriculture.
We believe that our work in milling grain into foodstuffs has played a substantial part in helping to build up this country. We have purchased the best the farmers have produced and thus have been of assistance in turning into wealth the agricultural resources of the country. To-day millions of people in many countries know that the name of The Quaker Oats Company on cereal products stands for purity, flavour and high quality.
Canadian farmers have benefited by the demand of The Quaker Oats Company for their grain. Canadian consumers find the healthful, nutritious foods of The Quaker Mills available everywhere in Canada. Canadian business and trade have been promoted by the manufacturing and distributing activities of The Quaker Oats Company and the constant and increasing exportation of its products to many foreign countries.

Wheat Is Canada's Most Valuable Crop

About Half of Canada's People Are Engaged in Agriculture—Wheat Rules the World

Just about one half of Canada's ten million people are directly interested in, and in fact, engaged in the production of crops of one kind and another, and in their manipulation on the farm, the ranch or the orchard. The production of our various cash crops such as wheat, fruits, vegetables, tobacco, etc., is responsible for the employment of the greater proportion of the five millions engaged in Canadian agriculture, but the handling of live stock and their exploitation for the conversion of many millions of tons of the raw products of our soil into relatively more highly valuable animals products, commands the attention of a very large percentage of our farming population.

Crop production is, of course, confined to such varieties as may be produced at a profit under temperate climatic conditions. This, while to some extent limiting the field of production, need scarcely be considered as a handicap, since there is no small variety of such available, as the best cereals, wheat, oats, barley, rye, buckwheat, the most valuable forage crops, timothy, bromes, rye grasses, blue grasses, clovers, alfalfas and millets, the recognized succulent forages, turnips, mangolds, potatoes, sunflowers and ensilage corn, and various special cash crops—potatoes, tobacco, sugar beets, flax and hemp as well as a great variety of tree and bush fruits, and all the vegetables commonly used by mankind the world over. Further, inasmuch as nearly all crops are of the best quality when produced near the limit of their climatic zone, most of Canada's agricultural products are of extraordinarily good quality.

Wheat Peculiarly Valuable.

Of the cereals, wheat has for the past twenty-five years very easily stood out as the greatest. Wheat as produced on our Prairies is peculiarly valuable, being unusually rich in protein, or, as commonly stated, producing a very strong flour. It has the further advantage of being a fairly certain, or uniformly good crop, and of being produced at rather moderate cost. The annual crop now runs from 275,000,000 to occasionally over 400,000,000 bushels, and will undoubtedly be at least 50 per cent. greater in a few years as more land is brought under cultivation.

Of this crop, a very large percentage is available for export, and this fact, together with its extraordinary milling qualities, makes the Canadian wheat crop the most important in the world, as affecting wheat prices. Canadian farmers, awake to this situation, now handle a very large part of their crop through the "pool," and so prevent the speculator at home or abroad from controlling prices to their own advantage. This scheme as may be imagined, has helped the farmer at home and disgusted the dealer both at home and abroad.

The so-called coarse grains, oats, barley, rye, buckwheat, flax and corn, while not entering into the cash crop field to anything like the same extent as wheat, are, nevertheless, of primary economic importance to Canada, since they enter so very largely indeed into what might be called the manufacturing side of farming, the production of horse power, beef, dairy products, mutton and wool, pork and poultry products. These crops may be produced at a profit in practically every part of every province throughout the Dominion. Oats of excellent quality are harvested every year from Prince Edward Island to Vancouver Island, and the crop records show the very respectable figures from—say—365,000,000 to around 520,000,000 bushels per annum. Barley is not produced on such a large scale, but is a crop of great importance just the same, and is possibly increasing in popularity. The yield in a normal year is in the neighborhood of 115,000,000 bushels. Rye, a rather undervalued cereal in Canada, is gradually making a place, especially on light soils, and in drier districts. It is considerably more certain as a crop in light rainfall areas than is wheat. The annual crop is around 15,000,000 bushels. Buckwheat is not grown to any great extent on the prairies, but is of very considerable importance in the Eastern Provinces, and might well be grown more extensively.

Live Stock Population.

Canada's live stock population has now reached respectable figures, as last year's census will show. Our horses number 3,554,041; our cattle 9,307,298; our sheep 2,775,556; our swine 4,426,148, and our poultry 48,133,969. To feed so many and such varied classes of animals requires not only vast supplies, but a great variety of forage of which, of course, different kinds of hay constitute the most valuable and the most important.

Timothy is grown in every province, but Quebec easily leads in the quantity and value of this grass. A considerable quantity of timothy hay is exported from this province to the United States or elsewhere.

Alfalfa, a very valuable and a very rapidly increasing crop, is grown chiefly in Ontario, Quebec, Alberta and British Columbia. The area under this crop in Ontario alone was around 500,000 acres last year. It succeeds wonderfully well under irrigation in Alberta and British Columbia.

While hay crops are, of course, by far the most important forage crops in the Dominion, what are known as succulent forage crops, such as ensilage corn, sunflowers for ensilage, mangolds and turnips, are looked upon as of very great importance indeed, and garnered to the extent of about 8,000,000 tons each year.

Corn for ensilage is grown very extensively in Ontario and Quebec, but to some extent at least, in nearly every province, and is probably the best ensilage crop grown.

Sunflowers for ensilage are gradually coming into favor, more especially on the prairies where most extraordinary yields are recorded even as far north as the Peace River.

Potatoes Sell at Premium.

Potatoes are produced to the extent of from 75 to 125 million bushels each year. Probably no crop is more subject to wide differences in yield year by year, consequently, values vary greatly. The potato growing provinces par excellence are New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. In these provinces not only does this crop give good returns per acre, but it is at same time most remarkably free from disease, and the tubers produced here are of extraordinary value for seed purposes. In Prince Edward Island in 1926, the certified seed crop has been estimated at 750,000 bushels, out of a total crop of 7,346,660 bushels, and the whole crop was worth in the neighborhood of $6,000,000.

A very moderate valuation placed on the various farm products discussed above, indicates that Canada harvests each year, field crops to the value of $1,000,000,000 or there about. Huge as is this sum, however, in relation to the comparatively small number of farmers, or rather, farms in Canada, say about 1,000,000—the returns from her live stock are just about as great in value.

Animals and animal products produced under Canadian climatic conditions are commonly of superior quality, and usually command top prices wherever marketed in competition with similar products from countries less favoured climatically, as witness her horses in the United States; her cattle and her bacon; her cheese and her eggs in Great Britain.

Horses, as already mentioned, number over three and a half million. These are for the most part of Clyde and Percheron breeding, but a great many light horses are also in evidence. For a number of years there was a falling off in interest in horse breeding, but recently, the industry has been taking on new life, and now many farmers are once again going in for raising colts, and trade is brightening up. A rather new line of breeding is coming forward, namely, the raising of saddle or riding horses. Possibilities of European trade too, seem to exist, and a shipment of 1,000 head of light horses to Russia a few months ago will, it is anticipated, lead to further business.

The Beef Cattle industry received a very considerable impetus three years ago with the opening up, after thirty years closure, of the British market for stockers. This resulted in special efforts being made to improve the quality of our cattle, and progress has been quite in evidence. Unfortunately, the demoralization of the British market due to the industrial situation in that country, has had a very depressing effect on the cattle business here. The cattle are in the country however, and the moment things look up in Great Britain, the trade will start up again.

In conclusion, it may be said that Canada has had a very good year on the farm, and that everything considered, agriculture has been improving steadily from year to year. Progress of the right kind is evident in every line, and her people seem to have the right ideas as to the value and importance of producing the best and the very best only, in so far as is at all possible. That is the spirit that makes for progress, makes for profit and insures success.

Dormant Fertility of Southern Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia is being brought to abundant life

Canada is fortunate, compared to her neighbour south of Line 49, in the very small proportion of her land requiring more water than falls direct from the sky. Just the northern edge of the dry Missouri plateau projects over the international boundary into Southern Alberta and the southwest corner of Saskatchewan, while another dry area lies sandwiched between the mountain ranges of British Columbia.

Thirty years ago the first considerable attempt to bring to life the dormant fertility of dry Southern Alberta, by utilizing the copious rivers coursing down through that region from the Rocky Mountains, was made by the Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company at Lethbridge. This scheme, involving 130,000 irrigable acres, was taken over in 1912 by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That company had already started a much larger irrigation scheme on its own account, having taken over 3,000,000 acres of semi-arid land east of Calgary at the Dominion Government's request, in place of land which its charter authorized it to choose in more favoured districts. Beginning in 1904, the company spent $20,000,000 on enormous works carrying water from the Bow River to irrigate 624,980 acres in two sections of this area. The famous Bassano Dam, raising the level of the Bow River forty feet to divert enough water for the Eastern Section, consists of a concrete structure 720 feet long and an earthen embankment of 7,800 feet. Across one valley the water is carried by a reinforced concrete aqueduct 10,480 feet long.

The Southern Alberta Land Company also constructed a great system to supply water from the Bow to the 200,000 irrigable acres on its property. Since 1922, several co-operative irrigation districts have been formed in the same region, with the help of a Provincial Government guarantee on bonds to cover the cost of construction.

Almost anything can be grown on that irrigated prairie, except tropical vegetation. At present the chief crops are wheat and alfalfa; and the alfalfa seed raised there has won a very high reputation. But a far larger cash return is ensured by the intensified farming for which irrigation offers peculiar opportunities. The financial yield per acre in 1924 was $189 from garden roots, $98.40 from potatoes, $79.25 from sugar beets, $31.45 from peas, $20 from alfalfa, and $18.50 from wheat. Last year the average yield from beets in one district was $71.58, against $25 from wheat.

The beet acreage is now being largely increased, to supply the sugar factory at Raymond, and if 100,000 acres of irrigated land were put under this crop the Prairie Provinces would be independent of the sugar they now import at a cost of $10,000,000 a year. The refuse pulp after extraction of the sugar, is returned to the farmers, and makes rich cattle feed.

The Lethbridge Experimental Farm of the Dominion Government is divided into two sections, identical, except that one is irrigated and the other is not. In seventeen years, including one or two of plentiful rainfall, the average yield of wheat was 117 per cent more, and of potatoes 127 per cent more, on the irrigated land than on the adjoining section not artificially watered.

In one district, the Lethbridge Northern, nearly 400 farms have been established since irrigation was begun a few years ago.

The fruit of the irrigated valleys of British Columbia, the Okanagan being the most famous, not only supplies a large proportion of the prairie demand, but even reaches the British Isles, where it captures many prizes in competition with fruit from other parts of the Empire.

From Whitebait to Whale

It is a nice point if the Fisheries or the Fur Trade is the most ancient of Canadian industries, but it seems probable that the palm would have to be awarded to the former. The fur trade goes back to the days of Jacques Cartier, whose men traded for furs with the natives on the shores of Chaleur Bay; but on the other hand Cartier himself found the enterprising Breton and Basque fishermen already on our coasts when he made his first voyage, and there is evidence that they frequented the Grand Bank and the fishing ground off Nova Scotia long before his day.

Canada controls the most extensive fishing grounds in the world, extending from the Grand Manan to Labrador, including the Bay of Fundy and the Gulf of St. Lawrence; also Hudson's Bay and the Pacific coast; and the extraordinary system of lakes and rivers, large and small, that extend throughout the Dominion, and practically all of which yield a harvest in fish. It is equally important to remember that the product of the Canadian fisheries, because of the purity and coldness of the water, are of unusually high quality. In both quantity and quality, therefore, they rank among the most valuable of the world's fisheries.

We can boast, too, of variety in our fisheries. On the Atlantic fishing grounds we obtain cod, halibut, herring, mackerel, haddock, shad, gaspereau, smelts and bass; on the Pacific side, salmon, halibut, pilchard, sturgeon, oulachon and black cod; from our inland waters whitefish, trout, pickerel, pike, goldeye, etc. One must remember, also, the matchless salmon of the Saguenay and the Maritime rivers; the delicious oysters of Malpequet; the lobsters of Northumberland strait; and the valuable whale fisheries of the Pacific coast and the Arctic as well as the North Atlantic.

The fisheries of Canada have been a fruitful source of negotiation, and sometimes of dispute between this country and the United States. The Americans had certain fishing rights in Canadian waters by the Old Reciprocity Treaty, and later under the provisions of the Treaty of Washington. Under the terms of the Halifax Award the United States had to pay Canada $45,500,000 for certain fishing concessions. At the present time American rights are restricted to fishing around the Magdelen Islands and on certain parts of the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and the privileges of drying and curing their fish on certain parts of the shore.

The value of Canadian fisheries has enormously increased since Confederation. In 1867 the value of the catch amounted to about $5,000,000; to-day it is about $50,000,000. In the old days the cod was the most valuable of our fishes; now the salmon has taken the lead, with the halibut second, the lobster third, and the codfish fourth. Herring, whitefish, haddock and the humble sardine follow in that order. By provinces, British Columbia ranks first in the value of her fisheries, then Nova Scotia with New Brunswick third, and Ontario and Quebec about even.

DIVERSIFIED INDUSTRIES BUILT UP PETERBOROUGH

Few cities of its size have such a diversity of industries as has Peterborough. This fact largely explains the city's freedom from those general periods of mushroom growth followed by rapid decay that have characterized so many localities in the North American Continent.

Early in its history Peterborough became a hive of industrial activity, with sawmills and lumber companies organized to exploit the abundant timber resources that surrounded the infant municipality.

In this connection, it is interesting to note that a concern, still in existence and thriving, is the Peterborough Lumber Company which has had a continuous existence of over a century. It was founded more than forty years before Confederation by Samuel Dickson, whose grandson, Dickson Davidson, is president of the firm today. The concern was incorporated as a limited liability company under the laws of Ontario in 1906 with a capital stock of $100,000. The output of this concern which runs into millions of feet of lumber, lath and shingles, is shipped to all parts of Canada, and its woods products are famous everywhere.

The McDonald Lumber Company was started in 1875 by the late Alfred McDonald, who commenced operations with saw and shingle mills, a small box and sash factory, and a planing mill. The company was incorporated in 1919 and now comprises one of the most up-to-date establishments in the province for the manufacture of lumber, lath, shingles, boxes and box shooks, sash, doors, blinds and wallboard. The products of this concern are shipped to the United States as well as to all parts of Ontario.

A third company in the manufacture of lumber in the city is that of the Purdy Lumber Company, situated just across the Locks Bridge on the Ashburnham side of the river. This concern has been in operation for several years, having bought out the business from E. H. Mann, and gives every indication of finding a market for the product.

Early Arrivals

Early in the industrial history of Peterborough came the Peter Hamilton shops, manufacturing agricultural implements of high grade and for many years the tools produced enjoyed such widespread reputation for excellence that the entire trade of the district came to this company.

Another pre-Confederation concern is the William Hamilton Co. The William Hamilton Co. was established in 1856 by a Scottish immigrant of that name, who started business on Reid Street for the manufacture of mill and machine shop supplies. The industry now does a fine business in saw mill, pulp and paper machinery, mining machinery, boilers, etc.

Leading Industry

Pretty well down the scale from the point of view of date of conception, but easily first as regards size and importance is the Canadian General Electric Company. The genesis of the Peterborough plant was the Edison Electric Company which removed its works from Sherbrooke, Quebec, to Peterborough. Merged into the gigantic General Electric organization, the local works are still known to the older generation as "the Edison."

As the years passed by there was a steady and in some respects phenomenal growth. From a force of about 300 men the company now gives employment to 2,000 men, and has brought to the city the very cream of technical and mechanical skill in citizens of the very best class.

The equipment of the electric developments at Niagara and at the St. Lawrence in Montreal were supplied from the Canadian General Electric Works in Peterborough.

From Montreal

The De Laval Company is another concern which Peterborough secured at the expense of Quebec.

Occupying a site in Montreal which was unfavorable to ready expansion and desirous of securing a location with good transportation facilities close to the Western market, the De Laval Company decided that Peterborough was the logical location, and in 1912 the process of removal was begun. Supplying essentially the wants of the farmer and the agriculturists the De Laval Company produces a large variety of manufactured goods, chiefly cream separators, gas engines, and milkers, etc.

Largest in Empire

The Quaker Oats plant, the largest cereal mill in the British Empire, was established here in 1900 as the American Cereal Co., a branch of the world-wide known Quaker Oats Co. of the United States. The plant today is one of the most imposing industrial spectacles in Peterborough. The large elevators have a capacity of 1,300,000 bushels, and the yearly consumption of grain is five times the total capacity of the elevators. Quaker products are known all over the civilized world—and in some places that are not civilized. Quaker Oats, Quaker flour, Puffed Rice Puffed Wheat and Quick Quaker are typical examples.

Another concern, which may, however, develop into a company of wide importance is the Peterborough Cereal Company, which produces flour and cereals.

Water Craft

The Peterborough Canoe Co. was founded by Colonel J. Z. Rogers of Ashburnham, who, early in the 80's, acquired the right to build the popular basswood board canoes, first designed and built by John Stephenson, Ashburnham. In 1883, the firm was designated the Ontario Canoe Co., and carried on under that style until 1892 when a fire completely wiped out the plant. Nothing daunted, the management got to work and later in the same year a new factory was built at the corner of King and Water Streets, where have been built the canoes which are to be found on all the waters of the world and have made Peterborough known everywhere. A large number of fine cruisers and other light craft has also served to extend the reputation of the Peterborough Canoe Company.

Another local company which has a fine reputation wherever aquatic activities are to the fore, is the Canadian Canoe Co., which manufactures an excellent type of canoe, skiff and light water craft. Organized in 1893, it commenced operations in premises situated at the junction of Brock and Water streets, removed to larger quarters at the corner of George and Dalhousie Streets, and again in 1911 further expansion of business called for another shift to a 3-storey building on Rink Street.

A most recent entry into the building of water craft in Peterborough Boat Livery, of which Mr. J. B. O'Dette is proprietor.

This new concern is making satisfactory progress as the heads of the plant are experienced workmen and turn out an excellent product.

Best of Its Kind

The factory of J. J. Turner and Sons is the best of its kind in Canada and Messrs. Turner are unequalled for skill in the manufacture of flags, pennants, tents, awnings, sails, tarpaulins, waterproof clothing and sacks.

The Western Clock Company plant is a branch of the famous American company of the same name. This is another company whose products have reached the four corners of the globe. Made - in - Peterborough clocks and watches awaken the sleeper and tell the time in every land under the sun.

B. F. Ackerman and Sons was established in Peterborough in 1892, coming to this city from Port Perry and renting premises at the corner of George and Dalhousie Streets. This important industry, manufacturing for the wholesale trade, harness, saddlery, boots and shoes and general leather goods, grew so rapidly that larger premises were required, and the present three-storey factory was erected in 1897.

The Peterborough Lock Company came into being chiefly through the efforts of George A. Cox, George Hilliard and John Burnham, who took over the building formerly occupied by the Central Iron Works on Simcoe Street to which some additions were built, and machinery was installed for the manufacture of locks, brushes and all kinds of builders' hardware.

From Small Beginnings

The history of the Canadian Packing Company is an epitome of the development of the pork-packing business in Canada.

Organized and established in the early 80's by George Matthews of Lindsay, the business expanded to very large proportions. With a first class agricultural district surrounding it, the firm developed a large export trade of food products, immense shipments being sent to the Old Country. The firm has figured in several mergers, the latest being consummated during the present month in the absorption of the Canadian Packing Company along with three other large organizations into one huge corporation—Canada Packers, Limited, capitalized at $10,000,000.

The G. Walter Green Company was founded by the business man of that name in 1896. This business flourished early in spite of heavy losses through two fires, one in the year of its foundation, and another two years later. After the second disaster, business was resumed in what had formerly been the Whyte Foundry on McDonnel Street. After this removal, the company added the manufacture of agricultural implements to their other lines: pumps, windmills and tanks, and undertook the repair of separators, engines and boilers.

From U.S.A.

The Ontario Marble Company was originally the Vermont Marble Company, a branch of a United States concern, established here to handle the Canadian end of the business which had developed considerably owing to the increased demand for marble and stone supplies required in buildings of all kinds and the electrical power and light developments of the province.

The company of today has the most modern appliance for the handling of the large and costly marble which form the raw material of the plant.

Peterborough Milk Products Company produces creamy butter, ice cream, pasteurized milk, and cream, and condensed milk. This concern was started as a creamery in 1906 by the late P. Downham. After Mr. Downham died in 1910, the place was taken over G. A. Gillespie. The company now employs 45 men and has an annual turnover of half a million dollars.

The Colonial Weaving Co. at its inception in 1899 was known as the Peterborough Underwear Co. After carrying on for some years, the business passed into other hands, and a trade was established in the manufacture of belting and woven silk and cotton labels for makers of garments and hats.

From England

The Brinton Carpet Factory was established here as a branch of a well known firm of Kidderminster, England. A staff of 100 skilled workers trained in the parent plant in Kidderminster; was brought out to Peterborough and soon placed the local works in an enviable position for the weaving of Wilton, Brussels and Axminster carpets and rugs to which the manufacture of Sarouk carpets was later added. The factory has filled orders for many public institutions, making the products specially to order. It has also supplied the furnishings for several large and palatial steamers built for the Great Lakes passenger service. During the present year the firm supplied a number of fine carpets and rugs for Rideau Hall previous to the installation of Lord Willingdon.

The Printing Industry.

The Peterborough Examiner, besides publishing Central Ontario's most important newspaper, also operates the largest job, book and commercial printing plant in Central Ontario. All branches of the Art Preservative are included such as direct-by-mail advertising, catalogs, folders, booklets and brochures. They maintain a service department manned by experts for the use of customers where copy is written and ideas created and submitted.

Merchants Press and Peterborough Paper Box company is another industry supplying the many needs of this section of the Province. Dawe-Pearson Limited is the latest addition to the printing industry and operate a well-balanced plant.

The Peterboro Review Co. also does printing work and in point of years is one of the oldest establishments in this city. Machine work is carried but by the Peterborough machine and Lubricator Company.

Woollens

The Woollen industry is represented by Canadian Woollens and the Peterborough Woollen Mills. The Canadian Woollen Company owns and operates the Auburn plant, where cloths are made, and the Bonner-Worth, where the yarn is spun.

At the Auburn Mills are manufactured cloakings, suitings, overcoatings and tweeds, while the Bonner-Worth Mills are devoted entirely to the production of yarns. Worsted yarns are also produced by the Otonabee Mills.

The Auburn Mills were built for the manufacture of woollen goods in the year 1862. Early in its history this factory was noted for its progressive methods and superior manufacture. As far back as 1864 these mills secured the gold medal of the Dublin Exhibition for the best Canadian tweeds and a silver medal at the Montreal Exhibition held in the same year.

RAYBESTOS BRAKE LININGS

Canadian Raybestos Company manufactures brake linings, clutch facings, sheet packing automobile brakes and Ford Car supplies.

The Canadian Raybestos Company cominng here several years ago, and being one of our more recent industries, is already giving Peterborough a great deal of advertising throughout the Dominion. The celebrated Raybestos Brake Lining is used in many automobiles the world over. The plant here is the head office and factory for Canada.

THE BRICK INDUSTRY

Curtis Brothers, manufacturers of brick and tile, situated near the canal, on the Warsaw Road, in East City, is one of our very oldest establishments. It is now the only brick making plant in Peterborough County, and in fact possibly the only brick making plant in several surrounding counties. Curtis Brothers claim to have sold the brick that has built more than two-thirds of the homes and factries in this city and district. This fact alone speaks well for their product.

STOVES AND RANGES

Adam Hall, Limited, are manufacturers of stoves and ranges. This progressive concern is the outcome of the work of the late Adam Hall and his two sons. Adam Hall in his lifetime kept a tinsmith and plumbing establishment on George Street. Going out of this business, he organized and founded the Adam Hall, Limited a foundry and stove plant, which is modern in very way, and the produce of the stove foundry is to be found all over the Dominion.

BREAD BAKERIES

Another industry in the city which has assumed considerable proportions in recent years is the bread making industry, represented by Stock's Bread, Gilgour and Son, Bredin's Bread Co., John Grady, and Menzies' Bakery. These baking concerns have model plants and their product is

Ontario's Leadership Due to Research

Present Development of the Telephone is Due to Foresight of Pioneers.

The eve of our Confederation anniversary is not a bad time for a reasonable amount of self-examination.

"I often wonder," said Hon. J. D. Monteith, Provincial Treasurer of Ontario, recently, "if the people of this great province of Ontario really appreciate the splendid conditions under which they live; or has the very multiplicity of all those things which go to make life easy and comfortable and convenient blinded their eyes?"

Mr. Monteith was considering at the moment the subject of the telephone development of the province, and he went on to say:

"Take the telephone, for example—I am told that Bell instruments, those on connecting systems, and those wholly independent, number in all about 534,821. This is equal to something like 18.2 telephones for every one hundred inhabitants! There are very few better served communities, from the standpoint of communication, anywhere in the world.

"What the telephone does for the business man, the housewife, the farmer, the artizan, I need not try to appraise. Everyone who thinks at all can testify to its benefits. But what I do suggest is that we are under a distinct obligation to the men and women who keep the standard of telephone service high—the rank and file of telephone workers whose fidelity to duty and alert watchfulness throughout the whole twenty-four hours of the day make it possible for us to turn to our telephones, confident that they will always do for us what we have come to rely on, both in our business and social relationships. Our confidence in the service is the fruit of our confidence in those who make it possible."

Hon. Mr. Monteith's interesting remarks suggest some enquiry as to the real reasons for Ontario's pre-eminence in this important field of telephone development. We are so accustomed to associating the name of Alexander Graham Bell with the telephone as we know it to-day, that we do not stop to reflect that in reality Bell's contribution, although of vital importance, was little more than the principle upon which the instrument that we use every day operates. Bell's first telephone was a crude mechanism, which although its principle was retained, was soon replaced by more efficient types. The fact is that important as Bell's first was, it was of almost equal importance that he was wise enough to surround himself in the early days of the telephone with men of outstanding ability who had the vision to see what the future was to hold for his great invention.

These pioneers of the telephone industry saw from the very beginning that demands upon the service would soon become most exacting. The very usefulness of the telephone would mean continuous expansion of the service it rendered, with continuous growth in problems both of a mechanical and commercial kind. Thus they began from the very start to study these problems, establishing the beginnings of what has become the greatest industrial research organization in the world. As a result of early research and experiment they were ready with adequate solutions of the problems of telephone service in nearly all cases before they became acute. One outstanding result to-day is that we, on this side of the Atlantic, enjoy a standard of service which is considered to be very much higher than that obtaining in other parts of the world.

What Science Has Contributed.

A brief review of some of the outstanding achievements of research as applied to the telephone is of no little interest It shows beyond a doubt that research has been the economic, as well as the mechanical or operating salvation of the business from its inception.

The necessity of replacing individual wires on poles by some type of underground conductor, led to the adoption, as far back as 1888, of cable containing fifty pairs of wires. This result was the outcome of a long series of tests and experiments to produce a cable in which the wire conductors were properly insulated, and it served to clear away the poles from the streets in the downtown sections of the bigger cities. Continuous experiment and research have brought about a steady increase in the number of wires that can be carried in underground cables of standard size. Finer and finer wires, more effectively insulated, have been used until to-day, cable with 1,200 pairs of copper wire conductors are in use, at a cost per circuit mile of less than one-tenth that of the earlier type of cable. It is of interest to learn that the very fine wires in the 1,200-pair cable, which serve to carry the voice currents, are only twenty-one one thousandths of an inch in diameter and weigh but six and one-half pounds to the mile.

The composition of the lead sheath enclosing the small wire conductors within telephone cables has been the subject of prolonged study, both in the laboratory and under actual service conditions. One would scarcely realize the importance of having exactly the right constituent metals, and in the proper proportion, in the sheath of these telephone cables. The first cables used were of pure lead which under atmospheric action cracked and let in the moisture. Then, following long experiments with such alloys as bismuth, antimony, copper, nickle and other elements, a cable was produced with a sheath made up of 90 per cent lead and 3 per cent tin which corrected the fault of the earlier cable. About 1908, however, tin became very expensive and after further tests covering a period of five years, it was found that 1 per cent of antimony with 2 per cent of tin could be used to advantage in cable sheaths. This simple substitution of antimony for tin has meant a saving in the cables since produced for the Bell System of over $20,00,000.

Economies in Long Distance.

Of course it was necessary as the telephone grew, to adopt every possible method that would produce economy and efficiency in the long distance plant, no less than in the exchange equipment. Bell engineers years ago worked out what is known as the phantom circuit for long distance lines. Briefly, this means that instead of stringing a pair of additional wires between two cities when the telephone traffic increases beyond the capacity of the existing pairs, a method is employed making it possible to carry on three conversations over each two physical pairs of wire. This increased immensely the facilities of the telephone companies without adding very greatly to construction costs.

As a general principle the heavier the copper used for long distance talking circuits the greater distance it is possible to talk over them. Long distance circuits were greatly reduced in size many years ago by the introduction of hard drawn copper wire, but at the best, even these copper circuits had very well defined limits for talking efficiency. It became necessary to devise some method of protecting the feeble electrical talking current in its flight along the wires. And so, to make long talks more distinct, research devised what is known as the "leading coil." These coils are made of soft iron and inserted at definite intervals in long distance telephone circuits. They have the effect of making the wires better conductors of telephone current, improving their efficiency by reducing the amount of energy lost in the line itself. "Leading" not only increase the distance over which it was possible to talk, but also made it possible to secure the same volume of transmission over a given distance by the use of smaller copper wires. By "loading" a given piece of wire circuit, it can be made to talk as well as wire, that is, from two and one-half to three times the weight of "loaded" wire.

Reviving Talking Currents by Repeaters.

But perhaps the outstanding contribution of telephone research to long distance transmission was the perfecting of the vacuum tube repeater for telephone use. These repeaters, inserted at certain intervals in long telephone circuits, have the effect of reviving the feeble voice currents, taking them on their way to their destination strengthened and rejuvenated. Your voice sounds perfectly clear to the distant listener and has all its original qualities preserved and reproduced unimpaired. In the first six years of its use the vacuum tube repeater brought about a saving in the construction of long distance lines for the whole Bell Telephone System of nearly $100,000,000, assuming that equivalent services could have been rendered by heavier copper wire.

Phone and Telegraph on Same Wires.

By a method, perfected by Bell engineers, of separating the interrupted direct current as used on telegraph circuits, from the alternating current used in telephone transmission, it had been possible to carry on simultaneous telegraph and telephone transmission over the same wires. About eight years ago, by the use of vacuum tube repeaters and an adaptation of an electrical filter, it became possible to carry on five simultaneous telephone conversations over the same pair of wires. This filter device is effective for the purpose in that it permits a certain range of telephone frequencies to pass through it and blocks out any frequencies which are higher than that particular band. The telephone conversations are mixed, so to speak, with a steady high frequency current, transmitted over the telephone circuit, and then by means of the electrical filters at the receiving end, each one is diverted into a separate channel and the others kept out, and so five distinct conversations can be carried on over one pair of wires. The apparatus at each end is very complex and expensive, so that it is not economical for distance of less than about 250 miles.

Importance of Standards.

In telephone apparatus the number of parts which must function in co-ordination with others is very large and a high degree of standardization is necessary. Standardization makes the best appliances and methods available to all operating companies. It reduces the cost to each, because when all companies use the same thing, it can be made in great quantities at low unit cost. It reduces also the cost of carrying stocks of material and reduces the expense of maintenance and repairs because fewer parts have to be carried than if the apparatus were of diverse types. Standardization also reduces the cost of training new employees, and the cost of plant-accounting in keeping track of items of equipment. It makes possible the quick restoration of plant after storms and disasters, not only because the replaced material is designed to function with the other plant in service but because the workmen employed to make repairs are familiar with the material and methods. There is, of course, increased efficiency because of concentration on fewer items of material. In the last analysis, all specifications under standardized equipment are based upon consideration of service and economy.

In Aid of the Suffering.

And telephone research has produced some by-products which have proven of benefit to mankind almost equal to its main results as expressed in the efficiency and economic savings of present-day telephone service. Within comparatively recent months the laboratories of the Bell Telephone System have perfected apparatus which enables physicians, not only to listen to the heart beats of their patients, but to see those heart beats traced out on charts. These tracings, made at intervals, provide an invaluable record of the progress of disease. Another development of this apparatus enables a class of medical students to listen at the same time as their physician-instructor to the heart beats of a patient, and thus to appraise, under his guidance, the significance of the many modulations which they listen to by means of this equipment.

A short time ago the Bell laboratories developed an artificial larynx. So many people have been affected with throat trouble, necessitating the removal of the larynx, that this artificial aid which enables them to enunciate clearly has come into quite widespread use.

The development of a new metal alloy which has very high magnetic properties has enabled Bell engineers to perfect a new type of portable apparatus for deaf people. The sensitiveness of this new alloy is such that while improving greatly the hearing of the deaf the apparatus absorbs undue shocks and thus protects the sufferer from the distress these shocks occasion. This same metal, permalloy, has been employed in the construction of submarine cable and has made possible the mending of a great many more telegraphic messages than was possible over earlier types of cable.

Talking motion-pictures which so synchroaize the voice of a speaker or a singer with the actions of the image thrown upon the screen that one can actually feel the living presence of the performer, are also a product of the Bell laboratories.

The Contribution of Research.

And so we see that scientific research and experiment which, in the development of the telephone, have made possible a constantly expanding and improving service at a cost well within the reach of the humble householder, has brought about also many inventions which have proven of untold benefit in lessening human suffering and making life's handicaps less severe.

And then, too, there are those more spectacular results of research such as trans-Atlantic telephony, photographic transmission by wire and radio, and television.

In considering all these remarkable achievements one can not but wonder what the end of research will be—is there anything too wonderful, in the realm of communication, which it may not some day accomplish?

Meanwhile, as the great net-work of communication, especially in our larger cities, becomes more complex, research is continuously working out economic and betterments which serve to keep a very vital service within the reach of all.

FURS

Canada's Original Natural Product

Since Hudson Bay time, when FURS were the one great product of Canada, the industry has been a leading one, and the fur-bearing animals have given to the Dominion, millions of dollars worth of raw materials, which in turn are manufactured and give employment to thousands of Canadian workmen.

Barrie's Limited

With headquarters in Peterborough and a branch factory in Regina, is one of Canada's foremost and pioneer BUYERS AND MANUFACTURERS OF FURS.

At the time of Confederation the business was being run by Wm. Fairweather, and in 1901 it was acquired by Mr. Barrie, later being incorporated as Barrie's Limited. This places the business as one of the pioneer industries, not only in Peterborough, but of Canada.

KNOWN FAR AND WIDE

Barrie's fine fur garments are sold throughout Canada. Barrie's dependable furs are a well-established national product.

The company, in addition to operating factories at Peterborough and Regina, Sask., has splendid retail stores at Peterborough, Toronto, Regina, Saskatoon and Moosejaw.

BURNBRAE VETERANS CAN TELL MANY STORIES OF EARLY DAYS

Thomas Oddie Was Born in District 85 Years Ago.

PRIMITIVE FARMING

William Stewart is Widely Known as Breeder of Ayrshires.

BURNBRAE, June 29. — Thomas McIntosh Oddie, the veteran of Burnbrae in point of years, is eminently a native of the community. On October 29, 1842, nearly 85 years ago, he was born on the farm now occupied by Andrew Watson, immediately north of Burnbrae Corner. Many interesting events of those boyhood years among the early settlers can be recalled by Mr. Oddie, although the events of the Confederation year are not particularly vivid in his mind, as there seemed to be little excitement on that occasion. During Mr. Oddie's boyhood years the late Alexander Donald kept store and post office where William Fry now resides just south of Burnbrae. Almost across from the store was the old stone school, where Thomas Hume taught that generation the rudiments of knowledge.

Alex. Hume, well-known Ayrshire breeder of Menie, is a son of the late respected teacher. The late Rev. Dr. Robert Neill was pastor of St. Andrew's congregation, which was founded some few years before Mr. Oddie's birth. As a boy Mr. Oddie took part in the old-time farm operations where the modern conveniences were unheard of; the cradle and the scythe were the reapers, and the ox-cart the automobile of those days. Mr. Oddie now lives with his son, Percy, on Lot 26, Con. 6, the home where he raised a large family of boys and girls. His wife, who was a loving partner for over 63 years, passed away a few months ago. Mr. Oddie is still quite hale and hearty, and delights in doing odd chores about the place, is a great lover of books and newspapers, as well as taking a keen interest in the welfare of the grandchildren growing up about him.

William Stewart.

William Stewart, owner of Menie Stock Farm, well known over Canada and the United States as a veteran Ayrshire breeder and judge of dairy cattle, was born at Kingston on 2nd January, 1850, and is thus in his seventy-eighth year. When he was but two years of age his parents moved to the farm where he now resides. Some years previously they had settled on the farm now owned by George Wallace, but had returned some miles east of Kingston. About the time that the Stewart family settled in the Menie district several other well-known families made a start in the community among them the Walkers and Milnes. Nearly all the early settlers here were Aberdeen Scots. Mr. Stewart recalls the rough state of the country, and as a young lad around the years 1867 to 1870 he began his farming with old-time implements. He had dragged in turnip seed among the stumps with a brush harrow, and harvested a wonderful crop. The virgin soil was very rich, and there were few crop failures. Mr. Stewart's recollections of the Confederation year were mostly of local conditions as there were no manifestations of one kind or another in regard to the union. Shortly after the Confederation year Mr. Stewart made his first start in pure-bred Ayrshires, and has since built up the business which has made him famous.

In spite of his advancing years, Mr Stewart retains much of his boyish vigour, and still carries on the active management of a large dairy herd doing a full share of the milking and other farm work. He is glad to be able to celebrate this Diamond Jubilee of Canada's birth, and will doubtless live to see the nation grow for some years to come.

Canada's wheat yield last year of 17.8 bush. per acre, again led all countries.

Canada had her largest favorable trade balance last year, over $400,000,000.

CONFEDERATION

By Olive McMurray

Peterborough

The Confederation of British North America may be regarded as one of the most important events in the British Empire that have occurred during the 19th century. Its value cannot be over-estimated. For many years prior to its accomplishment the question of uniting the various provinces under one central government had been agitating the minds of leading statesmen throughout the country.

The difficulties in the path were tremendous. Foremost among these were the lack of communication between the provinces, and the differences in religion and in race. Railway facilities were meagre and the roads execrable.

We may well ask how, in the face of all these difficulties, was Confederation brought about? We shall find an answer to that question in the providential fact that at that time Canada held within its wide, though poorly populated borders, men of the keenest intellect and sturdiest loyalty. The leading figures in Upper Canada were Sir John A. Macdonald, Hon. George Brown, Sir Oliver Mowat, William McDougall, and John Sandfield Macdonald; Lower Canada was represented by Sir George E. Cartier, Alexander T. Galt, Thomas D'Arcy McGee, and Sir A. A. Dorion. From New Brunswick came Sir Leonard Tilley, Peter Mitchell and Albert J. Smith, whilst Nova Scotia boasted of Sir Charles Tupper, Joseph Howe and William Annand.

With such a galaxy of statesmanlike figures to ponder the question, it is easy to see how each successive argument was debated and settled. It needed vast patience, vast loyalty and a consuming faith in the future of the country, but our legislators were equal to the demands made upon them. Far beyond the petty squabblings, due to race and creed, they saw the spectacle of a glorious nation, imbued with the same grand principles of loyalty and dominated by the same high ideals of law and honour.

Those of us who are at all acquainted with the history of our country are aware that, for at least one hundred years, Canada progressed very, very slowly in population. The drawback was felt by every province and this was no small factor in bringing these men together to devise means of co-operation in order to bring prosperity to the country.

Let us take time to glance over the history of Canada up to this period.

Prior History.

From Champlain's founding of Quebec in 1608 to the end of the French Regime in 1763, those who had taken the greatest interest in the country were black-robed missionaries and traders; the former for the good of the people's souls and the latter for the sake of adventure and for the material benefit to themselves. Lord Dorchester was not long in charge of the colony before he laid the foundation for the Quebec Act in 1774, which authorized a council "to make laws for the welfare peace and good government of the province."

This was the beginning of self-government and the extreme wisdom of the leaders in the passing of this Act was shown in the fact that when the Americans tried to induce the French to join with them in the revolution against British rule, they met with refusal. This Act on the part of the Americans was the means of bringing the United Empire Loyalists to Canada, thereby increasing its population.

Canada later became involved in the Napoleonic Wars through the anger of the United States over the search of neutral vessels by British war-ships. In 1812, a struggle began which lasted until 1814. This war was not very conclusive, but it determined once and for all Canada's adherence to the British flag.

These inspiring events, however, did not keep Canada free from trouble within her borders. In her two provinces, Upper and Lower Canada, the main governing bodies, were the "Family Compacts." As these Compacts were composed chiefly of British statesmen who did not fully understand the needs of the colonists and did not adopt the proper methods of dealing with them, a great deal of difficulty was caused. The colonists thought it to be unfair that they should have such small representation in their own government. Inevitable political clashes followed and the result was that a number of extremists under William Lyon Mackenzie in Upper Canada and Louis Joseph Papineau in Lower Canada broke into armed rebellion in 1837.

The Rebellion, however, was short-lived, but, as a result of it, the British Government sent out Lord Durham, who sent in a report favoring the federation of all the British North American colonies. This was opposed by the Maritime provinces. Eventually, he recommended Responsible Government together with a union of the two Canadas. An Act authorizing this was passed in the year 1841.

This Act of Union, however, did not prove satisfactory owing to the fact that a clause in it provided that both provinces should elect the same number of members to the Legislative Assembly. But immigration to Upper Canada had increased its population to such an extent that more representation in the Legislature was demanded and this was resented by Lower Canada. It resulted in Legislature being suspended and trade becoming paralyzed.

At this time there was a great deal of talk concerning the terminating of the Reciprocity Treaty by the United States, due to her feeling of animosity toward Great Britain, and it was necessary that Canada should take some step toward the efficient defence of her country in case of war. She would also be compelled to look out for new channels of trade. The chaotic condition of the government and the reasons above specified were the principal factors in bringing the question of union to the front.

It happened that at this time a movement was taking place by which Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island were endeavoring to effect a union amongst themselves.

Sir Charles Tupper.

Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of this movement in Nova Scotia, was a foremost figure in the political advancement of his province. Although a doctor by profession, the practice of medicine played but a small part in his life. He entered politics in 1855, and from that time until his death, sixty years later, he worked unceasingly in the interests of the people.

He had a hard task in winning over his rebellious province to the idea of union and it was only his stubborn endurance which enabled him to win out after three years of unceasing struggle. It has been seen that Confederation was the result of a happy combination of brains and circumstances. In its accomplishment, Tupper ranks with Brown, Macdonald and Cartier.

The burden of the battle for union in New Brunswick fell upon the Liberal leader, Sir Leonard Tilley, once an apothecary's apprentice and later the premier of his province. Isolated and unprotected, New Brunswick early felt the need of union but it was really the promise of the Intercolonial Railway which influenced Tilley to fall in line with the other leaders of the movement. Tilley's opponents tried to win the people from him by arguing that a union would increase their taxes and it fell to Tilley to dispel this idea.

Charlottetown Conference.

A meeting, for the purpose of discussing union, was arranged to take place at Charlottetown in September, 1864. The Canadian Government seized upon this as an opportune time to bring forward a plan for the Confederation of the whole of Canada.

As has been seen, this was the point at which our Legislators showed their wisdom and foresight. The name of the Hon. George Brown, one of the leaders in Upper Canada, cannot be overlooked because of the important fact that although a bitter enemy of Sir John A. Macdonald, he put aside personal grievances and joined hands to make union possible. Brown very ably presented his arguments in favor of Confederation. He said: "It will raise us from the attitude of a number of small colonies into a great and powerful people; it will throw down the barriers of trade; it will make us the third maritime power in the world and give us a seaboard at all seasons of the year; it will increase the immigration to our country; we will be able to meet the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty without alarm, and, finally, in the event of war, it will enable all the colonies to defend themselves better and give more efficient aid to the Empire than they could separately."

Brown, with his father, founded "The Globe," and through its columns did not hesitate to ridicule any scheme of which he did not approve.

Difficulties in Lower Canada.

Almost insuperable difficulties had to be overcome in French Canada. Sir George E. Carter, leader of the Conservatives there, had, perhaps, one of the hardest tasks of all in persuading his French compatriots to join with their English neighbors. It required great tact, but so well did he advance his pleas that they at last saw the proposition through his eyes.

Accordingly, eight members of the combined ministry, including the leaders of both parties, repaired to Charlottetown and the Maritime provinces in advocacy of a larger scheme which should take in all the British colonies.

Because of the lack of communication, the Maritime Provinces were very much cut off from Ontario and Quebec and when the building of a railway was proposed, through union, they gladly assented and agreed to meet at Quebec in the following month for the purpose of conferring with the other representatives on the subject of a federal union of all the British North American Provinces.

Quebec Conference.

This Plenary Conference then assembled at Quebec on the 10th of October, 1864. It was composed of thirty-three members in all, under the presidency of Sir Etienne Tache, Prime Minister of Lower Canada.

It closed its session in Montreal, having adopted seventy-two resolutions defining the powers and functions of the General and Provincial Legislatures. These resolutions were approved of by the Canadian Parliaments and by the Legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland rejected the whole scheme.

London Conference.

At a further Conference held in London, England, these resolutions were incorporated in an Act known as the British North American Act which received the Royal Assent in 1867 and was brought into force by a Royal Proclamation which declared that: "After July 1, 1867, the Provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick should form and be one Dominion under the name of 'Canada'." The names, Upper and Lower Canada, were changed to 'Ontario' and 'Quebec.'

Let us for a moment take time to glance over the life-history of the man who stands out most clearly in the period of Canada's development, namely, Sir John A. Macdonald.

Sir John A. Macdonald did not have the advantages of high birth, family riches or great connections. To his own exertions alone did he owe his success.

At an early age he entered a law office and after six years' work was called to the bar. He entered Parliament in 1844 as leader of the Conservatives and remained there almost constantly until his death in 1891. Many indeed were the difficulties which lay before him.

What most appealed to Macdonald in a federal union were the national and imperial possibilities which he foresaw. He saw the possibility of building a nation to stand by Britain in peace and war, and during the recent Great War has not this foresight of his been nobly shown in Canada's ready answer to the Mother Country's appeal.

CHANGES IN PETERBOROUGH SINCE CONFEDERATION YEAR

(By F. H. Dobbin.)

It is quite possible that eighty per cent of the people now in Peterborough never looked, even in their junior years, on the town as it appeared in 1867. The community had experienced forty years of growth, dating from within a few years of the early settlement. The first seven years from the actual planting on the lands of the town plot counted for very little. It was just a trifle of pioneer existence and struggle. Then people came in and the infant community blossomed from a hamlet to the dimensions of a village, though it never had such a corporate existence. Its next step in municipal expansion was to put on the habiliments of a town, in the year 1850. And from that time forward are its doings and progress not written in the pages of its newspapers, those faithful and surprisingly accurate chroniclers of the days, weeks and years as they fly?

The newly-incorporated town had its ambition. It knew nothing of the quotation: "Unless the people have a vision they perish." What they longed for was a railroad, and if the town council of those early years ever offered up a prayer it surely would not close without some invocation that some beneficient hand would send along the iron rails and other fixings. The town had struck a stride, that reached its highest energy and altitude just about the year 1867. The lumber business, and the timber export were, so to write, the apple of its eye. Along the river were located ten immense saw mills; the waters of the stream was black with floating logs. The highly prized diversion of the youth was to swim out and straddle the pine logs floating with the current, to presently come to rest in some bend of the river and there rest until retrieved by peevey, pikepole, or cant-hook. These were the happy days. The boys of 1867 found their recreations and enjoyed sport, and never knew what it was to sit on the bleachers at a ball game.

From 1854 to 1858 the streets were thronged with wagons, hauled by big spotted Percheron horses, bringing the lumber to the wharves along the river, to be barged down the stream and across the lake and trucked to Cobourg for export. The town had never known a Charity Board or an Isolation Hospital. Work was aplenty and he who would not go to it had to do without eating, or put in time at the vicarious stone pile. All this lumber activity has dwarfed to small proportions, such as is manufactured being for purely local consumption.

In the sixty years that have flown the town plot has changed to a very large extent. That is as to what had been built and in regard to municipal changes incurred in the years, for as the community grew it outgrew its conveniences and asked for larger and better. At one time the supreme wish was to find enough money to keep on replacing the nine bridges that gave access to and across the "creek." It was the want of money, denied by the township of N. Monaghan, to build these bridges that incited the split in friendly connection, as early as 1847, and culminated in the incorporation of the town.

Let us take a running glance at the affairs as they stood when Confederation stepped in, July 1st, 1867. The excitement over that Great Adventure, the Fenian Raid, had cooled down, but the volunteer movement, at the time a very vital thing, demanded a drill hall, and one it should have. The 57th Regiment (or rather battalion), was a crack corps, and the best was none too good for the "Rangers." What we now term Central Park, was a rather desolate appearing piece of property, having been used for the purposes of the Agricultural Society, and showing remnants of the uses. As a site for the drill hall it was most conveniently situated, and being, mutually, not county and town property, a site could be had for nothing. So the citizens set to work and wormed the money out of those who would contribute, a grant from the Government, and the hall was put up and formally opened on November 13th, 1867. What memories centre around that old structure! The soul of comradeship. The meeting place of hearty and virile men. The old building disappeared one windy night just as the new armouries were ready for occupation.

The site of the public library was occupied by a wooden building, Mocock's axe factory, in 1867, a local industry that presently became extinct. The ground which George Street Union Church now graces, held the home of William Cluxton, and the congregation worshipped in the old and venerable building across the street, for seven years after 1867, before moving to the larger and more commodious premises. The entire education requirements of the town were met when Murray Street School was put up and opened in 1861. Its inside convenience and bright, cheery appearance almost bewildered the scholars, accustomed to the dreary walls of the old and decrepit church, at the corner of Hunter and Sheridan Streets.

The west side of George Street, from Charlotte Street to the south, had very few buildings, save the old stone hotel, still refreshed and brightened in its older years. Below the Comstock building, on the east side, George Street held only the Hamilton Foundry plant. The ground on George Street from Sherbrooke Street down to Lake Street was tenantless save for the home of Thomas Leonard, perched over the river near Dalhousie Street. The site of the C.P.R. Station was a veritable swamp, and not much of a swamp at that. Where the station stands was a cavity, needing much filling. The ground covered by the Ackerman buildings was a sort of corporation storage yard, where they put the snow ploughs in summer and wagons in winter, and any old plank and debris. Municipalities, like women, have a fashion of keeping things long after usefulness has passed.

At the Hunter Street crossing of the river was the old Howe truss wooden bridge, a well built structure, put up in 1847 by public subscription, made of the very best of timber and plank. The whole side of the western slope of what was called the Court House hill, was bare, where now the immense plant and buildings of the Quaker Oats Company fill the landscape. From Murray Street north, following the bend of the river, were many factories and flour mills. Davidson, Meldrim Co., Brodie Co., Rombough's wood working shops, etc. All perished in the successive fires that swept the neighborhood.

Venerable old St. Andrew's Church stood on the block where it is now replaced by the fine structure afterwards built. St. Peter's Church has changed little, except that during the eighties the transcept was added and considerable improvement done. St. John's Church looked just the same, only that the grounds have been improved and additions made to the parish hall, and other changes. Where Murray Street Baptist Church graces the south side of Murray Street stood Yelland's blacksmith shop. The old Bible Christian Church, a frame and plaster structure, that covered the now Canadian Legion Hall ground, has been moved across the lot and gently lowered to the level of Aylmer Street, and rejuvenated into two commodious dwellings.

Ontario After Sixty Years

At Confederation Ontario had a population of 1,600,000, mostly farmers. The largest urban community was Toronto which had just passed 50,000. In 1821 Hamilton had 26,716; Ottawa, 21,545; London, 15,826. In the older sections of the southern peninsula many families had come to prosperity and a few to affluence, but in the region around the shores of Lake Huron and Georgian Bay pioneer conditions still prevailed. "The Queen's Bush," which was the hinterland of Owen Sound, was then considered as a "New Ontario" and it beckoned to the adventurous youth of the older countries.

The great region north of Lake Huron and Lake Superior had only 5,007 people in 1867. Bruce Mines, with a population of 1,298, was its metropolis. That same district to-day is the home of 176,358 people and includes the three fine cities of Fort William, Port Arthur and Sault Ste. Marie. In 1927 there are more people in the twenty-six cities and in the larger towns of Ontario than were to be found in the whole Province of sixty years ago. There has been no marked increase in the rural areas; indeed, some counties have fewer people than at Confederation. But if anyone is concerned about "rural depopulation" he will find his pessimism abated by a glance at the comparative crop-returns.

The land now under cultivation is about 10,500,000 acres as compared with about 6,000,000 acres in 1867. According to the Dominion Census of 1871 the production of wheat, barley, oats, rye, peas, beans, buckwheat, corn, potatoes and roots made a grand total of 100,174,453 bushels. In 1926 the Province raised 225,163,713 bushels of the same commodities, and in addition 26,877,629 bushels of mixed grains, 1,810,392 tons of alfalfa, and nearly 1,000,000 tons of alsike and sweet clover. The value of farm property has doubled. A lively home market has been developed. Modern methods and machinery have made farming easier. The labor of one man produces more than the labor of two or three men in 1867.

Industrial production has been greatly stimulated by the generation and distribution of hydro-electric energy, which has been a profitable substitute for coal. In 1871 products of the factories of Ontario had a value of $114,708,799; in 1925 they had a value of $1,451,883,308. The growth of manufacturing has greatly enlarged the cities. Toronto of 1927 is twelve times its size in 1867. Scores of towns have increased seven or eight fold within sixty years. With the growth of the cities has come a larger educational and cultural opportunity. The University of Toronto has 6,000 students, and both Queen's and Western Universities serve a growing student body.

Before Confederation the mineral production of the Province was not imposing. The copper deposits of the North Shore had been worked since 1847 but not with any marked profit. Gold had been discovered in Madoc, and the oil wells of Lambton County were producing bountifully. During the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1885 the nickel-copper orebook of Sudbury was discovered, and the rich silver and gold deposits of the Timiscaming region were revealed in the early part of this century. Last year the mineral products of Ontario had a value of $87,583,306.

During the last Session of the Legislature the Provincial Treasurer estimated the wealth of the Province as follows: Value of Crown timber, $4,800,000,000. Property assessed by municipalities, $2,600,000,000; mineral wealth, $2,000,000,000. Crown lands undeveloped, $230,000,000; fish, game and fur, $200,000,000; water-powers, $150,000,000. The railway mileage within the Province has increased from 2,000 to 11,000 miles since 1867.

Wireless apparatus is now installed in 3,500,000 British homes.

Hydro-Electric Development

By Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of the Interior

A year of widespread activity in the field of hydro-electric and water-power development in Canada is again evident from the review prepared by the Dominion Water Power and Reclamation Service of the Department of the Interior. The total additional installation throughout the Dominion did not reach the record figure of the preceding year, but it was nevertheless substantial, being just slightly under 266,000 horse-power which brings the total installation in Canada to 4,556,000.

While the figure of the actual installation is substantial it falls far short of indicating the magnitude of constructional activity during the year. Projects are actually under way, a number being near completion, which will ultimately add to the Dominion's total more than 1,700,000 horse-power while others in active prospect promise a further addition in excess of 1,000,000 horse-power. These figures combined would represent at the very least a direct investment of $270,000,000 regardless of the new capital required in the application of the power.

In the Trent Valley the Quinte and Trent Valley Power Company completed two developments, one at Campbellford with 1,100 h.p. and the second at Frankford with 2,980 h.p., the power being used in those localities.

In Northern Ontario the Abitibi Power and Paper Company completed the transmission line from its 48,000 h.p. plant at Island Falls on the Abitibi River to the mills at Iroquois Falls, and energy was delivered during the year. The Town of Cochrane is also served from this line. A short distance to the west the Spruce Falls Company commenced the construction of a development at Smoky Falls on the Mattagami River which will probably have an installition of 70,000 h.p. and will supply energy to the Company's pulp and paper mills in the district.

In the extreme westerly part of the province the Keewatin Power Company completed its 17,000 h.p. development at the Western Outlet of the Lake of the Woods, the figures for which were included in the 1925 total. In the same district the Backus Brooks Company commenced the construction of three developments on the Seine River which will have a total capacity of 37,620 h.p. Two of these plants are well advanced and all are to be completed during 1927. The power will be transmitted to Fort Frances for use in the pulp and paper mills at that place.

Quebec's Notable Progress.

Water-power activities in Quebec province continued on a large scale during 1926 and while the total of some 168,000 h.p. actually placed in operation fell short of that of the record year 1925, developments now under construction represent a future addition of more than 1,400,000 h.p. which indicates that progress has not slackened.

The hydro-electric activities of the Canadian International Paper Company in the Hull district are outstanding among the year's developments. The Company started construction of a large electrically driven pulp and paper mill at Gatineau, Quebec, a short distance east of Hull, and though its subsidiary, the Gatineau Power Company, of three important hydro-electric developments on the Gatineau River, namely, 120,000 h.p. at Farmer's Rapids, 170,000 h.p. at Chelsea and 240,000 h.p. at Paugan Falls. The first two plants are practically completed, the first unit to be placed in operation at the beginning of 1927, while work on the Paugan plant has been recently commenced. These plants are to supply the Company's pulp and paper mill and as previously mentioned, a large block is to go to the Niagara system of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission. This Company is also taking an active part in the construction of the Baskatong storage reservoir on the Gatineau River under the direction of the Quebec Streams Commission.

In the Lake St. John district the Duke-Price Power Company has added two units of 45,000 h.p. each to the Ile Maligne development on the Saguenay River; the present installation now totals 450,000 h.p. while the ultimate capacity is to be 540,000 h.p. Preliminary construction is being continued on the 800,000 h.p. development of the Aluminum Company of Canada at Chute-a-Caron on the Saguenay. A very notable feature of this district has been the establishment of new industries attracted by the remarkable power facilities offered by these most advantageous sites. The Aluminum Company is already operating its reduction works at the new Town of Arvida, while a number of large pulp and paper mills and a $12,000,000 electro-metallurgical plant are either under construction or projected. The construction of a 168,000-volt transmission line is well under way to connect the Duke-Price Power Plant with the Shawinigan system at Quebec City.

The Shawinigan Water and Power Company through its subsidiary the North Shore Power Company, placed in operation a new development of 22,200 h.p. at St. Narcisse on the Batiscan River, replacing a 1,600 h.p. installation reputed to be the first in the British Empire to supply energy over long distance transmission.

Other hydraulic installation placed in operation during the year include a 36,800 h.p. addition to the Kipawa plant of the Canadian International Paper Company; the addition of 800 h.p. to the Ont Rouge plant of the Donnacona Paper Company; a 2,000 h.p. addition to the Electric Reduction Company's plant at Buckingham, a new development of 515 h.p. on the Little Blanche River by the Papineauville Lumber Company and a 72 h.p. plant at Mastai in connection with hospital work.

A fifty-mile transmission line has just been completed from the Quinze power plant of the Canada Northern Power Company to supply the Rouyn Mining field of Northern Quebec. A fairly extensive rural electric supply system has also been completed on the Island of Orleans by the Montmorency Electric Company, the energy being secured from the Quebec Power Company.

The Ontario Paper Company has under construction a 40,000 h.p. development on the Outardes River and installed a unit of 1,300 h.p. during 1926 to supply power for construction purposes.

At St. Alban on the Ste. Anne-Perade River the Shawinigan Water and Power Company has started the construction of a 4,000 h.p. development which replaces an older installation of 750 h.p. at that place.

The town of Coaticook has almost completed a 2,000 h.p. plant within the town on the Coaticook River, replacing four smaller installations which aggregated 570 h.p.

In the Laurentian district north of Montreal the Quebec Southern Power Corporation has acquired the St. Jerome Municipal plant and is increasing the installation of its Rodon plant from 300 h.p. to 2,500 h.p.; the ultimate installation to be 7,500 h.p. The corporation has also added 100 miles of transmission lines to its system which now totals 270 miles.

Other additions which are practically completed include improvements to the Montreal Cotton Company's plant at Valleyfield to increase its capacity to 12,000 h.p. and 1,200 h.p. added to the Paton Woollen Mills at Sherbrooke.

Numerous New Prospects.

Projects which are under active consideration include a 65,000 h.p. development on the Prairie River near Montreal by the Power Corporation of Canada, a 50,000 h.p. development at Spicer Fall on the St. Francois River by the Southern Canada Power Company, a new or additional installation of from 4,000 to 9,000 h.p. by the Donaco Paper Company on the Jacques Cartier River; the development of 3,000 h.p. at the Westbury site on the St. Francois River by the City of Sherbrooke; a 40,000 h.p. plant at Mountain Fall on the Rouge River by the Canadian International Paper Company; 16,000 h.p. on Mille Isles River near Terrebonne to supply a pulp mill; a 50,000 h.p. addition to the River Power Company's plant at Bryson on the Ottawa River; the distant possibility of a 10,000 h.p. to 20,000 h.p. plant on Mistassini River in connection with the Mistassini Pulp and Power Company's paper mill, which for the present, may be supplied with power from the Duke-Price Power Company; and a possible development of several thousand horse-power at Ste. Ursule Falls on the Maskinonge River.

Projects for the development of power along the Ottawa River have also recently been active. The Carillon site, which has been leased by the Quebec and Ontario Governments, is spoken of for early development. The Quebec portion of Chats Falls has also been leased by the Quebec provincial authorities.

The Quebec Streams Commission continued its beneficial work which so enhances and encourages water-power development throughout the province. The Commission now has extensive storage reservoirs in operation on the St. Maurice and the St. Francois Rivers, Genogami Lake, Ste. Anne-de-Beaupre and Mitis Rivers, all of which are at present reported filled to capacity, the various plants affected being assured of an ample supply of water during the coming winter. The Commission now has under its supervision the construction of the Baskatong reservoir on the Gatineau River, expected to be completed before the end of the present winter season, this includes Baskatong Lake and is to have a capacity of 94 billion cubic feet to regulate the flow to 8,000 cubic feet per second. The existing storage system on the North River comprising three lakes was also recently taken over by the Commission with the intention of improving the same in the near future. Further studies were made of the Mekinac storage on the lower St. Maurice including additional borings, and it has now been decided to proceed with construction next spring at a cost of some $600,000. Other work includes storage surveys on the Batiscan River Basin; a summary investigation of the Magiscan watershed for power and storage, a power site investigation on Rimouski River and a storage reservoir survey on Sud River.

New Brunswick Began by Projects.

The net increase of 2,600 h.p. in the total installation in New Brunswick was accounted for in the plant of the Maine and New Brunswick Electrical Power Company at Aroostook Falls on the Aroostook River. This was occasioned by the replacement of a unit in the plant by one of larger capacity.

Of outstanding importance was the initiation of work at Grand Falls on the St. John River. At this site which is the largest in the Maritime provinces, actual development was commenced during the month of August by the St. John River Power Company. The scheme calls for an initial installation of 60,000 h.p. in three units of 20,000 h/p. each and involves the erection of a dam just above the falls, a tunnel through the rock under the town and a power house in the lower basin which will operate under a head of 130 feet. The power will be used principally in newsprint mills to be erected by the New Brunswick International Paper Company and the Fraser Companies Limited. In addition a block of power has been reserved for the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission.

The New Brunswick Electric Power Commission has built a new concrete dam at Loch Alva in connection with its Musquask development. In connection also with the Musquash system a transmission line was built from Moncton to Shediac and another line of 35 miles is about to be built to Blacks Harbor. The Commission is at present carrying out an investigation of the power site known as Meductic Falls on the St. John River about forty miles above Fredericton.

The Bathurst Company Limited has made investigations on the Nipisiguit River with respect to both power and storage which may ultimately result in the development of some 40,000 h.p. for use in the Company's pulp and paper mills.

Nova Scotia Plans for Future.

In Nova Scotia the Nova Scotia Power Commission has added a unit of 300 h.p. to its Mushamush development and is negotiating with the town of Mahone to take over the town's plant. The Commission is building two new storage dams on the East River Sheet Harbour and is co-operating with the Pictou County Board in the construction of a transmission line from Stellarton to serve the communities of Eureka and Hopewell.

The Digby County Power Board has under construction a hydro-electric plant of 330 h.p. at the upper falls on the Sissiboo River, from which a transmission line of 32 miles, will deliver power to the towns of Weymouth, Digby and Smith's Cove.

The Digby County Power Board has under construction a hydro-electric plant of 330 h.p. at the upper falls on the Sissiboo River, from which a transmission line of 32 miles will deliver power to the towns of Weymouth, Digby and Smith's Cove.

Prospective developments in the province include the Sand Lake stage of the St. Margaret's Bay development for the Nova Scotia Power Commission to meet the growing load in Halifax; a development on the Medway River by the Commission for the initial supply of about 2,500 h.p. to the Scott Paper Company for a ground wood mill; a development of 3,000 h.p. at Avon River Falls for the Avon River Power Company and a further development on the West Branch of the Tusket River to supply the town of Yarmouth.

Altogether the activities for the year 1926 have been on a scale larger than any yet recorded throughout the Dominion and as new hydro-electric development inevitably results in the expansion of industry there is every indication of industrial progress during the coming years.—In "The Montreal Herald."

Vision

TO the men of vision all the world is indebted. To the race of pioneers in every age, in every nation and in every line of human endeavour, both honour and respect are due.

Particularly, at this sixtieth anniversary of Canada's nationhood, should we remember, with pride and gratitude, the men whose foresight and unfailing courage made our Dominion a reality.

And, as to them, let us also pay tribute to the host of others—unknown to history—who faced the perils and discouragements of the early days to hew a civilization from the wilderness, to establish for Canada her place among the nations of the world. Their work has borne rich fruitage in the progress of the Dominion—such progress as is evidenced by the stupendous development of electric power, one of the greatest factors in Canada's national and industrial prosperity.

The spirit which moved in the hearts of all these men still lives—still calls today, as it did in those early days, to the man of vision—still challenges the hopes and aspirations of youth.

And there are still men to answer the call—to catch the vision—to accept the challenge. For Canada's life is but beginning; illimitable possibilities stretch out before us; a noble past points to a yet more glorious future, the most alluring future any nation has ever known—and Canada's sons of widest vision are they whose eyes are open to the golden opportunities of their homeland.

Canada's Great Resources

Per Capita Utilization of Water Power is three times that of United States

It has been said that Canada as a whole is really much younger commercially than politically. Her mere surface area of land and water amounts to three and three-quarter million square miles. The Prairie Provinces produce nearly over 600,000,000 bushels of wheat and oats as a contribution to the food supply of the world, and little more than one-fifth of the total 300,000,000 acres believed to be fit for agricultural purposes have been placed under field crops. The remaining four-fifths are capable of sustaining many added millions of population, and they include an immense acreage already ripe for settlement.

The forest areas stand second only to arable lands among the basic resources of the Dominion, and forest industries have been surpassed by agriculture alone in fostering commercial growth. Even the work of ascertaining the actual extent of her commercial forests is still far from complete at a rough estimate approximately one-quarter (600,000,000 acres) of the total land area in the Dominion is covered by forest growth. British Columbia contains over two-thirds of the merchantable saw-timber of Canada; the forests of the Middle West will probably be required to supply the local demand; two-thirds of the newsprint paper consumed in the United States is either of Canadian manufacture or is made from wood or woodpulp imported from Quebec, Ontario, New Brunswick and British Columbia.

The actual extent of Canada's water-powers, like that of its forests, has been by no means fully ascertained, but the available and developed horse-power (water-power) is reckoned to be over thirty million, over four and a half million of which are already installed, namely, in Ontario and Quebec—Ontario having the largest hydro-electric distributing system known. The figures show that Canada ranks second only to Norway in the per capita utilization of water-power and the average is more than three times that of the United States. There are millions of water horse-power now under development about Lake St. John and the Gatineau River in Quebec; while the horse-power of such rivers as the Nelson and Churchill, to say nothing of those in northern Saskatchewan and Alberta, run into more millions, which will, one day, be harnessed and transmitted far and wide.

Few countries possess greater coal resources than Canada, which is estimated to possess one-sixth of the total amount of coal in the world. Long before the exceptional production stimulated by the War, the Dominion had become the world's principal source of nickel, asbestos and cobalt, and an important producer of gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc and a number of rarer metals. Five of the nine provinces of the Dominion share substantially in mining activity, although Ontario leads her sisters by a considerable margin.

Not only on the Atlantic but also on the Pacific Coast and in her fresh water areas Canada possesses fisheries of exceptional value. Two of the four great sea fishing areas of the world border on the Dominion, and, in addition, her lakes and rivers constitute approximately one-half of the fresh water of the globe, while the great inland sea of Hudson's Bay, still practically untouched, can be regarded as a reserve. The Atlantic coast line measures over 5,000 miles; the Pacific shore line, over 7,000 miles; the fresh water lakes of the interior constitute an area of 220,000 square miles.

Every province shares substantially in the returns derived from fur resources, and every effort is being made through the enforcement of trapping restrictions, the creation of sanctuaries, the supervision of the fur trade and close study of the annual catch, to guard against depletion.

Canada's Sea Fisheries are among the greatest in the world, comprising 12,500 miles of indented coastline on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans prolific with edible fish, and also 200,000 square miles of interior fresh waters, or more than half of the fresh water of the globe. The fertility of Canadian waters is indicated by the fact that the entire catch of salmon, lobsters, herring mackerel and sardines, nearly all the haddock, and many of the cod, hake and pollock landed are taken within ten or twelve miles from shore. Production value has risen from $6,500,000 to nearly $50,000,000.

Underground Cathedrals

House the Material That Supplies One of Peterborough's Live Manufactories.

A noted architect was visiting our quarries at West Rutland, Vt. He had picked his way down the two hundred feet of stairs, and was gazing out into the long stretches of vaulted tunnel. A warm subdued light from the opening above gave a touch of color to the massive marble pillars which support the roof-stone. In the far corners of the quarry, where the men were at work. the electric lights flashed out in the gloom like half-lighted candles.

"This isn't a quarry," he exclaimed. "It's a great underground cathedral."

So much for imagination. The fact which supplements the story is that from these openings in the Vermont mountains comes the material of which cathedrals and other large structures are built. There it is also that the finest of cemetery memorials have their beginning . The Vermont quarries have been producing marble for a hundred and sixty years.

Peterborough has been selected as the home of this healthy Canadian company, whose product, manufactured by Canadian workmen, reaches from one end of the Dominion to the other.

CONFEDERATION by O. McM.

Personally, Macdonald had a most lovable character. His popularity among the people, his winning personality and his clearness of speech, together with his master mind in settling difficulties, all made him a commanding figure. The Canadian Pacific Railway and many other monuments are left to us by which we may remember his constructive genius and his far-sighted leadership.

At his death in 1891 the outburst of grief was universal. At the unveiling of the monument erected in his memory at Westminster Abbey, Lord Roseberry, among other words of praise, said, "We know nothing of party politics in Canada on this occasion. We recognize only this, that Sir John A. Macdonald had grasped the central idea that the British Empire is the greatest secular agency for good now known to mankind; that that was the secret of his success and that he determined to die under it and strove that Canada should live under it."

How fittingly did these words apply to perhaps the greatest "Father of Confederation." The early years of Confederation under Sir John A. Macdonald were of somewhat stormy character owing to the agitation in Nova Scotia for the repeal of the union and also to the North-West Rebellion of 1870 arising out of the transfer of the enormous territories of the Hudson Bay Company to the new Dominion. This transfer, however, became effective and Manitoba was admitted into Confederation as the fifth province of the Dominion.

In 1871, British Columbia entered the union upon an agreement that a railway be built within a certain period of time to connect it with the other provinces. Prince Edward Island joined in 1873. In the year 1880 all British possessions in North America were annexed to Canada by Imperial Order. This Order also extended the Dominion into the Arctic regions. Newfoundland alone still remains under a separate government.

About the middle of the premiership of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were formed from the old Hudson Bay territory.

Since Confederation there has taken place a gradual development of the powers of the Canadian Government, due, in part, to a more liberal attitude among British statesmen. The name, "Colonial Conference," was changed to Imperial Conferenee. Later, during the Great War, an "Imperial Conference" was held, and it was composed of members of the British War Cabinet and the Prime Ministers of the self-governing Dominions. At the close of the war, on the initiative of Sir Robert Borden, then Prime Minister of Canada, the Dominions were accepted as members of the "League of Nations," since which time a Canadian Minister of the Crown, the Hon. Raoul Dandurand, has acted as President of the Assembly of this League. The present position of Canada was clearly defined at the Imperial Conference of 1926, which was attended by the Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Premier of Canada, and Hon. Ernest Lapointe, Minister of Justice, on behalf of Canada.

The Report of the Inter-Imperial Relations Committee recommended that in future the Governor-General should be regarded as the personal representative of the Crown rather than as an official of the Government of Great Britain and that the Dominions might have their own representatives in foreign countries. The Committee also agreed "that the self-governing Dominions, within the British Empire, were on an equal basis and were in no way subordinate to one another in either external or domestic affairs. They were united by a common allegiance to the Crown and had an equal membership in the "British Commonwealth of Nations."

To-day we have two governments, Dominion and Provincial. The public works, cash assets and other property, except lands, mines, minerals and royalties are looked after by the Dominion, which is, in turn, responsible for the debts of the provinces. Since the main revenues of the provinces have been taken away, the Dominion pays annual subsidies for the support of their legislatures. These subsidies have from time to time been increased.

The growth of Canada's population of late years has been rapid, and this naturally turns our minds to the industries which have made such an increase possible.

Our country is rich in her natural resources and the uniting of the provinces has enabled the Government to raise sufficient funds by which these resources may be developed. We are proud of our agricultural lands, our forests, fisheries, minerals, water-power and fur industries.

The great natural resources, the increase in population and the advances made in industrial methods have all led to a desire for greater trade with foreign countries, which, in turn, demand more extensive facilities of transportation. It was the Intercolonial Railway joining Ontario and Quebec with the Maritime Provinces which set the seal to Confederation and the promise of another, the Canadian Pacific, which was later constructed under the presidency of Sir George Stephen and Lord Strathcona, that assured the entrance of our western provinces. To-day, Canada possesses the most extensive railway system of any country of its population in the world. Our two great railway systems are the largest single employers of labor in the Dominion.

Many canals have been built and these have proven to be a valuable asset in shortening the transportation routes.

Too numerous to mention here are the many advances which have been made within the last sixty years. Perhaps our advance in education may be considered as one of the most important. The first census taken after Confederation, showed that twenty per cent of the people were illiterate, in the sense of not being able to read or write. In 1921, the proportion of illiterates over twenty-one years of age was but five per cent in a population approaching nine millions.

When all these facts are taken into consideration, have we not great grounds for thankfulness in being natives of such a great country and heirs to such a glorious inheritance?

Confederation of the British Empire

(J. H. Burnham.)

Although November, 1926, was the date of the meeting of the delegates to the Imperial Conference in London, the year 1927 is necessarily the year of the proclamation of the findings and conclusions of that conference and of the announcement to the world that the British Empire in its modernized and fully developed form has been established.

Hitherto what was called the British Empire has been the United Kingdom first and the rest nowhere. In other words, what were known as British possessions outside the United Kingdom had more or less local powers of domestic legislation but the last word concerning it and them lay with the United Kingdom, that is, the British parliament. Colonies were what the dominions were then called and, broadly speaking, all British possessions throughout the world were in effect and in fact that is de jure and de facto British in the restricted United Kingdom, or rather Great Britain sense of that word. The "possessions" had no right to be consulted.

The rise and development of some of the (dominion) possessions, however, made it quite clear to everybody concerned, as time went on, that those possessions now known as dominions must be given equality of status in the Empire with the United Kingdom. Either that or independence. The chains that linked these dominions to the Empire must be those of sentiment only, and no longer those of British right of possession.

The granting of equality of status proved, however, so difficult in working out both for dominion statesmen and those of Britain that it was not accomplished till 1927 when it was agreed by the delegates to the conference that the dominions and Great Britain should have complete independence of each other, except that no one of them should pass legislation hostile to or repugnant to the plain interests and good feeling of the others.

This limitation does not prevent the United Kingdom or any dominion from leaving the Empire altogether, but it does prevent Great Britain and the dominions from remaining in the Empire and doing as they please without regard to the interests and well-being of the others.

The symbol of empire membership and empire unity is the King and an imperial flag yet to be devised. The fact that no dominion can pass legislation repugnant to Great Britain is mistaken for a contradiction of equality of status, but, as a matter of fact, this repugnancy applies equally to the relations of all the other parts of the Empire which have equality of status. There are a few apparent anomalies yet remaining and that probably will remain, but by request of the parts of the Empire concerned and not otherwise, such as the right of appeal in Canada to the Privy Council at London which Quebec regards as a guarantee of her provincial autonomy. Hence, this year we are called upon to celebrate the Jubilee of Confederation of Canada and of the new British Empire as well.

When, therefore, the Empire is established as it now is, as a body or league of friendly nations under a common monarch and a common flag of empire, yet independent of each other except insofar as mutual voluntary limitations such as we have described are concerned, the question arises, how will these nations confer for united action when necessary? Manifestly by imperial conferences which may or may not be of a secret and confidential character. If one part of the empire should go to war and others did not (as at present), that would in no way mean a disruption of the empire unless it was plainly meant to be so by those standing out. If, however, as in the late war, all parts of the empire wished to join they would make their arrangements accordingly for either several or united action, each being equipped as nations friendly to each other desirous of co-operating would materially be equipped. The Allies themselves afforded in the Great War an example of such an eventuality.

In peace, similarly, arrangements can be made for commercial and consular agents yet so as not to duplicate unnecessarily.

So far, we have dealt with only the material interests of that Grand Alliance known as the British Empire. The far greater, if less absolutely necessary interests are now given such an opportunity as they never had before.

One can not part with this magnificent transformation with such an imposing future without sympathizing to a certain extent with what they speak of (sub rosa) in England as their colonial "poor relations," the ultra-loyal remnant. These estimable people rejoiced in their privilege of being relations, poor and powerless though they might be, and preferred the patronizing fondness of the great to that upstanding manliness and equality of citizenship which England herself prizes most of all. This privilege of being a poor but proud relation passes with the equality of status, but we can only hope that time will heal the wound and prepare them the better to take their place alongside the mother of us all instead of hanging heavily to her dear old apron-strings. Louis was King of France. Napoleon took rather the title of Emperor of the French, and thus the glow of French civilization circulated freely throughout the world and made of the French everywhere the imperial race they are.

Equality of status, however, does not mean necessarily equality in all things, and so long as this fact is borne in mind the supremacy of the Home Country may continue to attract our loyalty and admiration for centuries to come as it has done for centuries in the past. While the American Union owes its existence to the Civil War, the British Empire must owe its existence to the sentiment of solidarity and to the conviction that in no other way can the wishes and most and best desires of its components be adequately expressed.

Many of the Most Important Minerals Found In Peterboro County

Gold, Silver, Iron, Marble, Magnetic Ore Here And In Neighboring County.

The opinion is often advanced that Canada is likely to become the leading mineral producing country in the world, and considerable ground for this assumption is found in the fact that the Dominion contains 16 per cent of the world's known coal resources, has greater asbestos, nickel and cobalt deposits than any other country, and ranks third in the production of gold, while the diversity of mineral endowment is indicated by the fact that the three main divisions, metallic, non-metallic and structural and clay products, include some 60 principal items, 20 of which had each during recent years a production valued at $1,000,000 or over.

While Peterborough cannot be regarded as one of the leading mining districts of the Dominion, it is a fact that many of Canada's most important minerals are found within its boundaries, although it must be confessed, in many cases, the minerals do not exist in quantities which would make their exploitation commercially profitable. There are not wanting, however, optimists among us, who believe that rich treasures lie in the bowels of the earth underlying this county, awaiting the drill of the fortunate prospector.

Both precious metals have been found in the county, and in the case of one mine in the eastern section, high hopes were entertained of an era of mining prosperity, but so far this has failed to materialize.

Perhaps the most aggressive policy of developing the gold mines of this district was that which was undertaken by a number of Scottish capitalists who prosecuted the work with considerable energy for several years at the beginning of the present century at Cordova in the township of Belmont. A very expensive plant was installed and ore in paying quantities was taken out for several years but in 1905 the company, after a series of reverses and disappointments, suspended operations.

Expectations of a gold rush, following the discovery many years ago, of the most precious metal at Gilmour were not realized. A company was formed to develop the prospect, but the mine did not pay and the owners were forced to close down.

The existence of iron ores in Peterborough and adjoining counties is a fact that has long been known and the day when these deposits would be worked at a profit was one that was looked for for many years. One of the most widely known of the mines of this district of Central Ontario is the group known as the Blairton mines situated about six miles east of Havelock and about three-quarters of a mile north of Marmora. The first attempt to operate these mines was made over fifty years ago—long before the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which now runs so near the mines. The expense of operating the mines under those adverse conditions then prevailing was so great that in course of time the effort was abandoned. Forty years later, with the advent of newer and cheaper processes of smelting, and an adequate system of transportation, the Blairton Mines were again taken over by another company, the Hamilton Iron Works Company, which carried on the mine for some years until diminishing returns necessitated a close-down of the mines.

Large deposits of marble near Bancroft in Hastings county, close to the Peterborough boundary, attracted the attention of Toronto capitalists and a company was formed—the Hodge Marble Company—which erected large buildings, installed a great deal of machinery, and employed a considerable number of men in quarrying operations. The marble of the district has many commendable qualities: its color is attractive and it takes on a fine polish.

Another discovery which received widespread publicity was that of a deposit of magnetic ore of the finest quality on a farm in lot 12, concession 3 of Marmora.

On several occasions in the past oil and gas have been discovered in Douro. An important discovery was made on September 16, 1914, at the home of Michael McCann, blacksmith, who, in boring for a well, struck gas at a depth of 80 feet. The gas lit up brilliantly when a match was applied and was allowed to burn for four hours before the significance of the discovery was realized.

Another flow of gas on the fifth concession of Douro drew attention to the gas resources of the farming township. A drilling machine was brought into commission, and the pipe which had reached a depth of 62 feet when the discovery was made was driven down to 75 feet. Although the five-inch pipe was plugged with a wooden stop, there was sufficient gas escaping around it to cause considerable illumination when it was ignited.

In June, 1913, while boring for water on his farm, W. J. McManus, concession 2, Douro, discovered natural gas at the depth of 75 feet. The gas flowed freely and when a match was applied burned brightly for two hours, after which the pipe was plugged. Bystanders were able to hear quite distinctly the sound of the gas as it "bubbled" in the earth.

Salt and gas have been found at different places around the Warsaw district and in 1912 Finnely J. Forsyth organized a company to drill, and prospect for oil, gas, salt and other minerals. The results achieved did not equal those which were the outcome of less effort and expenditure in other parts of Ontario, but even to-day there are hopeful prospectors quietly working around the thinly populated areas in the district and it may be that one day a strike will be made which will startle the entire province. At any rate, one fact is very clear, the last chapter of Peterborough's mining history will not be written for many years to come.

Lord Carnarvon, in introducing the Canadian Confederation Bill in the House of Lords: 'We are laying the foundation of a great state—perhaps one which at a future day may even overshadow this country, but, come what may, we shall rejoice that we have shown neither indifference to their wishes nor jealousy to their aspirations, but that we honestly and sincerely to the utmost of our power and knowledge fostered their growth, recognizing in it the conditions of our own greatness. We are in this measure setting the crown to the free institutions which more than a quarter of a century ago we gave them, and therein we remove, as I firmly believe, all passibility of future jealousy or misunderstanding."

A conference was held at Quebec in 1864 to discuss the larger project, which resolved "that the best interests and present and future prosperity of British North America will be promoted by a federal union under the Crown of Great Britian, provided such union can be effected in principles just to the several provinces."

As Canada has grown and developed since confederation, so the Peterboro Milk Products has kept pace with modern advancement since its inception.

Established as a creamery in 1906 by Downham, who died in 1910, the business was then purchased by Mr. G. A. Gillespie, its present head. In 1911 an Ice Cream plant was added, and in 1913 a milk delivery was started. The next change came in 1918, when the business was incorporated as Peterboro Milk Products, Limited.

There are now 45 employees on the pay roll, and the annual turnover is HALF A MILLION.

At present the firm manufactures

CHEESE, BUTTER, ICE CREAM, CONDENSED MILK AND PASTEURIZED CITY MILK.

All Products are Pasteurized, except Cheese, which process it has not been found necessary to adopt for Canadian Cheese.

The Plant is Modernized all through, and the part of its service most important to Citizens is its Milk Service, which ranks Second to None in the Province. The ever-increasing demand is the best testimony to the popularity of our Pasteurized Milk.

Men Who Have Helped To Build Up Canada

George Brown

George Brown was in many ways the most striking figure that played a part in the political life of Upper Canada. He was a Scot, having been born in Alloa, near Edinburgh, on November 29, 1818. In 1833 he emigrated with his father, Peter Brown, to the United States, where they founded, in 1842, the British Chronicle in New York. On a trip to Toronto in the interests of this paper George Brown became deeply impressed with Upper Canada, and in 1843 he and his father came to Toronto, where they founded the Banner, which, in the following year, gave place to the Globe, with George Brown as editor and guiding spirit. By the vigour of his style and his uncompromising attitude on public questions he became a force in the land and the Globe won, and long held the first place in Canadian journalism; indeed, it dominated the thought and moulded the views of the majority of the counties of Upper Canada.

In 1851, George Brown was elected to the Legislative Assembly, his platform being: control over the executive, religious equality, a national system of education free from sectarian bias, an amended jury law, improved assessment, and cheap postage. He more than any other man, achieved a full measure of responsible Government for the Canadas. He at once became a power in Parliament. In 1858 he caused the defeat of the Macdonald-Cartier Government and was called on to form a ministry. But the Brown-Dorion administration was immediately defeated on a vote of want of confidence, and Brown once more found himself in opposition.

Much has been written to prove that this or that man was the prime force in bringing about Confederation. George Brown played an essential part in the movement. In 1858, he suggested to Luther Holton a comprehensive union as the remedy for the unstable position of government in the Canadas. "A federal union, it appears to me," he wrote, "cannot be entertained for Canada alone, but must include all British America." At a convention in Toronto, in 1859, he advocated the adoption of the federal principle. In 1864, he was chairman of a committee on constitutional changes and reported on the application of the federative system to Upper and Lower Canada alone, or to the whole of British North America. John A. Macdonald was one of three on the committee who dissented.

The Tache-Macdonald Government now went down to defeat. Brown could have formed a Government, but he had produced a "deadlock" and instead of taking over the reins of government he arranged for the formation of a coalition, by means of which Confederation was brought about. He retired from the Coalition Government in 1865, when he saw that Confederation was certain of achievement.

In 1867, in the first Dominion election, he was defeated and hence forward showed no desire to re-enter Parliament. But in the columns of the Globe he continued to mould and fashion Liberal opinion. In 1875 he was offered the Lieutenant-Governorship of Ontario, but, the editorship of the Globe was not compatible with such an office, and he would not surrender the Globe for a kingship. He was twice offered knighthood but declined.

On March 25, 1880, in his sixty-second year and in the full vigour of his manhood he was shot by Gordon Bennett, a discharged employee of the Globe. He might have recovered from the wound, but, contrary to the advice of his physicians, he continued to do his work in his chamber, and, largely as a result, died on May 9.

Samuel Leonard Tilley

One of the most active factors in bringing about Confederation was Sir Samuel Leonard Tilley, C. B., K. C. M. G., of St. John, New Brunswick, and of him it may be said that no more honorable or blameless figure ever graced Canadian public life. His cogent oratory, was famous during the Confederation period and for many years thereafter.

Tilley was born at Gagetown, N.B., in 1818, of a Loyalist family which had originally settled in the Massachusetts Bay colony as early as 1640. Young Tilley received a sound rudimentary education but at the age of 13 went to St. John to make his own way, obtaining his first employment as a druggist's clerk. Before he was twenty he successfully engaged in business for himself. At this time he became an advocate of total abstinence, a principle of which he was a lifelong adherent. He early achieved repute as a public speaker and in 1850 was elected to represent St. John in the New Brunswick Legislature, as an advocate of protection, which had become a live issue in his province as a reaction against losses sustained through the free trade movement in England. In 1885 he became Provincial Secretary which included finance, but his action in forcing through a premature measure of prohibition caused a series of political crises. He then turned to the movement for the construction of an Intercolonial Railway from Halifax to Quebec, and visited London to urge the project on the British Government. Maritime Union also won his support and he was one of the delegates to the Charlottetown Conference out of which developed the Confederation Conference at Quebec in 1864, and had much to do with the proposed financial terms.

Confederation was first tested at the polls at the New Brunswick General Elections early in 1865 and was rejected. Tilley at once commenced an educational campaign on behalf of the idea in every county. A year later the verdict was reversed and the change had a healthy effect everywhere. He went to London in 1866 to assist in framing the British North America Act and on the formation of the first Confederation Government by Sir John Macdonald in 1867 accepted the post of Minister of Customs, although it was felt that he merited a more important portfolio. In 1873, he became Minister of Finance in succession to Sir Francis Hincks, but the Macdonald Government was shortly afterwards defeated on the Pacific Scandal issue. Before the government resigned it appointed Tilley Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick.

On the expiry of his term in 1878 he re-entered politics as a supporter of Sir John Macdonald and became one of the most brilliant exponents of the new National policy (protection). After Sir John's triumph at the polls, Tilley became once more Minister of Finance, and it became his duty at the session of 1879 to introduce the first protective tariff in the history of the new Dominion. His sterling honesty and ability to handle figures inspired public confidence during the initial years of protection and he became an immensely popular figure. In 1885 failing health compelled him to retire from politics and Sir John made him once more Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, a post he filled until 1893, and in which his strict impartiality won him high esteem among all parties. He passed away, at the age of 78, on June 25, 1896, universally beloved. Throughout his life Tilley was a devout adherent of the Church of England, and few Canadian public men have left behind a memory so stainless.

THE FATHERS OF CONFEDERATION

Sir Charles Tupper

The "War Horse of Cumberland" was for years the political designation of Charles Tupper, and his whole career was one of strenuous activity and aggressive policies. Along with Joseph Howe he stands as the most conspicuous figure of the Maritime Provinces. Tupper lacked the fire and passionate appeal and the poetic and eloquent inspiritment of Howe, but he had a great platform strength and his driving power was superior. His contest with Howe, the great Liberal leader in Nova Scotia, and theretofore invincible, in which the latter suffered his first defeat, in 1855, was long known as the "battle of the giants."

Of English extraction through United Empire Loyalist descent, the late Sir Charles was born in Amherst, N. S., in 1821, and despite his career of almost inordinate activity and stress and strain, he lived to be 94. His early life was a hard struggle, but with characteristic indomitableness he successfully graduated at Edinburgh University as an M. D., in 1843, after which he settled down to practise in his native town. His great ability and decided turn for public affairs brought him very quickly into prominence, and the "little Doctor," as he was familiarly known, was in the thick and front of the fight from the time he first donned his "coat of mail." Quick to discern the weak points in the policy of the old-line Conservatives, he drew up a program having a more comprehensive and progressive view of affairs. As a consequence he attracted to himself the moderate men of both parties, or, in other words, completed a new political alignment and became the acknowledged leader.

In 1864, he was chosen Premier of Nova Scotia. That was the year in which Confederation took root. Not only did he bring his province though unwillingly enough, into Union, but he took a leading part in framing the terms of the B. N. A. Act, and afterwards in England in defeating opposition and settling the final draft with the Imperial authorities, and even succeeded in inducing his great rival, Joseph Howe, to join the Government of Sir John Macdonald after Confederation. For his services he was created a C. B. On the formation of the first government, in view of certain difficulties arising in other provinces, he declined to accept a portfolio. He was, however, sworn in as President of the Council in 1870, and in 1873, when adviser and organizer. To his activities and power of oratory much of the success of Sir John's National Policy in 1878 was due.

After the elections Sir Charles became Minister of Public Works, and as such he organized the Department of Railways and Canals, of which he was the first minister. In that capacity he accompanied Sir John and Sir Leonard Tilley to England on a memorable visit, the result of which was the bargain with a syndicate to build the C. P. R.

In the spring of 1884, his work of piloting the C. P. R. on its somewhat adventurous career to prospective success completed, he was appointed to the office of Canadian High Commissioner. At the invitation of Sir John Macdonald in 1887, he returned from England, accepting the position of Minister of Finance, which he held for about a year and again assumed office in London, where he remained until called back as Secretary of State under Sir Mackenzie Bowell. In a few months he succeeded as Prime Minister, on the eve of the elections of 1896.

The fortunes of the Conservative Party, through internal cabinet dissensions and from other causes, were at a low ebb and despite his former prestige, his swaying power and almost unparalleled efforts he went down to defeat.

In opposition, as leader, he displayed not less vigor of debate, not less courage, and not less determination to win, but age and the rising star of Sir Wilfrid Laurier were too fearful odds against him, and at the end of his term he retired, his remaining years being devoted to his private interests and to the preparation of his reminiscences.

Joseph Howe

Principal G. M. Grant in one of his inspired moments spoke of Joseph Howe as "Nova Scotia incarnate"—to Howe his province and his people were everything.

This Canadian statesman was born in Halifax on December 13, 1804. His father, a United Empire Loyalist, after the American Revolution came to Halifax, where he established a newspaper. His son had little chance of regular schooling but was carefully trained by his father. At thirteen Howe was apprenticed to the printing trade and ten years later purchased an interest in the "Weekly Chronicle," renamed the "Acadian." A year later he sold his interest in this paper and purchased the "Nova Scotian," which, under his able editorship, became a power in the social, political, and literary life of his province.

Early in life he began the battle for responsible government, the same battle against a "Family Compact" that Mackenzie and Papineau were waging in the Canadas. He won his battle, and that with never a thought of rebellion or resort to arms.

He was a graceful poet, a brilliant prose writer, a powerful orator, and a statesman in the broadest sense of the word. As an orator, it is doubtful if he has ever been excelled in the Dominion, and his platform power, combined with his ably conducted newspaper, placed Nova Scotia in the hollow of his hand.

In 1836 he was elected to the Assembly, and at once took rank as the leader of the people's party. His work for responsible government in the Assembly and in his brilliant letters to the Colonial Secretary ultimately won the day, and in 1847, largely due to his efforts, a full measure for responsible government was granted his province.

He had long visioned a union of the British North American provinces and worked earnestly for the construction of an intercolonial railway as the necessary step towards this end. Meanwhile, he had held the important offices of Speaker of the Assembly, Provincial Secretary, Commissioner of Railways, and finally provincial Premier. In 1863 he retired from office to take the position of Fisheries Commissioner. This was unfortunate. He was not on the ground when the Maritime Union Convention was held at Charlottetown, or when the Quebec Confederation Convention consummated the name of the British North American provinces. When he returned to Nova Scotia, he joined forces with the anti-Confederates becoming their leader. He did this not from any change of heart. He feared, and not without reason, that the Maritime Provinces would be completely overshadowed by the Upper Provinces. He vigorously opposed the scheme and fought for the repeal of the Union, by his energy, magnetism, and great oratorical gifts, causing the election of an almost solid representation against Confederation to the Provincial and Federal Parliaments. He carried the fight to London, but when he saw how hopeless it was, accepted the situation, but not until better terms were granted his province. Thus in sense, he won his battle. He was persuaded to enter the Cabinet of Sir John A. Macdonald and held several important portfolios. In May, 1873, he was appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia. On June 1 of the same year, the city of Halifax and the province were stunned with the news that the greatest of Nova Scotia's sons had died. There was deep sorrow throughout the land, even those who looked upon him as a deserter forgetting their differences and joining in the general mourning.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier

What would have been the fate of Confederation in Canada, if the high principles which inspired the great men who worked out this political regime had not survived in the minds of the statesmen who were compelled to carry on their gigantic undertaking? One of the finest titles bestowed on Sir Wilfrid Laurier is probably to assert that he was the right heir of the Fathers of Confederation, and that he has completely understood and embodied in his doctrine the noble ideals of the statesmen of 1867.

Sir Wilfrid was born at St. Lin des Laurentides, Que. in 1841, of French-Canadian stock. He was well trained for his colorful career by a solid education at L'Assomption College, and after having followed his law studies at McGill University, he turned naturally towards politics, having at his disposal an exceptional gift for eloquence, which revealed itself during his college years.

Among all the strong characteristics of Laurier ranks high his reputation as a speaker. In 1904, the "Daily News" of London wrote about him: "Sir Wilfrid Laurier is easily the greatest statesman of the British Empire." Laurier's gift of eloquence was not recognized only in Canada, but ovations followed him everywhere on his visits to United States, England or France every time he addressed a public meeting.

The greatest success which he attained but which no French-Canadian before him had tried, was to capture the feelings of the English-speaking element of Ontario, even as far as to obtain their most complete confidence. Elsewhere, he had succeeded in convincing his audiences by the power of his ideas, and by the music of his phrase, but Ontario offered difficulties much harder to overcome.

Ontario was soon enraptured.

Laurier had just been elected leader of his party, and when he started on his speech tour in Ontario, Blake was suddenly stricken with an illness which was considered by some as diplomatic. Outside of Toronto, his victory had been comparatively easy, but even when he was surrounded by those he looked upon as his staunchest enemies, the overwhelming power of his eloquence changed a predicted defeat to a sure triumph. His first election as Prime Minister took place immediately after, and historians of to-day are still wondering on what unforeseen hope in sight he launched such a perilous adventure if not his indomitable energy, and the love of his country.

One of the deepest sorrows of his life was the trend of political events in Canada during the Great War. Defeated in 1911 on a double platform: the naval question and reciprocity, he was no longer Prime Minister when the war broke out. Unable to lead his party as he would have liked it, the ordeal he suffered hastened the end of his life. He died in 1919, and the whole nation paid respects to his remains which now lie in Notre Dame cemetery.

What was Laurier's doctrine on Confederation? First of all, a fundamental principle: Confederation was a compromise between an alliance and a complete fusion. And he added: "From this fundamental principle is born this corollary, that between the entities reunited by Confederation there is, in the new entity which springs from it, no superiority or subordination, but complete equality."

It is substantially the principle of the Fathers of Confederation.

It would be erroneous to think, however, that Laurier had a strong leaning towards Confederation. He was against it in 1867. But he was broad-minded and patriotic enough to support it when it became unavoidable and to work towards a more perfect functioning of the new idea, and he spent, to reach that goal, all the magnificent gifts of his talent.

Sir Richard Cartwright

Entering parliament in 1863, Sir Richard Cartwright was just in time to throw the force of his oratory into the struggle for Confederation, and into the defence of the "great Coalition" that made Confederation possible, as is seen in his speech of March 9, 1865, preserved in Dr. George Locke's collection of famous addresses, called "Builders of the Canadian Commonwealth." Thereafter for fifty years his eloquence was never absent from the official debates on Canada's public affairs. Apart from his able work as a cabinet minister in the department of Finance and Trade and Commerce under Alexander Mackenzie and Sir Wilfrid Laurier; he performed a great service as chief financial critic of the Conservative administrations from 1878 to 1896.

He believed that Canada was strategically placed to bring about "an alliance of the English-speaking peoples of the world," and in 1897 almost immediately after the Liberal Party had been returned to power, we find him a delegate to Washington to promote better relations between Canada and the United States. He was an out-and-out free trader, and frequently, but without success, advocated reciprocity agreements with our southern neighbor. It is to be regretted that he did not live to see Canada take her place in the League of Nations Assembly at Geneva in 1920, or Mr. Vincent Massey appointed minister to Washington in 1927—both steps of which Cartwright would have heartily approved.

He was born at Kingston, Upper Canada, in 1835, of United Empire Loyalist stock—his grandfather having been the Hon. Richard Cartwright who eventually became prominent in political and business circles in Canada. The grandson, Richard John Cartwright, was educated at Kingston, and Trinity College, Dublin. After his return to Canada he became president of the Commercial Bank of the Midland District. Elected as Conservative to the Legislative Assembly of Canada, he became one of the staunchest supporters of Sir John A. Macdonald, and remained so until 1870 when he was the unsuccessful rival of Sir Francis Hincks for the portfolio of Finance. Shortly afterwards he opposed his chief on banking reforms, and by 1872 his antipathy to the proposed Canadian Pacific Railway Bill caused him to join the Liberal Party, through which he served his country with distinction until his death in 1912, at which time he was Liberal leader of the Senate.

From 1873 till 1878 he was Minister of Finance under Alexander Mackenzie; and was created a K.C.M.G., in 1879. After eighteen years in Opposition, he accepted the portfolio of Trade and Commerce in the first Laurier administration, formed in 1896, and held that office until 1904, when he was appointed to the Senate. His G.C.M.G. had been conferred in 1907. He sat in parliament for nearly fifty years; and for almost forty years he was the chief spokesman of the Liberal Party on matters of trade and finance.

Among his many famous speeches, that seconding the vote of thanks to the volunteers who had served in the North West Rebellion in 1885 is still regarded as one of the masterpieces of parliamentary eloquence. That his splendid gift remained with him in old age is attested by his masterly oration of 1908 on the occasion of the creation of the Quebec Battlefields Commission.

Sir William Van Horne

Sir William Van Horne was born in Chelsea, Illinois, in 1843. His father died when he was eleven years old. Even at that early age, as a messenger boy, he helped his mother support the family. While waiting for telegrams he became initiated into the mysteries of telegraphy, and when he left school at fourteen he found work as a telegrapher. At fifteen he was freight checking clerk and messenger on a branch of the Michigan Railway. He early studied every detail of railroading, making himself familiar with office and machine-shop practice, speedily excelling at telegraphing and drafting.

His rise was phenomenally rapid; a train-despatcher and superintendent of telegraphs while still in his teens; at twenty-five a divisional superintendent; and before he was thirty a general superintendent; at thirty a general manager. He won a high place in American railway circles, and when a man with great railway experience and exceptional executive ability was needed, in 1881, by the newly organized Canadian Pacific Railway Company, J. J. Hill recommended Van Horne as the best available man in America.

Van Horne came to Winnipeg in 1881 and looked over the ground. The vastness of the undertaking appealed to him. A favorite saying of his was: "Nothing is too small to know and nothing too big to attempt." He now faced the biggest thing ever attempted by any railway builder. Great prairies to be crossed, huge mountain ranges to be pierced or climbed, wild, desolate rocky regions to be traversed, the supreme task of linking the Pacific with the Atlantic,—all appealed to his imagination and he unhesitatingly agreed to accept the general-managership of the Canadian Pacific Railway and to undertake the impossible (a word that was not in his dictionary), according to the critics of the projected line.

When Van Horne arrived in Canada there was a Dominion on paper, to make it a reality people were required on the vast fertile plains and at the Pacific coast. A railway was an essential and the builders of this great railway were the real makers of Canada. The main credit for the carrying out of the enterprise was due to two astute Scots, Donald A. Smith and George Stephen, but chiefly to the large faith, organizing genius and driving force of William Van Horne. He was hampered in his work by political opponents of the road and the opposition of the Grand Trunk. At times the treasury was hopelessly depleted, but by his great faith he inspired faith in others and by his driving force he was able to complete his stupendous task in 1885, five years earlier than stipulated by the contract. Linking Atlantic and Pacific was not sufficient for him. His Napoleonic mind sought other worlds to conquer, and he placed great steamships on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, consolidating the trade of the Empire.

This Canadian by adoption took a deep interest in everything that was essential to the welfare of the country and helped develop, often at great financial loss, the salt, paper and pulp, coal and steel industries, and even conducted a fine stock farm. When he passed away on September 11, 1915, Canada realized that she had lost a man whose "resource was boundless," a welder-together of the confederated provinces, a true builder of Empire.

John Norquay

To have lived through stormy times of nation building, when the yoke of confederation was so irksome that rebellion broke out, and was only suppressed by an expeditionary force; to have been of the race of the rebels and yet to have maintained, undimmed, his faith in confederation, is perhaps, the greatest tribute which can be paid to John Norquay, Premier of Manitoba for nine years, and the greatest political figure in that province for the first seventeen years of its existence.

John Norquay was a half-breed, and a native son of the province which chose him as its premier. It is a curious fact that this first real political leader of Manitoba should have been born a Manitoban. It is rare even in these later days of Confederation to find a western premier who is a son of the province he governs. He was one of two outstanding Canadians who had Indian blood in their veins. Louis Riel, visionary and fanatic, whose name was a household word in Canada for twenty years, was an entirely opposite character to John Norquay. The one was essentially destructive, the other was constructive, not so much by virtue of ability as by reason of his gifts of kindliness and generosity. A peacemaker by nature, John Norquay had many splendid characteristics. Born in 1841, he was in the first full vigour of manhood at the time of the Red River Rebellion. He must have been tempted to seize the role of agitator and rebel. He took the more difficult course. The word secession never passed his lips and never did he lend countenance to the insurrectionists.

The organization of Manitoba as a province, and the creation of a Legislature, opened his path into public life. He was elected and in a few years became Minister of Agriculture. There were no parties in those days. Not until 1878 did a party emerge. Then it was a Conservative party, and it captured the majority of seats in the legislature under Norquay's leadership. He remained in the premiership until 1887. While the earlier struggles over Confederation had been terminated, other and more difficult problems clamoured for solution, problems which aroused public opinion in the province and threatened the still slender bonds which held Manitoba within Confederated Canada. The province lacked water transportation to the outside world. The Hudson Bay Railway lay outside the then provincial boundaries, and the federal government, in reply to the most insistent demands, would make but evasive answers. The Canadian Pacific Railway had been granted a monopoly in the West. Parliament had stated by statute that no railway should be built south from the prairies connecting with United States railways.

John Norquay, who accepted the terms of the Canadian Pacific charter, found his path strewn with pitfalls. Railway charters were granted by the Legislature time and again, only to be disallowed at Ottawa. Farmers' unions passed secessionist resolutions. The Liberal opposition, unbound by the responsibilities of office, urged sterner action. Norquay made frequent visits to Ottawa pleading for relief from this and other oppressive conditions imposed by Ottawa upon his province.

By 1887 the possibilities of obtaining relief by negotiating were exhausted. The time for action had come. Norquay undertook to build a railway in the name of the province and, in defiance of Ottawa, to connect Manitoba with the United States railways. As premier, he turned the first sod. The project was pushed forward resolutely, in the face of the direst threats. Late in the year while he was in the east, construction was halted by lack of funds. Norquay, returning, issued provincial bonds in small denominations so that Manitobans would finance their railways themselves.

Norquay did not remain in office to reap the fruit of this policy. That remained for his successor. He was driven from the premiership by a revolt within his own party and under the cloud of dishonesty. Carelessness in keeping accounts, there may have been dishonesty, however, there was none, and his political foes were the first to acquit him.

Norquay retired from politics in 1887. He left public life as he entered it, a poor man. His sensitive nature never recovered from the blow of the unjust accusations made against him and he died in 1889, at the early age of forty-eight.

Lord Strathcona

Donald A. Smith (Baron Strathcona and Mount Royal) was born in Forres, Morayshire, Scotland, August 6, 1820. In early life he was urged to study law or to take up a mercantile career, but two of his uncles had been prominent employees of the Hudsons Bay Company and tales of their adventures thrilled his imagination and his thoughts were ever Westward Ho!

Donald A., as he was familiarly known, came to Canada in 1838 and entered the service of the Great Company spending several years "counting rats' tails" at the posts in the vicinity of Montreal. He was then sent (1841) to the King's Posts on the bleak northern shore of the Lower St. Lawrence. After six years in this desolate region he was despatched to the Esquimaux Bay District on the far Labrador coast. This was like being exiled to Siberia, but young Smith made the best of it. He so labored that he won the esteem and confidence of the officials of the H. B. C., and of his fellow traders. His life here gave him courage, resourcefulness and self-reliance. In 1862, he was made a chief factor and later a chief trader, but he still remained on the Labrador coast and was there when Confederation was achieved.

In 1868 he was appointed chief executive officer of the Company in North America and was to be stationed at Montreal. He was scarcely installed in his new office when trouble arose in the North-West, the greatest field of the Company's activities. Rebellion broke out. The politicians were making a mess of affairs and he decided to journey to the Red River in the interest of the Company. Sir John Macdonald, recognizing his strength, appointed him a special commissioner of the Dominion to probe the situation.

At Fort Garry, his life was several times in jeopardy, but he never flinched, and in shrewdness proved more than a match for the rebel leader, Louis Riel. He caused many supporters to desert Riel, and when the military force under General Wolseley arrived it found no insurgents in arms. Mainly through his influence Manitoba peaceably entered the Canadian Confederation. He was chosen a member of the first Executive Council and afterwards represented Winnipeg and Selkirk in the Legislature and Selkirk and West Montreal in the Dominion House.

The great need of the west was transportation and he promoted boat and rail communication with the United States border. He then turned his attention to the project of a trans-continental line and was the main force behind the C. P. R. He received his reward,—vast wealth and the highest honors from his sovereign. In 1896 he was sent to London as High Commissioner of Canada and held office until the time of his death on January 21, 1914.

50TH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED HERE

Examiner of July 3, 1917, Tells of Sports and Speeches.

"Confederation's 50th Anniversary loyally celebrated in Peterborough," says a three-column heading in The Examiner of Tuesday, July 3, 1917. On that occasion the sponsors of the celebration were the Peterborough Health Association, and a feature of the day thought worthy of note was the presence in the procession of "the little band of war veterans." The impressive silence with which the writer notes they were greeted reminds the reader that the flower of Canada's manhood was in France and Belgium, fighting for King and Country.

An association known as the Greater Peterborough Association was in the charge of the celebration, which netted the Health Association $1,000. The influx from the surrounding districts more than balanced the outflow of people to the lakes and other places, and the streets were lined during the parade and the Exhibition Grounds crowded for the afternoon's festivities.

The parade, with speeches afterwards, took place in the morning. The war veterans and the veterans of '66 led the procession. Then followed the 57th Regimental Band, members of the City Council Board of Trade, Board of Education, Trades and Labour Council, and the Collegiate Cadets. A large number of decorated cars brought up the rear.

At Central Park, the starting and finishing point of the parade, addresses were given by His Worship Mayor Duffus, G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., His Honour Judge Huycke, J. J. Hartley, Capt. J. H. Burnham, M.P., and Col. T. J. Johnston, who had been recently returned from the Front after taking over the 93rd Battalion.

His Worship Mayor Duffus referred to the desire of the Government that a military parade be held, and called attention to the handful of men available whereas before the war there would have been a thousand or more Militiamen in line. He then proceeded to refer to the struggles and debates which had preceded Confederation, contrasting the Canada of 1867, two or three groups of provinces struggling alone, with the great Dominion, bound together with links of steel, with its sons gathered in one army fighting the battles of the Empire.

Similar speeches were made by the other gentlemen, and all were listened to with deep attention by the large crowd.

In the afternoon there was a large programme of sports.

There were two horse races, a great many running and jumping races, and most fiercely contested of all, a baby show. Doubtless there are several husky lads of ten or eleven in the city now who would prefer that their mothers would not refer to their victories in a baby show in 1917. Many men and women now married competed in the boys' and girls' races of that day.

WHERE OUR GREATNESS LIES

Our greatness is where wheat fields are,
Where foundry hammers swing,
In groaning dray and failing spar,
Our land's awakening.
In pick the miner plies,
In axe hand hewing some new track,
In out-thrust vale and lonely shack,
In hearts that fight the forest back,
Canadian history lies.

—Morgan Powell.

Canada has developed only 8½ per cent. of her total commercial water-power resources of her available water-power of nearly 30,000,000 h.p. Her water-power resources are one of her richest assets, and her high tension transmission of electric energy is one of the most important factors in her present-day development; 480 Ontario municipalities are partners in the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission. The projected international St. Lawrence water-power scheme will produce 2,000,000 horse-power. Canada's total electrical development is over 4,500,000 h.p.

The possibilities for the development of agriculture in Canada are unlimited. Nearly half of its population is engaged in it, and dependent upon it. There are 730,000 farms. The value of field crops has increased from a trifling sum of $1,131,241,000; wheat broke all records with $1,455,244,050, from over a billion bushels, and Canada has won the world's wheat championship in 14 out of 16 years.

Canada had, a few years ago, 30 chartered banks, but amalgamations have reduced the number to 17, with 4,000 branches, compared with 123 in 1867. "Canada's financial structure, measured by the purchasing power in the hands of the consumer, is in a particularly strong position."

Canada's dairy production has reached the big total of $300,000,000, from only $1,600,000 in 1867. With a rapidly growing live stock population, cheese and butter making are showing corresponding development, until there are over 3,000 dairy factories, producing $141,000,000 worth. Annual exports exceed $40,000,000.

R. J. Uniacke mooted a union of the British provinces in North America in 1808.

ELECTION RESULTS AT CONFEDERATION

Liberal-Conservatives Carried All Four Seats.

Political news and comment swelled the columns of The Examiner when Confederation was aborning. The first Federal election coinciding with a Provincial campaign, dual fights then, gave victory in the two Peterboro's to the Conservatives. The temporary coalition produced the name Liberal-Conservative.

Chas. Perry of Peterboro and P. M. Grover of Norwood were elected to the Dominion Parliament, and John Carnegie and George Reid of Keene to the Ontario Legislature.

The polling resulted as follows: Peterboro, Federal.—Chas. Perry 681; John Gordon, Toronto (Liberal) 652 Perry's majority, 29. Provincial.—John Carnegie 670, John Walton (Lib.) 652. Carnegie's majority 18.

East Peterboro, Federal.—P. M Grover 956; Jas. Anderson (Lib.) 644, Grover's majority 312. Provincial.—Geo. Reid 996; E. Ingram (Lib.) 597. Reid's majority 399.

A feature of these elections was the larger number of votes cast in East Peterboro than in the West.

Gold Rush to Marmora

are two stores, one of which is owned by our good friend, Mr. Roxburgh of Norwood. There is no tavern and we are informed the company will not permit one to be erected on their lands.

"Cobourg will yet have thousands of tons of the ore passing through her to its destination or to be manufactured there. The iron trade of Marmora will surpass many times the former trade of Peterboro and by that trade, prosperity may again return to her, and her energy and pluck yet amply repaid. If ever any people deserve it, those of our sister town do.

"But it is worthy of remark that all the iron is in this county. Belleville people lament over their loss, but that they could call the mines theirs is a matter of surprise. The mines are over a mile from any part of the County of Hastings; in fact they are altogether in the County of Peterboro and of course belong to us, and the pity is that we did not make an effort to have the road, that will remove the ore, pass this way, as it is more naturally its outlet than Belleville. We, however, now wish our sister town, Cobourg, the reward of her industry and patience. The praise is hers, let her also have the profits."

Railway Built.

To transport the iron ore, a railway was built from Blairton to the Trent river "at a place known as the Narrows."

The Examiner of January 17 announces that a survey is to be made for the nine-mile railway. At the same time the Cobourg and Peterboro Railway Company effected an amalgamation for the construction of this railway. The Cobourg, Peterboro and Marmora Railway Company was the name of the enterprise, and J. H. Dumble took an active part in its affairs.

This road was opened on June 27, and the ceremony was attended by the councils of Peterboro town and county and of the village of Ashburnham as guests of the company.

The Cobourg train with guests from that section ran into cattle at night and the engine was derailed below Harwood. At that time the route of the ore shipments was by rail from the Marmora district to the Trent River, thence by boat to Harwood, by rail to Cobourg and finally across Lake Ontario or to other points. Laborers at the mines and on the railway were paid $1.25 a day.

On July 1st, 1867, one hundred tons of ore from Marmora reached Cobourg.

"Very soon," observed The Examiner, "the company will begin to realize a return on their outlay."

Tore Up the Rails

The removal of the rails from the Cobourg-Peterboro Rly. north of Rice Lake was begun about April 1, 1867, and the rails were used on the Blairton branch. This shift was regarded as conclusive evidence that the railway to Peterboro would not be reopened.

But the editor suggested to his readers that fortune would soon smile on Peterboro. Reports of mineral discoveries in townships north of the town sharpened the vision of heavy shipments of ore through Peterboro to Port Hope for lake transport.

Canada's farm wealth, including value of land, live stock, implements, etc., estimated by Census Bureau at nearly $8,000,000,000. The 1926 grain crop alone yielded a billion bushels, wheat totalling 406,000,000 bushels, and oats 404,000,000 bushels. Live stock values exceed $700,000,000.

Canada's forests are the main source of its character in the British Empire. Annual productive value has reached $140,000,000 from over 3,000 operating plants, found in every province, with exports representing half of this value. Canada now leads the world in newsprint production in her pulp and paper industry.

In 1926 Canada had the best industrial employment year since 1920.

EXAMINER OF 1867 SKEPTICAL OF SUCCESS OF CONFEDERATION

was pre-occupied with the political exigencies in the two Peterborough ridings, and his editorial and news columns indicate that he was more concerned that summer with the nomination of the strongest possible candidates for the provincial and federal elections, then announced, than with the establishment of the new Dominion, actually the kingdom of Canada. He was looking to the party fences here in East and West Peterborough, drudging in the labours of his own day, not dreaming of the British commonwealth of the future.

And the minds of the public were similarly engaged, judging by the import of a long letter in the Examiner of June 20, an anonymous appeal and criticism signed by "One of the People," whose major sentiment is expressed in the following paragraph:

"Confederation with all its newness and great hidden future is an accomplished fact with which we are now face to face; and in a few weeks we shall be called upon to exercise one of the dearest rights of freemen, that of electing Parliaments to give the new system effect, and to legislate for this young nation and its population of 4,000,000. . . In this country at least there is a degree of apathy and indifference in view of the importance of the forthcoming elections far from justifiable under the circumstances."

These are the only local opinions of Confederation recorded by the Examiner of that year; they could scarcely be much less. And they coincided closely with the conceptions of a large body of the Canadian people.

Macdonald's Doubts.

Sir John A. Macdonald, often described as the architect of Confederation, was at first opposed to the project.

"It is on record if any one chooses to look," affirms Sir Richard Cartwright in his reminiscences. "Sir John had his reasons, and substantial ones, too. He had a dislike for the federal form of government for one thing, regarding it as too complicated and too risky an experiment, and he also believed that if once the French majority formed an alliance with the Ontario Liberals, the Conservative Party in Ontario would be annihilated."

And at this point may be interpolated the opinion of Sir Richard Cartwright himself: "On the other hand, Sir John's supporters were right in considering the existing state of things as intolerable. Probably both parties were right in a measure, but, looking back, I must admit that it was a leap in the dark, and we certainly had no popular mandate behind us."

Another interesting opinion may be cited here. Wilfred Laurier, a young advocate at Arthabaskaville, writing editorials for a weekly newspaper between interviews with clients, declared that Confederation would be "the tomb of the French race and the ruin of Lower Canada."

History, of course, reminds us of the aversions of New Brunswick, the opposition of Nova Scotia, and objections in Ontario and Quebec, all of which reflect the thoughts and some of the prejudices of the people sixty years ago, and present the background of ideas before which the plan of Confederation was brought forward. The reticence of the Examiner's editorial expression was not exceptional. Apparently it was in harmony with the dominant mood of the country. And if the editor was dubious of the success of Confederation, at least he regarded it with goodwill.

Confederation Approved.

Turning over the pages of the Examiner of 1867, in an effort to recapture the spirit of that time, one finds the following unadorned item, lacking even a one-line caption, as the first intimation of Confederation:

(February 7th)—"A cable despatch from London, under date of the 24th, says it is officially announced that the British Government has accepted a plan of British-American Confederation submitted by the Colonial delegates."

On February 28 the representation of the provinces in the proposed Federal Parliament was given as follows: Upper Canada, 82; Lower Canada, 65; Nova Scotia, 19; New Brunswick, 15—total, 181.

This allotment was to continue until the census of 1871 when Ontario would get a number of additional seats.

First Dominion Day.

Spring passed without any further specific reference to the approaching event, until June 6th, when the Dominion Day holiday was proclaimed in the following item:

"Ottawa, June 6. — An Order-in-Council has been passed appointing the 1st of July, the day upon which the Queen's proclamation constituting the Dominion of Canada comes into of general rejoicing throughout the Dominion. The entire Volunteer force of the four provinces will assemble in their respective districts, and a royal salute and 'feu de joie' will be fired by them. Each member of the force turned out will be entitled to a day's pay."

For several weeks in June an advertisement appeared in the Examiner with the following introduction:

"July 1, 1837.—Celebration of our new Dominion. Spring meeting of the Peterboro Turf Club, Monday, July 1st, 1837, at their Driving Park."

Presumably the local race followers of that day spent the holiday afternoon watching the horses run. The editor seems to have been down in Otonabee at a church picnic. At any rate he ignored the Turf Club, but in the July 5th issue, Peterboro's main celebration of Confederation is reviewed as follows:

Dominion Day Celebration.

"The new Dominion of Canada was ushered in at Peterboro by the discharge of heavy guns, musketry, etc., the ringing of bells, and various other marks of the general rejoicing of the citizens. To many, the ringing of the bells was a cause of alarm, but very soon they found their fears were groundless; the cause was nothing more or less than introducing our citizens to Confederation. At a very early hour the Norwood and Hastings Volunteer companies, under Captains Grover and Lightlock, made their appearance, and at ten o'clock the battalion formed parade on the market square. The strength of each company was as follows:

No. 1—Capt. H. C. Rogers 33
No. 3—Capt. Kenendy 48
No. 4—Capt. J. Z. Rogers 40
No. 5—Capt. Greene 39
No. 6—Capt. Grover 38
No. 7—Capt. Lightlock 36

No. 2 of Lakefield did not muster with the others, the men being greatly scattered at the present time. They afterwards proceeded to the Cricket Ground, Ashburnham, and there went through various evolutions, and returning to the market square fired a 'feu de joie.' The officers of the Peterboro companies having provided a lunch for the battalion, the men then proceeded to the Drill Shed and there partook of the good things provided.

"At three o'clock the Volunteers and civilians had a game of cricket at which the military were defeated."

Such was Peterboro's celebration of the first Dominion Day. The Examiner of July 4 also carried a short report from Ottawa of the holiday events at the Capital. Lord Monck was sworn in as Governor-General, and it was announced that Queen Victoria had conferred on John A. Macdonald the dignity of K.C.B., and on Messrs. Howland, McDougall, Cartier, Galt, Tilley, and Tupper that of C.B. At Ottawa 800 Volunteers were reviewed in Parliament House Square before a crowd of 4,000 persons.

"The city is gaily decorated with flags, and the observance of the holiday is universal," the report concluded.

PLOWING PRIZE TO J. SMITHSON

The South Monaghan Agricultural Society held a plowing match on Thomas Dawson's farm on Nov. 5th and it is particularly interesting to notice that Joshua Smithson, father of Morley Smithson, the present Reeve of Otonabee, won the first prize, a new plough. Alex Wright was second, Freeman Thompson was third, and George Nurse fourth.

The Otonabee Agricultural Society's plowing match took place on September 26 on Thomas Blezard's farm. The results for men were:—John Hunter third; Thomas Walker fourth; James Gillespie fifth. And the boys who won in their class were:—First Richard Elmhurst; second Thos. M. Miller; third John Henderson; fourth James McPee. Dinner was provided by Mr. Blizard by all who attended.

Messrs. Gilmore & Co., on October 24, announced their intention to erect an immense sawmill on Nogies's Creek, Harvey township.

On October 16, the ladies of Ashburnham gave a dinner to the Ashburnham volunteers at the formal opening of the drill shed (on Mark street, just north of Hunter.)

LACROSSE IN NOVEMBER

November 21.—There will be a match at lacrosse, played between Ashburnham and Peterboro, on the cricket ground, Ashburnham, on Friday at 3 p.m.

Seven jurors were fined $5 each for absence at the opening of the December sittings of the court with Judge Boucher on the bench.

Peterboro and Millbrook Masons held a picnic at the Summit, near Millbrook on September 19.

Messrs. Strictland Bros. are getting up a petition (Nov. 7.) for locks at Young's Point.

Literary item.—Dec. 19.—Anthony Trollope and Edmund Yates are going to emulate Dickens by giving readings from their own works.

June 13.—Announcement of the coming of Geo. F. Bailey's great circus and menagerie. (A smile and a sigh for the boys of that day.)

Feb. 7.—The editor briefly reviews and commends Dr. T. W. Poole's sketch of the early settlement and subsequent progress of the town and county of Peterboro.

Sept. 12.—Messrs. Calcutt, Rogers and Stephenson return from Galway township reporting a find of lead and silver.

Nov. 7.—Opening of Canada's first parliament. Half column story emphasizes great public interest.

May 17.—Drill shed being erected where Central Park is now. Plans were defective.

COURT CONVICTIONS

The periodic publication of all police court convictions, tabulated across five columns, was a custom of that time. "Leaving employment seemed the most frequent if not popular misdemeanor, bringing a $ fine. Selling liquor without a licens also recurs in the list as did "drunk and disorderly."

Sept. 26.—The Examiner urged a the teachers of the county to organize.

Nov. 11.—Four companies 57th held a shooting match ranges.

The Last of the Old Guard

The dry goods store on Simcoe street with the long brass tube railing protecting its expanse of plate glass, where St. Alphonsus Lyceum is now, remains a pleasant and vivid memory with those of us who were small enough then to trail our mothers on shopping tours through the lanes of cottons, linens, silks, that seemed never to grow less.

Shining brass beyond finger tips was a lure to leap up, and inside wasn't there the thrill of the elevator! A busy, fragrant place it was on those Saturdays. Of its crowds only one figure stands out clearly in the dim, confused, cubistic recollection, the rather tall, quiet, gentle man, once a clerk where he was then a proprietor, Mr. Richard Hall.

Sixty years ago, Mr. Hall was the secretary of the Volunteer Fire Company forerunner, almost prototype, in its public service, of the Rotarians, Kiwanis and similar welfare organizations Aaron Comstock and J. O'Donnell, the dentist, were other members who took a prominent part in the Firemen's calithumpian parade which was the feature of the Queen's birthday celebration in 1867, and in the glorious superabundant banquet in Cronn's restaurant that night.

Living Link with the Past.

Mr Hall was 24 years old in the year of Confederation, a young business man, quite evidently popular, else the Firemen would hardly have chosen him secretary, and well regarded in the store, where he was employed as a clerk. To-day, as the sixtieth anniversary of Confederation approaches, Richard Hall is a living link with that glamorous past, of volunteer firemen, with their feeble hand pumps and their stout hearts and dashing spirit, of stage coaches, ten cent butter, coal oil lamps, and such agreeable companies as those which gathered at Cronn's, and drank the health of Her Majesty the Queen. A pathetic few of his contemporaries have survived the sixty hurrying years since Confederation; but because of his business, political and civic activities and associations, Richard Hall surely deserves to be regarded by those who salute him and his generation, and their memories and labors, and the heritage they left us, as the leader of the remnant of the old guard.

Was Born in Smith.

Born in Smith, October 23, 1843, the son of John Hall, a pioneer of the township, Richard Hall was educated in the public school near his home, and at the age of 15, began as a clerk in the general store of Robert Nicholls and William Hall. Perhaps he was the boy about the store. Other youths who began their careers under the same auspices were the late Peter Connal, Adam Hall and Robert Innes, and Mr. W. G. Ferguson, who resides on Stewart street.

In 1873 Nicholls and Hall dissolved partnership and the business passed into the hands of Richard Hall, Robt. Innes and Robert Hall, who preceded W. M. Lang as Collector of Customs in Peterborough. Then as Robert Hall and Robert Innes retired, the store was carried on by Richard Hall and his son Dickson Hall.

Liberal Candidate.

Mr. Hall was twice nominated as the Liberal candidate for the federal seat of West Peterborough. In 1891 he was defeated by James Stevenson, and in 1896, the year of Wilfrid Laurier's ascendancy, he lost to James Kendry.

If the majority of the electors twice withheld their favor, Mr. Hall had won the confidence of Peterboro's two most influential citizens, Robert Nicholls, the wealthy merchant, and his wife, whose splendid benefactions to Peterborough were largely suggested, directed and executed by the man who had once been their store boy.

After the death of Mrs. Nicholls in 1891, Richard Hall and Charles McGill were appointed executors and trustees of her estate, one of the largest ever devised in this district.

Many Large Bequests.

Mrs. Nicholls' bequests included Nicholls' Hospital, constructed and equipped, free of debt, and substantially endowed. Jackson Park, Inverlea Park and the Nicholls Oval, were also presented to the city, with an endowment which has been sufficient to maintain them up to the present. The Y.M.C.A., the Mechanics' Institute, which was absorbed by the Public Library, Peterboro Protestant Home, churches, Sunday schools, mission funds and colleges were all remembered in her will with liberal amounts.

The allocation of the residue of the estate was left absolutely to the discretion of the executors and trustees, and at its final winding up a substantial sum was given to the endowment fund of the Nicholls Hospital, which with the previous endowment has materially helped in carrying on that institution without being a burden to the ratepayers

Mr. Hall has been chairman of the Nicholls' Hospital Board from the outset, and has also been chairman of the Nicholls Parks Commission.

These activities and responsibilities merely suggest the real service Richard Hall has rendered to Peterboro as one of its unassuming but energetic citizens from that long ago when in his early twenties he was secretary of the Volunteer Fire Company that included men who have built up Peterborough to the pleasant, presentable home it is today. Mr. Hall has never applied himself to the seeking of publicity or acknowledgment of his inestimable and continuous contribution to this city.

Heavy Responsibilities.

As chairman of the Nicholls Hospital Board and the Nicholls Parks Commission, his thought and work has directly touched every resident of Peterborough.

He was entrusted with great confidences in his long life, and his fulfilment of them, as a leader of the Liberal party in two campaigns, as executor of the Nicholls estate and other offices, receding to the secretary of the Firemen's Company, has redounded with great honor to him in his old age.

Through him, and through others, too, this vigorous, confident generation extends its grateful homage to that generation of his which was flushed with youth in the year of Confederation.

DIVERSIFIED INDUSTRIES

used exclusively in the city and in the surrounding district for quite a radius.

FUR MANUFACTURING

Peterborough has two well-known fur manufacturing establishments, Messrs. T. Barrie and Company and Wm. Lech and Sons. These concerns have been in business in Peterborough for a great many years, and their maufactured fur garments are sold not only at home, but to many visitors who are from other parts of the Dominion and from across the line. A great many fur-bearing animals are trapped in this locality, and the Rice Lake muskrat is considered the world's best.

One of our newest industries is the Canadian Nashua Paper Company, and the factory here is the Canadian plant of the Nashua Paper Company of Nashua, N.Y. This company produces a variety of products from paper, such as gummed tape for parcelled, gummed paper for printers, waxed paper, in fact different varieties of waxed and gummed papers, which have found an excellent market from coast to coast. Associated with the Nashua Paper Company in the same building is the Canadian Sealright Company, and they manufacture paper containers. Their business has had a wonderful development. The products of both these plants are to be found from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

KNITTED GOODS

The Albion Knitting Company on Park Street turns out some of the finest products in knitted goods to be found in the Dominion. One of the very latest designs just on the market is a new bathing suit, which has exceptional features, and is finding a ready sale. This particular garment is named the 'K'awartha" and has features that other bathing suits have not. They manufacture many varieties of knitted articles.

The Elliot Manufacturing Company, of which T. C. Elliot is president, manufactures wools and yarns.

OTHER INDUSTRIES.

Vulcanizing work is undertaken by T. Atter, Auto Tire Repair Company Dawson and Johnson, H. T. Millard, and Lorne Webster, all situated within the city limits.

The J. C. Poolman Co., are whitewear manufacturers.

The J. C. Riedel Co. supplies the market with elastic and braids, described as the world's best. This company has recently moved into fine commodious quarters in the old Peter Hamilton plant. The products of this firm are furnished to wholesale and manufacturing customers.

The Card and Paper Works on King street make photomounts, cardboard and cover paper.

Ready-cut houses are made by the Canadian Aladdin Company.

A planing mill is operated on Hunter street under the direction of Edward Wand.

Products of the farm are packed and prepared for consumption by the William Scott Company.

Pump manufacturers are Melville Harrison and J. E. Stephens.

Show cases are manufactured by the Peterborough Show Case Company, on Water street.

The David Hardie Company, of Paterson street, manufactures sails, tents, tarpaulins, awnings, auto tops, curtains and cushions.

S. J. Murphy and Albert Trethewey make carriages.

cheap, for a thousand of bricks cost $6.00, and to-day they are $21.00.

Mr. Hartley never had any trouble with his men in forty years of contract work, for he always paid the highest wages and then employed nothing but the best of labourers. He always found it a good policy to pay good wages, and then the men would be satisfied.

A union man for thirty years, he has always found the men of the union fair in their demands. The people have a misapprehension about his union, the Bricklayers' Union, said Mr. Hartley, for a union bricklayer does not have to lay a certain number of bricks a day, out it is the desire of the union that every man should do a fair day's work. The union does not believe in slavery, but in honest work.

Mr. Hartley was for many years the treasurer of the union, and has been for years the president of the Bricklayers' Union. There never has been any trouble in the union and when a man left, the union has always been willing to take him back in a very reasonable and kindly manner.

A former Noble Grand in the Oddfellows and a Chief Ranger in the Canadian Order of Foresters, and an official in George Street United Church are Mr. Hartley's achievements in the fraternal and religious side of life.

JOHN BUTCHER.

John Butcher, 301 Burnham Street, is looking forward to having a place in the big parade on Friday, remembering as he does the first Confederation Day in Peterborough. Mr. Butcher came here from England, where he was born in Warminster, Wiltshire, arriving here on May 24th, 1863. The American War was at its height when he arrived in this country, and he recalls the excitement incident to it.

GEORGE W. HATTON, K.C.

G. W. Hatton, K.C., Crown Attorney of Peterborough, Clerk of the Peace, is entitled to a place among those who were in Peterborough around the time of Confederation, albeit he was a very young man at the time. Mr. Hatton was born here, the son of David George Hatton, first Police Magistrate of the town of Peterborough, and Jane (Walford) Hatton. Another link with those days that entitles Mr. Hatton to representation in the Confederation number is the fact of his having read law with Sir John A. MacDonald, whose fame is for ever linked with the union of these British provinces into the great Dominion that spreads from sea to sea.

Mr. Hatton is a graduate of the Peterborough Public Schools, and the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, Upper Canada College, and Osgoode Hall. He was called to the Bar in 1880, and created a King's Counsel in 1921. In 1914 he was appointed County Crown Attorney and Clerk of the Peace. He was the first President of the junior Liberal-Conservative Association, and is a past president of the Peterborough Golf and Country Club, and the Peterborough Curling Club.

WILLIAM CARTER

William Carter, 530 Bolivar Street, came to Peterborough in 1855, when he was five years of age. Since that time he has crossed the ocean twenty-four times, making a total of twenty-five crossings. His English home was in Yorkshire.

On his later trips across the ocean Mr. Carter has seen great changes from the first journey. In 1855 the sailing vessel took sixteen days to make the trip that is now done in a few days. There was smallpox aboard on that first crossing he made, and when he arrived finally at Port Hope the only way to travel to the new home in Smith Township was by wagon and water. After staying in Peterborough all night—at what used to be the Casey House, across from the market, where the Carter family had to sleep on the floor because all the beds were crowded—the trip was continued to Chemong, then rejoicing under the name "Mud Lake." These days of tourist traffic and catering to the fancies of visitors demand a more euphonious name, though perhaps the pioneers were more outspoken in their truthfulness.

Mr. Carter has a clear and vigorous memory, in spite of his advancing years, and can tell many interesting stories of the pioneer days in Peterborough County. His father was a shoemaker, and carried on his business at Bridgenorth for some years, where there was then a post office, a sawmill and a blacksmith shop. The now white-painted, trim, and entirely proper little village that today caters to so many summer visitors had then as its main boast a line-up of five liquor stores.

For four years the Carter family lived on Communication Road, attending Gilmour Church. Mr. Carter remembers well the old St. Andrew's Kirk, dominating the open spaces that were then Brock, Rubidge and Reid Streets. He is now a member of Knox United Church.

Mrs. Carter's mother was the daughter of W. Rutherford, a pioneer, and her father was J. A. McWilliams, born in the North of Ireland and always a prominent Orangeman. The present Mrs. Carter was born in Otonabee. They have been forty-four years married.

There was not much money in the early days of the settlement of Peterborough, and Mr. Carter distinctly remembers the trading that used to go on. The farmers brought their products into the settlement and traded for goods that the few storekeepers had. There were not many luxuries, though one commodity that is now a luxury was stored plentifully on rough shelves laid across the logs in the cabins—maple sugar. This was used for all sweetening purposes. Later on, sugar was ninepence a pound—all currency then being the Old Country pounds, shillings, and pence. Mr. Carter recalls the adoption of the dollar as the currency of Canada, and tells with gusto of turning the exchange factor to profitable account. Before the English money was all called in, he took as much as he could gather over to England, and there bought dollars for 3s. 11d. A shilling here was worth 20c—four of them would make 80c—but by applying the exchange factor, Mr. Carter was able to buy $1 for the 4s. and still have a penny left.

On coming into Peterborough, Mr. Carter took up seriously the matter of getting the education that had been denied him while living out in the country. He bought a bundle of copy books at Menzies' Book Store, opposite The Examiner of today, and practiced writing and reading. Coal oil was scarce and expensive in 1867-1868, and this made studying at night impossible.

The coming of the railway to Peterborough is another high spot recalled by Mr. Carter. When the lines were first laid in here it cost as much to take a car of stock from Peterborough to Port Hope as it cost to carry it from Port Hope to Montreal. "And," said Mr. Carter, "you never knew when you would get a car." The visit of the Prince of Wales drew to Peterborough the biggest crowd that has ever graced the town, and the gala day stands out in Mr. Carter's memory.

Rev. Mr. Rogers, first Presbyterian minister, stayed with Peter Currie the first night he was in Peterborough. Mr. Carter recalls. Mr. Currie lived to the age of 96, and he had the honor of drawing the first load of sand to build the first Presbyterian Church. Oxen were used, of course, to drag the load.

A christetning in the early days was an event to which all the people in the neighborhood were invited. Ten or twelve children were christened at the one visit of the preacher, and a regular feast was indulged in.

Mr. Carter retains his good health, and is active in his solendid garden on Bolivar Street. There are few kitchen gardens where so much of the best in vegetables is grown in as small space.

T. EDWARD PRATT

Four years before Confederation T. Edward Pratt, 627 Water Street, made his bow to this new country, at Galt. A year and a half later he came to Peterborough, and has lived here ever since, except for a short stay in Toronto.

A. FAIRBAIRN

Mr. and Mrs. A. Fairbairn, of Lakefield, who are entering on their 58th year of wedded life, have a rich stock of memories of the early days of Peterborough and this district. Mr. Fairbairn, who spent 78 years on one farm, told The Examiner he is a better ploughman than reporter, but his clear memory for facts and his appreciation of what is interesting news shows that he under-rates his ability. He would have made nearly as good an editor as he has ploughman.

Mr. Fairbairn's father, Andrew, was born in Scotland in 1806, a shepherd lad. At 18 years of age he came to Canada and hired out on a farm between Cobourg and Port Hope, keeping sheep. His mother, Eliza Ann Hagerman, was born in 1810, on a farm near Port Hope. They were married in 1833 and came northward through the hamlet of Peterborough to a 200-acre lot a mile and a half from Lakefield, where Andrew Fairbairn built a log house. The farm was located on the Ninth Concession of Smith. Seven boys and four girls were born of this union, the subject of this sketch being sixth from either end of the row. All grew up to manhood and womanhood.

The Presbyterian Church dedication in February, 1863, is recalled by Mr. Fairbairn, whose father died four months later on June 6. His mother lived for 32 years longer, until Mr. Fairbairn was 52 years of age. On June 1, 1870, Mr. Fairbairn married Sarah McKee, who was born on the 12th Concession of Smith on June 2, 1851. The old couple rejoice today in the starting out in married life of their grand children, the while they themselves take a well-earned rest in the beautiful little village. A son is carrying on the farm where Mr. Fairbairn's father settled 94 years ago.

Mr. Fairbairn, who is well past his 84th birthday, has been a subscriber to The Examiner for sixty years.

St. Andrew's Night

The Scotsmen of the town on St. Andrew's Night, 1867, set themselves before nearly as bountiful a "bite" as the Firemen's. P. M. Grover, M.P.; C. Perry, M.P., and George Read, M.P.P., sent messages regretting their absence, and William Telford read a poem especially composed by himself for the occasion, the last four stanzas of which were as follows:

'Tis not alone on battle ground
The trusta Scots are always found,
In gorgeous hall or humble cot
We find the perseverin' Scot.

In pulpit, bench, as fitness calls
Or in our Legislative halls,
In banks an' counting house or store
They're maist half Scotch and sometimes more.

Some Scots prefer the bachelor's life,
A guid few disna' tak' a wife,
The jail over often gets its due
But faigs the gallows get but few.

A cheer for Scotia far awa'
An' for oursels, baith ane an' a
Strive still tu act the Scotsman's part
With honest, pure, determined heart.

The volunteer firemen and the Scotsmen of that day are gone, and William Telford has long since joined the great majority, but their happy hours still live in the musty and seldom disturbed pages of The Weekly Examiner in the year of Confederation.

Transportation Has Helped Canada Prosper

Railways :-: Canals :-: Rivers :-: Lakes :-: Ports

Canada's Canals

Before the period of extensive railway construction, which commenced for Canada about ten years before Confederation, the water routes more especially the St. Lawrence the Great Lakes and the Ottawa were the chief avenues of transportation These routes were interrupted at certain points necessitating portages The canals of Canada were constructed to eliminate the toil of unloading transporting and re-loading at the portage.

The earliest mention of canals in the Dominion was in connection with the Lachine Canal, begun by early French settlers in 1701, but only after the conquest of Canada by the British were improvements of the main water routes made and in the early part of the nineteenth century internal and foreign trade, and the introduction of steam navigation resulted in more attention being given to this work Although the canals were constructed primarily for military purposes, they soon became essential to the commercial life of the country.

There are six canal systems in Canada under control of the Dominion Government in connection with navigable lakes and rivers. They consist of the canals (1) between Port Arthur or Fort William and Montreal; (2) from Montreal to the international boundary near Lake Champlain; (3) from Montreal to Ottawa; (4) from Ottawa to Kingston to Perth; (5) from Trenton Lake Ontario to Lake Huron (not completed); (6) from the Atlantic Ocean to Bras d'Or Lakes, Cape Breton.

The total length of the waterways comprised within these systems is about 1,591 statute miles, the actual mileage of canals constructed being 117.2.

To March 31, 1927, the Department of Railways and Canals has expended $225,909,403.61 on canals and there has also been a miscellaneous expenditure of $49,114,031.31, mainly on departmental administration having to do with railways and canals.

No tolls have been charged for the use of the canals since 1903 and revenues collected, which last year amounted to $953,581.63, now consist of hydraulic and other rentals, wharfage, and elevator charges. Total revenues since the establishment of the canals has amounted to $23,552,379.45.

The canals of the Dominion are still doing a rushing business despite the competition of the railways. In 1926 a total of 13,477,653 tons of freight were transported over the canals, the bulk of which was agricultural produce.

The history of Canadian canals has been one of constant enlargement to meet the growing demand of navigation. For example, it has been necessary in the case of the larger canals, such as the Welland, to commence to plan a larger canal almost as soon as the previous enlargement had been started.

The Maritime Ports

The recommendations of the Royal Commission on Maritime Claims in connection with the establishment or improvement of port facilities at Halifax, St. John and Charlottetown, and the building up of trade through those ports, followed by the decision of the Dominion Government to substantially carry out those recommendations, come very appropriately at this time when Canadians are engaged in surveying the progress of the Dominion since Confederation, and looking confidently forward to a future that will be marked not merely with success but with that spirit of co-operation that assures both the welfare of the whole and the welfare of each of its parts. Canadian trade for Canadian ports is a fine slogan, but it remains an empty slogan until those ports have been equipped to handle the trade.

To appreciate what those three Maritime ports may become in the future, it is well to remember what they have been in the past, and what they are today. As time is measured in this New World, and particularly in Western Canada, Halifax St. John and Charlottetown, are venerable towns, Halifax was one hundred and eighteen years old at the time of Confederation; St. John eighty-two; and Charlottetown one hundred and forty-two, its history running well back into the period of French rule. It was known in those days as Port La Joie.

Halifax was founded by Cornwallis and named after the Earl of Halifax, then President of the Board of Trade. The first settlers were brought out from England in 1749, and the following year it became the capital of the province. Its fortifications and its ancient buildings brings back memories of notable and stirring deeds by land and sea One associates it with such famous Canadian names as those of Joseph Howe, Sir Charles Tupper and Sir John Thompson Samuel Cunard, the founder of the Cunard Line of Steamships, and Thomas Chandler Haliburton, one of the earliest and most original of Canadian novelists.

After the close of the Revolutionary War tens of thousands of men who remained true to the British Empire, the United Empire Loyalists, abandoned their possessions and fled from their homes into exile. A large number of them sailed to the Bay of Fundy and founded the city of St. John. They became the backbone not only of the town they created but also of the province of New Brunswick. Their descendants became notable builders and skippers of wooden ships, whose ensign was known in the ports of the seven seas.

Charlottetown brings back memories of nearly a century and a half of history events that took place in a field that was small but far from unimportant. Experiments in land tenure that were sometimes disastrous, French colonies, British absentee landlords, Selkirk's settlement, the arrival of hundreds of Acadians from Nova Scotia, the British conquest, and a century of peaceful development, including fox-farming.

To-day these three Maritime ports are on the eve of a period of steady progress. Equipped with modern facilities, as they will be before very long, the shrewd common-sense of their citizens may be counted upon to make them not merely local ports but essential ports of the commercial and transportation systems of the Dominion.

The St. Lawrence

In last month's record of river traffic there appeared the news that a transatlantic steamship of 19,000 tons had arrived at Montreal. This press item certainly created no sensation. Yet economists read it with an interest which should be shared by every Canadian who desires the advancement of his home-land.

This simple fact of a ship of 19,000 tons entering Montreal harbour without difficulty is indeed a striking illustration of the importance which our St. Lawrence has acquired in maritime trade, and a most satisfactory result of the labor expended upon making this river a real national highway.

Not long ago the channel of the St. Lawrence was only ten feet deep in certain places. The first statistics dealing with the improvement of this waterway, published in 1851, would have led no one to suppose that the St. Lawrence channel would ever be deepened to 30 feet. To-day this channel is being cut to 35 feet. Very soon ships of still greater tonnage will be bringing their cargoes directly to Montreal.

From Montreal to Father Point, the channel of the St. Lawrence is 340 miles long. From the Atlantic to Montreal, the St. Lawrence route has a lengthof 900 miles and possesses unusual advantages for navigation. In length and depth this waterway is unique. Its system of lighthouses and other aids to navigation is one of the finest in the world, so that vessels are as safe by night as by day.

The St. Lawrence, with its two chief ports of Montreal and Quebec, already plays a part of the first importance in the commerce of Canada. It is the great artery of the country's maritime trade, and is of as much interest to the West, with which it is connected by the Great Lakes, as to the East.

Much could be written of the historic interest attaching to this river, the point of departure for all our explorers, the scene of so many heroic exploits, the pathway of hope for each nation in turn. Its banks are crowded with memories.

And how much it holds of majesty, of charm, of romantic beauty! The towns, villages, and hamlets all along its course, interspersed with forests or meadows, its beaches, sandy or stony, the broad lakes into which it sometimes expands, the mountains and hills which form a picturesque background to the landscape, the color and even the sound of its waters, the influx of its innumerable tributaries, the surprises of its slightest bends, and a thousand other attractions should influence us, whether on pleasure bent or on education, to travel by our own St. Lawrence. It can supply subjects for our painters, for our poets, for our novelists, for our historians, for our musicians, for all our artists. Without leaving our own land, we can go on journeys quite as interesting, in many respects, as those which we undertake in foreign countries.

The Great Lakes

In our water-borne commerce, the Great Lakes, Superior, Huron, Erie and Ontario, with the River St. Lawrence, link the Canadian West with the Atlantic Ocean. They are navigated by vessels of a special type, drawing from twelve to twenty feet of water, and calling at the remotest points on the Great Lakes. Some of these vessels carry passengers between the United States and Canada.

A large part of the grain crop of Western Canada passes down the Great Lakes, and is transhipped at the ports of Montreal, Buffalo, New York or Portland for export to Europe.

In traversing Lake Superior, a vessel covers 400 miles; on Lake Huron and Georgian Bay 620 miles; on Lake Erie, 290 miles; on Lake Ontario, 250 miles.

The principal Canadian ports on the Great Lakes are Fort William and Port Arthur. At these two ports the vessels are loaded with wheat from the West, consigned to England via Montreal. The voyage from Fort William to Quebec is 1,660 miles.

The development of transportation on the Great Lakes has given an incalculable impetus to the production of grain in Western Canada. This is one of the advances upon which Canadians may congratulate themselves on the occasion of the sixtieth anniversary of Confederation

National Railways

In 1863, two regiments of the Household Brigade, the Grenadier Guards and the Scot Fusilier Guards, formed part of the British garrison. They were quartered in Montreal.

This fact which in itself seems to have no bearing on the expansion of the Canadian railways before and after Confederation, had, however, a distinct influence.

Important events happened that year. An incident which belongs at the present time to our history took place on high sea, and almost provoked a war between two great nations. This diplomatic cloud happily disappeared, but it revealed the lack of transportation facilities in Canada, at the strategical as well as commercial point of view.

The strategic viewpoint. It was then impossible to carry troops through a portion of Quebec and New Brunswick without losing precious moments and without imposing on the soldiers tiresome expeditions between the two termini of the then existing railways. Already during the Crimean War thought had been given to the mobilization of soldiers from the garrison of Quebec for this campaign, but orders came too late and the idea was abandoned. The navigation on the St. Lawrence was closed, and it was not thought advisable nor practical to send troops in winter time on a long and endless journey.

This strategical problem and its general aspects are discussed in a book published shortly after the Trent Affair. This volume is very rare and its title is "The Journal of the Household Brigade for the year 1863."

The analyst writes:

"The provinces of North America are no longer small communities, but large states, populous, prosperous and progressive, able since quite a long time to meet their own requirements. They will need henceforth a larger field of activities, and a legislature which, taking at heart the interests of all, would be in a position to command them to the respect of the American people and to the allies of England.

"The unification, so indispensable to their security and their advancement, so much desired by everybody, is only possible, however, if a great national road is built. It is hard to believe that it is easier for the citizens of Halifax to reach England than to go to Quebec in winter time. The inhabitants of Nova Scotia and of Canada are less acquainted with one another and have poorer knowledge of the neighboring province than of England."

This military observer gives a list of railroad works undertaken until 1863, including provincial roads and the 114 miles of road constructed by the Grand Trunk below Quebec. He foresees the construction "of the only link which would be necessary to establish a continuous line of communication between Halifax and Lake Huron, where, in the very near future, a direct connection would extend to Columbia, the Island of Vancouver and the Pacific." And he states finally: "It is hard to appreciate at its just value the importance of this project, from a military, colonial or commercial angle. This undertaking is worthy of enlisting the combined efforts of the Canadian and Imperial Governments."

If the unknown author of this book could see, from the height of some Olympus what happens in Canada today, he would admire with satisfaction the realization of his dreams: A Canada, united, powerful and beloved; a land of plenty; a gigantic reserve of mining, lumbering and agricultural wealth, spreading "from sea to sea," and in possession of a railway system that the most prophetic man of his time could not dare imagine.

In "the Railway Builders" Skelton, speaking of the railroad situation in 1867, justly says:—

"There had been waste and mismanagement, it is true, but the railways had brought indirect gain that more than offset the direct loss. Farming districts were opened up rapidly, freights were reduced in many sections, intercourse was facilitated, and land values were raised. The contribution to the railways was bread well cast upon the waters."

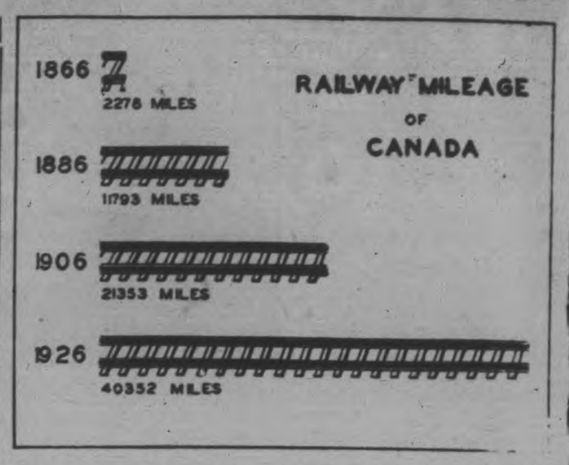
Railway construction in Canada began in 1836. From 1836 to 1852, that is during the experimental period, 159 miles of railroad were built, most of which around Montreal. There followed a period of speculations, during which the Grand Trunk, the first of the Canadian lines, branched out, improved and acquired new strength.

To relate the story of the Canadian railways from that time, or simply that of the Grand Trunk which now forms an integral part of the Canadian National Railways of Canada, would be a colossal task. To have an idea of the vastness of that undertaking, one has only to draw a comparison between the 150 miles of railroad built in 1852 and the 20,798 miles mileage to-day in Canada by the Canadian National, to which should be added 1,883 miles in the United States, forming a total of 22,681 miles, the greatest railway system of North America. One must not forget also that the population of the Maritime Provinces, of Upper and Lower Canada, was only 2,384,919 in 1851, compared to the population of 9,300,000 inhabitants at the present time, and the progress realized will easily be seen.

The Grand Trunk secured its charter in 1852, and started building right away. This railway expansion and the rapid growth of business which followed, brought about an increase in population; the census of 1861 reports a gain of 32.26 per cent.

The first prospectus of the Grand Trunk was published in 1853 and the first portion of the line Montreal-Toronto, 125 miles long, was finished in 1855. The first trip on this line took place on the 22nd October, 1856. In 1860, the Grand Trunk, with its 850 miles of railroad was the most important line in Canada.

I was saying a moment ago that to relate the railway history of the years which followed the issue of the Grand Trunk charter would constitute a formidable task. This fact is a striking illustration of it: When the amalgamation of the Grand Trunk with the Canadian National Railways took place, the original charter of the Grand Trunk counted no less than forty companies, as a matter of fact, during the years which preceded or followed Confederation, federal or provincial charters were secured by ninety-one companies, forming part to-day of the Canadian National. The story of each one is worthy of the attention of an historian.—H.W Thornton.



The Canadian Pacific

The Canadian people have been at times prone to talk about so-called national problems, and it is an interesting fact that we hear most about that sort of thing during those periods when progress seems to be retarded or when business conditions across the country are less satisfactory. And yet how relatively unimportant and how apparently easy of solution are the problems that confront us to-day as compared with those of sixty years ago when but comparatively small groups of people dwelt in the Maritimes, in Ontario and Quebec and on the far Pacific Coast, each settled area being divided from the others by wide stretches of uninhabited country over which communication was at all times difficult and costly and sometimes impossible. What hope was there of making Confederation a success unless political union were backed up by economic union such as could only be effected by railway communication between the provinces? Thus it was the Canadian Pacific came into being as one of the conditions under which Confederation was agreed to. Attempted as a Government enterprise it soon came to grief, establishing the fact that an attempt to build it under such auspices was foredoomed to failure with the probable accompaniment of national bankruptcy. After many schemes had been proposed, considered and abandoned, that laid down by the syndicate that finally built the road was accepted. Given ten years for the work, such energy and enterprise was displayed by the men at its head that it was completed in five years and on November 7, 1885, Lord Strathcona, then Mr. Donald A. Smith, drove the last spike that completed the task and the ringing of his hammer against the steel sounded the note that marked the successful consummation of Confederation.

Having built the line of steel across the continent, a still greater task lay before the Canadian Pacific, and one that more surely needed the vision of statesmen and the courage of giants. A wilderness had to be turned into a habited country. Even more lay behind the building of the Canadian Pacific than the joining up the Pacific Coast with Eastern Canada, important as that phase of the work was. "It is quite evident to me," wrote Sir John A. Macdonald in a letter in 1870, "that the United States Government are resolved to do all they can short of war to get possession of the Western Territory and we must take immediate and vigorous steps to counteract them. One of the first things to be done is to show unmistakably our resolve to build the Pacific Railway."

The building of the Canadian Pacific saved the West for Canada but that country had to be peopled and developed if Confederation were to be a permanent success and if the railroad were to make a living and continue its work of national development. To what extent it has succeeded is clearly evident in every part of this country to which its services extend. During its forty years of existence it has spent in this work and in immigration over $75,000,000 of its own money quite apart from anything spent in plant equipment or rolling stock for carrying on its business as a railway, steamship or hotel organization.

Since the day the first pick was swung in the building of the Canadian Pacific there has been a tremdous army of men and women working under its flag for the building and development of this country. The results of their efforts have gained Canada and the Canadian Pacific great credit the world over, and this work will continue to go forward with the Canadian Pacific doing its full share. I feel assured that this sixtieth year of Confederation will mark the opening of a new era for Canada in which national progress will be even more striking than it has been in the past, though it will be measured with a past crowded with proud memories.—E. W. Beatty.

GOVERNMENT IS RETURNED IN MANITOBA

Premier Bracken Assured of Majority Over All Other Parties.

CONSERVATIVES GAIN.

Complete Results Not Known Because of Transferable Vote.

WINNIPEG, June 29 (Canadian Press).—Endorsation of Progressive administration of Premier John Bracken, which was first elected to power in 1922, was given by the electorate of Manitoba yesterday. Premier Bracken and his Cabinet Ministers, with one exception, were elected.

The latest summary shows the following standing:

	Elected.	Leading.	In doubt.
Govt.	18	10	6
Lib.	4	1	0
Con.	7	6	0
Labor.	2	0	0
Ind.	1	0	0

In Winnipeg where 25 candidates were contesting the ten city seats, W. Sanford Evans and John T. Haig, both Conservatives, were heading the list, closely followed by H. A. Robson, the Liberal chieftain. Hon. W. J. Major, Attorney-General in the Bracken Administration, was staging a strong battle and with the transfer of second choices, it is expected will be carried to victory.

In contrast to previous elections, the Labor candidates were trailing far behind, although John Queen, leader of the group in the last Legislature, and S. J. Farmer were among the first ten. In the 1922 provincial election the Labor party elected four members, Liberals, two, Conservatives two, Progressives one and Independents one.

Returns received up to this hour indicate that this representation will be drastically changed, with the Government in a favorable position to capture two seats, and the Conservatives at least three, with gains at the expense of Labor.

With ideal weather prevailing throughout the Province yesterday, the electors turned out to register what is believed to have been a record vote. The majority of the rural constituencies showed a far better turnout than in 1922, while figures in Winnipeg were better by approximately 5,000.

The transferable ballot in 30 of the rural constituencies and proportional representation in Winnipeg will result in a delay in reaching a final verdict, as transfer of second choices will not be completed until late to-day or Thursday evening.

Referendum.

Winnipeg City and St. Boniface, by a large majority, has declared for sale of beer by the glass, but the trend of country returns, which were coming in slowly, were against the extension of present regulations for the sale of beer.

At 10.30 p.m. prohibition officials expressed the belief reports from the country districts would go heavily in favor of sale of beer by the bottle and offset the city vote.

With eighteen polls missing in Winnipeg the vote stood:

In favor of the extension of the sale of beer regulations, 27,906; against, 15,154. In favor of sale of beer by the glass, 26,281; in favour of sale by the bottle, 16,570; in favor of abolishing the right of brewers to sell beer direct to permit holders, 16,944, against 23,754.

With returns in complete St. Boniface voted in favor of beer by the glass by 300 majority.

So few reports had been received from the rural districts at this hour that it was impossible to form a picture of the situation. A total of twelve polls from scattered districts out of 815 polls in the province outside of Winnipeg showed 340 in favor of sale by the glass and 790 for sale by the bottle.

The striking feature of the election, however, was the showing of the Conservative party, which in final standings compiled at midnight was credited with 15 seats, a gain of 9. Liberals appear to have lost two seats ,with only three candidates declared elected and two leading, while Labor appears to have weathered the storm with its pre-dissolution representation unimpaired.

Independents Suffer.

The gains were chiefly made at the expense of the Independent group, which has elected only one member and is leading in two. In the last House the Independents had a voting strength of eight.

With the transferable ballot in operation in 30 of the 44 rural constituencies, concessions were made last night without clear majorities being registered, although was confidently believed that transfers and distribution of second and third choices would not counteract the majorities scored by the leading candidates. The same applies to Winnipeg, where proportional representation will decide the issue for the ten city seats.

T. C. Norris Elected.

Hon. T. C. Norris, in Lansdowne, was the only Liberal who was definitely assured of victory, and Dr. J. H. Edmison, Independent, was returned in a three-cornered contest in Brandon.

All party leaders are practically assured of election, with F. G. Taylor, Conservative, already declared elected in Portage La Prairie. Premier Bracken is meeting with stiff opposition from his Liberal opponent, Dr. S. Stephenson at The Pas, eight polls out of seventeen giving him a lead of only 100. H. A. Robson, Liberal leader, was making a strong run in Winnipeg.

THE DIAMOND JUBILEE--A CELEBRATION AND A RE-DEDICATION

With thankfulness for the vision of the statesmen of the past, pride in the progress that has been achieved in sixty years, and confidence and hope in the future of this country, Canadians from one end of the Dominion to the other will celebrate this week the Diamond Jubilee of Confederation.

Reasons for such a celebration are surely self-evident.

In the words of Canada's Premier, "these years have witnessed the settling and subduing of half a continent and the upbuilding of a new nation."

Listed elsewhere in this special edition is a roll of honour of citizens who have lived in Peterborough or in the vicinity of Peterborough since 1867.

The older people on this roll will look back over the years and recall Canada as it was when the dream of the Fathers of Confederation became a reality.

They will see again the Canada of 1867, four Provinces in all, ploughing their own furrow in the east, while westward and northward stretched an unknown and undeveloped territory, and then they will look upon the Dominion of today, the four Provinces now become nine, the once unknown West producing at least twenty times as much wheat as was grown in all Canada in 1867, and the Northland adding its yearly millions to the national wealth.

The child of Confederation has developed into a lusty young man.

The scarcely developed colony has become a nation. Manufactures, railways, exports have grown so tremendously that the Dominion now ranks as the seventh industrial nation of the world.

If any people on earth have reason to celebrate with pride and rejoicing a Diamond Jubilee surely it is the people of the Land of the Maple.

The jubilee is a time for giving thanks, for expressing pride in what has been accomplished, for voicing faith in the Canada that lies ahead, but more than that, it should be a time for re-dedication, an occasion that will inspire in the people of this favoured land a resolve that the vision of the Fathers of Confederation shall be given permanent form.

Celebrating what has been done means much, but how more important it is that such a celebration shall create a new spirit of endeavour and unity and compromise to ensure lasting and increased progress.

Out of the joy-making of Canada's Diamond Jubilee should emerge a nation of better Canadians, more grateful to the pioneers of this country, more appreciative of Canada's possibilities, and more willing to contribute their services in the spirit of the statesmen of 1867.

We have between the Atlantic and the Pacific great diversities of race and interest, we have economic differences in widely separated parts of the Dominion, diversities and differences which add to the perplexities of government and constitute an ever-present challenge.

It is well that on an occasion such as this we should recognize these conditions, and face them intrepidly and conscientiously.

It is better if on facing them we arrive at a determination to be broader and better Canadians in the future, Canadians who will think in terms of a whole Dominion, Canadians who will rise triumphant above race and creed and sectional differences, Canadians who will be big enough to put Canada first.

In a period of national stock-taking, such as is inevitably associated with a national jubilee, might it not also be well for us to adopt a more generous attitude toward new citizens of our country?

Pride in the fact of being born here is justifiable, thankfulness to the pioneer ancestors who made the comforts of today possible is most desirable, but neither pride nor thankfulness should lead to unjust treatment of newcomers, who, no matter whence they come, bring with them qualities that can be useful to this country.

There is too often a tendency to belittle the immigrant, despite the fact that all the people in Canada, except the Indians, are either immigrants or the descendents of immigrants.

Of the new citizens Canadians have a right to expect that they will endeavour to accept the customs and standards of living of Canada and to fit themselves into the social, industrial and business life of this country with a desire to become good Canadians.

On the other hand, new citizens have a right to expect of Canadians a friendly welcome and an acceptance into the national family.

Canada's Diamond Jubilee will be celebrated by nine million Canadians, who, no matter what their origin, are proud to know that they are citizens of a great Dominion.

There was no thought of origin in Canada's great fighting army in the World War.

The men who wore the Maple Leaf, whether they first saw the light of day in Ontario, or down by the sea, or on the Western prairie, or in a Scottish village, or on an Irish farm, or within the sound of London's Bow Bells, or below the international line, were just Canadians, proud of the name, and by their gallantry, giving it a new meaning and a new fame.

Out of this nation-wide celebration of the jubilee of Confederation let us hope that the spirit that made the Canadian army a hard-hitting unit will be transmitted to the whole Canadian people so that 1927 will ever be gratefully remembered as the year that witnessed a new conception of Canadian citizenship and a re-dedication of the people of this country to the ideals of the Fathers of Confederation.

Let us go forward from this great period of national rejoicing and thanksgiving a people firmly united and of abounding faith in themselves and the greatness of their country.

A phrase in a most kindly editorial reference to Canada in a special Diamond Jubilee edition of The London (Eng.) Times is worth quoting.

"Today," says "The Thunderer," "the Mother Country congratulates the eldest among her Dominions upon the attainment of her Diamond Jubilee, hoping with all confidence that Dominion Day 1927 marks not merely the end of the first phase but the beginning of fresh greatness."

In acknowledging the congratulations of The Times Canadians will echo its hope that this country is launching out into a new era of development and prosperity, spiritually as well as materially.

BETHANY MAN ELECTS TRIAL BEFORE JUDGE

Thomas Scott Faces Charges of Assaulting Family and Attempting Suicide.

EVIDENCE TAKEN

Wife and Daughter Tell of Attack Made With Bar and Axe.

BETHANY, June 29.—Thomas Scott yesterday elected to be tried before a judge on the charges of assaulting his wife and children and of attempting suicide. Thomas Hall of Cobourg appeared for the defendant, Crown Attorney W. F. Kerr, K.C., prosecuted for the Crown, and the preliminary hearing was heard before Magistrate F. M. Floyd of Cobourg.

Thomas Scott, on the night of June 19th attacked his wife and two small children with an iron bar and an axe, injuring the three of them. He then attempted to take his own life.

Mrs. Scott appeared in court with her head all bandaged. Neta, a girl of 14, had a large bandage on her head, and Mary, about six years old, had one hand tied up as she had to have part of one finger amputated.

Bar Produced.

The iron bar which Scott used was produced in court, and is about two feet and a half long, and has a slit running down one side which in all probability broke the skin on Mrs. Scott's skull.

All three appeared to be suffering from the nervous strain they have passed through. Neta broke down several times while giving her evidence, and little Mary was in such a nervous condition that she was not called upon to give any evidence.

The trouble appears to have started when Scott was ordered from his home by his wife and son. He claims that they have gotten all his property and then were kicking him out.

The Case.

The first witness called by Mr. Kerr was Dr. J. J. Hamilton of Bethany. On Sunday, June 19, Dr. Hamilton was called to the home of Edward Youngman to give professional services to Mrs. Scott and her two daughters. He found Mrs. Scott suffering from a laceration of the scalp about three inches long, which in all probability had been caused by something heavy.

Neta he found suffering from a bruise on the scalp where a blood clot had formed and there was a large swelling in the front of her head but no marks.

Mary had the forefinger of her right hand split open and the bone crushed from the first joint down which made it necessary for him to amputate that part of the finger. In his opinion, he said, they all would recover from the injuries, but he had been afraid of concussion of the brain in the case of Neta.

Married 26 Years.

Mrs. Thomas Scott, in her evidence, said she had been married to the defendant for 26 years, and that they had eight children living and four dead.

Mr. Kerr—What happened on the night of the 19th?

Witness—No trouble started until little Mary was hit.

Witness then said she did not see Mr. Scott hit Mary, but she heard her scream. She, Neta and Robert then went to the rescue of Mary, and in doing so he struck her with the bar on the head. A tussle followed, in which the three took the bar from Scott, but he got out of the house, and when Neta went out he struck her on the head with an axe.

Mr. Kerr—Is he subject to a violent temper?

Witness (after some deliberation)—He certainly is.

The three of them, witness said, then went to the home of Mr. Youngman.

On cross-examination by Mr. Hall, Mrs. Scott said that she did not see the defendant strike Neta, but she saw him with an axe in his hand. There had been no quarrel that day, but when Scott stepped in the door that evening with the bar he had sworn and said he would finish her. Mrs. Scott then said there had been ill-feeling about financial difficulties, and she had told him that he would have to get out. He wanted to stay but she would not hear tell of it.

Mr. Hall—Did you hear your son use just as abusive language at his father as he used with you?

Witness—No.

Mr. Hall—Did your husband ask you during the day if you were going to turn him out?

Witness—Yes, I could not live with him.

Why?

He is a bad man and rude to his family and his wife.

Neta Scott.

Neta Scott told of her father coming into the house with the iron bar. "He soon asked, 'Lill, are you going to forgive me?' Mamma never answered. 'Lill, are you going to forgive me before it is too late?'" With that Scott struck the little girl and then hit her mother. "They then managed to get the bar from him. She tried to get out but her father had his back against the door, but somehow or other the door gave way, and when they got outside her father struck

LABOR OPPOSE HOUSE REFORM

Deprives Commons Of Control Over Finances Possessed For Generations.

ENTRENCHES LORDS.

LONDON, June 29. Canadian Press—The Labor party's motion of censure in the House of Commons with respect to the Government's proposal for reform of the House of Lords, is couched in the following terms:

"This House regrets that the government has put forward a scheme for fundamental changes in the House of Lords, which gerrymanders the constitution in the interest of the Conservative party, and deprives the House of Commons that control over finances which it has possessed for generations. The proposal entrenches the House of Lords on a hereditary basis more firmly against the people's will than for centuries past, and in defiance of every precedent of modern times; it robs the electors of power to deal with the House of Lords, and this House declares it to be an outrage on the constitution to force such proposals through Parliament without a mandate from the people."

It is hoped by the party that Ramsay MacDonald will move the vote of censure, but if this is impossible it will be moved by J. R. Clynes.

Kiwanis Club Hears Able Review Of Confederation Of Provinces And Lays Plans For Celebration

City Solicitor Joseph Wearing Is Speaker at Luncheon When Jubilee is Main Topic and Principal Business—Kiwanians Learn Facts In Interesting Address.

MOUTH ORGAN ENTERTAINMENT ADDS PLEASURE TO MOST OUTSTANDING PATRIOTIC GATHERING

Most Members of Club Are Joining in Some Activity in Connection With Big Three-Day Celebration in Peterborough —Some Indians, Some Statesmen.

Today's Kiwanis luncheon was brimming over with the spirit of Confederation. In the singing of Canadian songs and choruses, the playing of martial airs, the reading of messages of goodwill, the making of arrangements for the local celebration, and most of all, in the outstanding address by Kiwanian Joseph Wearing, City Solicitor, the key-note was one of high patriotism. President Isaac P. McNabb was in the chair.

After a short business session, in which members agreed to act as Indians, serve on floats, manage booths, and a dozen other things in connection with the three big days of the Diamond Jubilee celebration, a mouth organ entertainment was given by three members, Herb. McCannan, Joe Wearing, and Art Reynolds joined in several choruses, and then contributed solos. The playing of the mouth organ is usually associated with youth, and certainly none of these Kiwanians has lost his youthful skill.

During the selection of members for various roles in the procession and pageant an amusing incident occurred when Art Reynolds, was called upon to act the part of an Indian in the capturing of a fort during the progress of the pageant. "I was to be a Father of Confederation," Mr. Reynolds said, "then Champlain, and now you want me to be an Indian. I'm going to be Frontenac." A man can't be everything, but apparently the obliging manager of the Bank of Commerce is willing to try almost any role once.

A card was read from the Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, Kiwanis Club, conveying a fraternal greeting on the occasion of the celebration. Prettily decorated with crossed Canadian-United States flags, the card reads: "The Kiwanis Club of Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, extends to all Canadian Kiwanis Clubs its heartiest congratulations upon the occasion of your Jubilee celebrating the Sixtieth Anniversary of Confederation."

The highly instructive and very interesting address by Mr. Wearing follows:

What Confederation Means.

To all Canadians the word "Confederation" connotes the act of union which was consummated July 1st, 1867, when the British North America Act came into force, uniting into one federal self-governing country the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia under the name of the Dominion of Canada and providing for the extension of the confederating principle to all portions of the British Dominions lying north of the United States.

The word "Confederation" is derived from two Latin words, "Con" and "Foedus," meaning a banding together, and from the standpoint of political history we get the idea of a legal bond which binds securely together the different constituent parts of a country into one organic whole, having itself a different entity from the parts which enter into it. I mention this because the newspapers from time to time publish reports of anticipated secession on the part of some disgruntled area which feels that it is not getting its share out of the pork barrel. Having come into the Confederation, no province can ever get out without the consent of all the other provinces. This is a political principle with respect to the federating of countries, states or provinces, settled for all time by the Civil War of the United States and recognized by all authorities on constitutional law. Apart from this I thought Mackenzie King put it very neatly to a delegate from the Maritime Provinces who, during the hearing of a deputation at Ottawa, suggested none too politely that if their demands were not granted they would secede. "Where to?" asked Mackenzie King. The effect was the same as when a boy of 12 or 14 complains that he is not getting proper treatment at home and his dad suggests that he try some place else.

In order to have an intelligent comprehension of the scheme of Confederation we require to have some knowledge at least of the constitutional evolution preceding it. The philosophy of Canadian history is well worthy of serious study, and if the structure of our national life as it pertains to government is secure and permanent, it is because the foundations have been well and truly laid.

The spirit of those who laid these foundations is indicated in [illegible] of George Brown in the fan[illegible] bates on the motion to adopt Quebec resolutions in the session of 1865 when he said: "Sir, the gentlemen who formed the conference at Quebec did not enter upon their work with the miserable idea of getting the advantage of each other but with a due sense of the greatness of the work they had on hand, with an earnest desire to do justice to all and keeping always in mind that what would benefit one section in such a union would necessarily benefit the whole." Great work from a great man, and reflecting the equal greatness of his colleagues!

Quebec Act First.

The first corner-stone in the structure of Confederation was undoubtedly laid when what was known as the Quebec Act was passed by the British Parliament in June, 1774; fifteen years after the glorious victory of Wolfe on the Plains of Abraham. Previous to this, the conquered country known as French Canada had been under military rule, and as the French authorities in Alsace are learning to-day, there is no more thankless job under heaven than trying to govern a conquered country. As might be supposed, there had been continual conflict between the old French settlers of Quebec with their laws, language, and religion and the British who naturally began to find their way into the country following the Union Jack and who for the most part adopted toward the French the truculent attitude of masters.

The controversy over the Quebec Bill was a square fight between the champions of the rights of the conquered French subjects and the champions of the rights of the invading British subjects, and although the bill was bitterly assailed by the redoubtable Lord Chatham, who left a sick bed to oppose it and who told the House of Lords that "it made Roman Catholicism the established religion of a vast continent," the inherent fairness of the British people prevailed and we realize now how wise the Act was, for it undoubtedly saved Canada for the Empire in the crisis further south which was then imminent. To put it simply, the Quebec Act preserved for the people of Quebec their religion, language and civil law, and at the same time established the more beneficent criminal law of England.

The Quebec Act was not a perfect piece of legislation nor was it in the long run sufficient but it proved a real corner stone for the great national structure to be erected later. As one writer has said, "To the modern mind indeed it would seem a crime to have tried to stamp out French nationality in Canada, a crime not only against the French Canadians but against all Canadians of all time. For it cannot be questioned that whatever the transient drawbacks and difficulties may be Canada is the richer for its two-fold heritage, for being people from a Celtic as well as an Anglo-Saxon stock, for its pride in French as well as British customs and traditions, for its use of the two greatest languages and its access to the two greatest literatures in the world."

JOSEPH WEARING.

In spite of the opinion too commonly held by people who have made no study of the subject that Canada has been under little or no obligation to the Mother Land during the years of her development, and that she has to shake herself free from irksome shackles binding her to Great Britain, the actual truth is that her development would have been impossible without the guidance and protection of the homeland, and in each step along the road of self-government she has been gladly assisted by the British authorities.

It is to the everlasting credit of Great Britain that the lesson learned through the loss of the American colonies has never been forgotten. The right note was struck by the younger Pitt when in a great speech in the hour of gloom over the loss, he said: "Let us examine what is left, the misfortunes of individuals and kingdoms that are laid open and examined with true wisdom are more than half redressed.' When he uttered these words Pitt had no conception of the amount that actually was left, for of course no one then dreamed of the future greatness of the land north of the St. Lawrence River.

How Pitts' heart would have burned if by some divine inspiration he could have realized how much in the light of to-day was actually left!

Canada Saved to Britain.

As I have already indicated there is no question that the generous treatment of the British government toward the French undoubtedly saved Canada for the Empire during the Revolutionary War. The waves of rebellion beat in vain against the bulwarks of Quebec. But the close of the American War and the influx of the U. E. Loyalists brought new problems because loyal as those subjects were who abandoned the Thirteen Colonies for a continuance of British rule they had been reared in an atmosphere of independence, and were not prepared to submit to the extreme paternal form of government which up to that time was the only practical form in a conquered country.

To remedy this the Constitutional Act of 1791 was passed which in the words of Simcoe ,the first Lieut.-Governor of Upper Canada was intended to give to the North American Colonies a constitution which was "the very image and transcript of that of Great Britain." I fear that Simcoe allowed his imagination to color his oratory in his description of this new Act, but it did indeed extend the principle of responsible government and also divided the colony into Upper and Lower Canada.

The results following the laying of this second corner stone were not altogether happy, however, because in Lower Canada no English Canadian could get into the elected Assembly, and no French Canadian into the nominated Legislative Council. There were also continual bickerings between the two provinces over the divisions of customs dues levied at the Port of Montreal and under the control of Lower Canada. Quebec getting her hand on the money first, always saw to it that she acquired the lion's share.

PAGEANT TO BE LEADING EVENT

Depicts History of Canada From Time of Lief Ericson.

CLOSES WITH 1867 LEVEE

The Historial Pageant, or "Masque of Canada", as it is called, which will be presented at the Exhibition grounds on Friday and Saturday evenings of this week, in connection with the Diamond Jubilee celebration of Confederation, promises to be one of the outstanding events of a wonderful program arranged for the occasion. It is under the auspices of the Local Council of Women and the direction of Roy Mitchell and his wife, Jocelyn Taylor Mitchell, of Toronto.

Running one and one half hours in length, the "Masque of Canada," with Mr. Mitchell as narrator and an appropriate musical score throughout, opens with a scene set in traditional times, when Lief and Lucky, leader of a Viking host, visited the Dominion, which he christened "Vineland" and its inhabitants, the Indians, "Skraelings," and closes with the Levee in the time of Governor General Viscount Monk, in 1867.

The scenes depicted include an Indian village, a portrayal of "Neptune in the New World," the first play ever enacted on this continent, Champlain at Orillia, or Caragouha, as it was then called, a scene from old Quebec, in the time of the Hundred Associates, a Lot Drawing episode, when the settlers draw for their Crown grants, Tecumseh before Detroit, a country dance following a bee, and the Levee during Viscount Monk's time.

About four hundred people will take part in the pageant, and the scenery will be specially devised in nine triangular columns called trigone, which permit of three different changes, one in blue for the French episodes, one in ivory for the Revolutionary scenes and one in green for the outdoor portions. Costumes, setting and musical score are all in keeping with the periods portrayed in the different sections of the pageant.

THOMAS SCOTT STRUCK BY BUS

By-Standers Say Man Being Taken to Jail Stepped in Front of Car.

While Thomas Scott of Bethany, who is charged with attempting to kill his wife and children and end his own life last week, was being removed to Cobourg jail by motor yesterday afternoon, after a preliminary hearing before the magistrate at Bethany, he was badly crushed by the Peterborough-Toronto motor bus.

The accident, or second deliberate attempt at suicide, for, according to witnesses, the man placed himself in the path of the oncoming 'bus, occurred on the Provincial Highway at the foot of Wood's Hill, while the entire party in the car which was conveying the man to Cobourg Jail, was out of the motor investigating tire trouble. Dr. Turner of Millbrook was summoned and gave Scott first aid, later having him removed to Cobourg in the Port Hope ambulance. He was badly crushed about the head and face and suffering from nervous shock.

FIVE CHILDREN MOTHER DIE IN THEIR HOME

Whole Family at White Stone Wiped Out By Asphyxiation.

DESPAIR OVER POVERTY.

Authorities Believe Children Were Victims of Woman's Suicide.

WHITE STONE, S. Y., June 29. — Mrs. Marie Freedman, aged 35, and her five young children, died in their home yesterday, the mother apparently a suicide by gas.

Dr. Babcock, of Flushing hospital, who was summoned to the Freedman home, said that all six members of the family were dead when he arrived.

The children were: Theodore, 10; Janet, 7; Catherine, 4; Nancy, 3 and Joseph 2.

Mrs. Freedman the police said, turned on the gas in the kitchen stove.

The Freedmans were poor. The mother of five hungry youngsters would not ask assistance from her neighbors and was unable by her own endeavors to care for the needs of her family. She feared her children would be placed in an institution.

Died in Sleep.

Monday night Mrs. Freedman wrote three letters, which were found yesterday on the dining room table. Then she put the four youngest children in her bed. Ten year old Theodore was to remain with his mother, who sought comfort from her eldest child as she prepared to take the lives of all of them.

When the doors of the dining room were first opened yesterday Theodore was found clasped in his mother's arms. The other children except Janet, seemed to have died as they slept. The seven year old girl apparently had partly awakened as the fumes of gas spread over the apartment and had attempted to crawl out of bed.

Birds Alone Lived.

As investigators entered the home yesterday the song of three canaries greeted them. The birds, in a room alone, were the only living things in the house.

Mrs. Freedman's husband died on April 18. Neighbors said the mother returned here two days ago from Chicago, where she had been summoned by her husband's parents. The relatives, neighbors said, suggested that the five children be placed in an institution. Neighbors saw Mrs. Freedman on Sunday night after she had put her babies to bed. Joseph Nussbaum, who lives in the same building smelled gas yesterday. He traced the odor to the Freedman apartment but hesitated to enter because of the singing of the birds.

Finally he summoned a policeman. They broke in the door.

Since the father's death neighbors said the Freedman children have not had proper food and clothing.

her with the axe several times. By that time the rest of the family were part way across the field to Mr. Youngman's, and her father said to her in her dazed condition, 'Come on, I am going to cut my throat'."

On cross-examination witness told about a quarrel her brother William had had in the afternoon with her father when her brother had ordered his father off the farm, as he said he had put up with him long enough. She said they both used very abusive language. Her father wanted to stay and work for his board, but Mrs. Scott and William had refused to let him.

Scott refused to make any statement, and with that the case for the Crown closed, and he was committed to be tried at the Sessions of the Peace before a judge.

Attempted Suicide.

Mr. Scott was then charged with attempted suicide, and in this case he asked to be tried by a judge. Edward Youngman, a neighbor of Scott, told of going to the Scott home on Monday, June 20, about 8.30 in the morning, and finding Scott lying on the bed with his throat cut and all covered with blood.

"Why were you fool enough to do it, Tom?" witness said he asked, and Scott replied, "I am sorry I did it." "Have I not got a dying look?" Scott asked. "No." "Have I not made a good job of it?" "Unfortunately not."

Constable Rowland told of going to the home and finding Scott. He and Mr. Youngman bandaged the cut in his throat and took him to Dr. Hamilton. Scott told neither witness what he did the deed with. Dr. Hamilton, in his evidence, said he found Scott to have a cut on the right side of his throat about two inches long and one inch deep. He had asked, "What did you do it for, Tom?" and Scott answered, "I did not want to live."

Witness said the cut was about a quarter of an inch from the carotid artery, and had severed the external jugular vein.

The defendant told Dr. Hamilton that he cut his throat with a razor, and then he told him of the financial difficulties between himself and his family. He said he had deeded everything to his wife, but he kept part of the chattels. Later he sold the chattels, but when he thought he was not going to get paid for them he gave them to his family also.

What did they want you to do?
Get out and stay out.

RING PRESENTED

Miss Vera Squire Receives Token of Friendship From League Members.

On Thursday evening, June 23rd, Stewart Hall Young People's Society held their annual picnic at Wallace's Point. Though the weather was cool, there was a large crowd asembled at the well-filled tables at seven o'clock. After supper all enjoyed games until darkness fell. Then Mrs. Cardwell's kind invitation into the hall was accepted.

Mr. Lynn Stewart, president of the League, called Miss Vera Squire to the platform and Miss Janet Chambers read the following address, during which Mr. Harold Dawson, on behalf of the League, presented her with an Eastern Star ring set with a diamond.

Stewart Hall, June 23rd, 1927.

Dear Miss Squire,—It is with deep regret that we the members of the Young Peole's Society, have learned of your decision to sever your relationship with our community.

During your stay here you have so won our respect and affection that we know we are losing one whose help and influence had done much to make our society a sucess. We feel we could not let the ocasion pass without conveying to you in some small way our appreciation of your services not only to our society, but to the community at large.

We ask you to accept this ring —not as a reward for your labour, but as a slight token of our apprpeciation of your help and influence in our society.

May we hope that in the days to come this little remembrance may bring to you happy memories of the society, whose members regret your departure, but hope that the best that life can give may be yours in the future.

Signed on behalf of the League:
Lynn Stewart, Harold Dawson, Walter Thorn, Grace Stewart, Janet Chambers, and Gertie Thompson.

In a few words, Miss Squire voiced her appreciation and thanks to the people, who have been so kind to her during her two years' sojourn as Public School teacher in the section.

MILLBROOK LODGE ATTENDS SERVICE

Masons Hear Sermon on Ideals of Order at Annual Parade.

MILLBROOK, June 29. — J. B. Hall Lodge, A.F. & A.M., No. 145, attended divine worship in the United Church on Sunday evening, about forty members parading from the Lodge Rooms at 7.30 p.m.

The choir had prepared special music for the occasion the selections including an anthem, "This is the Day Which the Lord Hath Made," a quartette, "Lord, Is It It?" by Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Johnston, Miss May Byam, and Mr. M. McDowell. The ushers for the service were Messrs. A. J. Brown, J. H. Might, J. Byam, and K. Skitch.

Rev. F. H. Howard preached from the text, "Fear God, and keep His commandments," found in Ecclesiastes, 12;13, "this being the whole duty of man as summed up not alone by a Master Mason, but by the Grand Master."

In an inspiring discourse, particularly appropriate to the Masonic Order, Mr. Howard developed the thought that Masonry, the origin of which is lost in the mists of antiquity, has always in principle and practice followed the injunction of the text.

The fear of God takes away the fear of man, hence through persecutions dating from remote times, three of which were referred to in detail, the Order has stood firm to its well-established tenets, and active practice trusting in God, fearing Him, and keeping His commandments irrespective of man's opposition. Uersecutions borne fearlessly for rightousness' sake react to the blessin gof organization or individual.

"our Order has always been of a rational and improving nature, with a genius for progress, spirituality, and Christianity. Its creditable works have been found in all lands, both ancient and modern. Moses was initiated into the mysteries of Masonry and Solomon was its Grand Master. Its purposes and practices are the highest among all fraternal societies; persecution and opposition has but intensified its faith and zeal. Endeavour to be worthy of your Masonic ancestry. May prudence direct, temperance control, chastity characterize, fortitude support, and wisdom direct all your actions.

"A true Mason is godly, truly manly, following the text in active practice, 'fearing God, and doing His commandments' as his privilege and duty, all of which leads ultimately to glory."

The usual vot of thanks were pased upon the return to the Lodge Room. Brother R. I. Fallis is the Worshipful Master of the J. B. Hall Lodge this year.

CANADIAN PURCHASERS PAID HIGH FOR SMUGGLED LIQUOR

Shown in Evidence Given Royal Commission at Halifax.

BROUGHT ON COAST.

Cost Forty-six Cents a Gallon and Sold For Four Dollars.

HALIFAX, N.S., June 29 (Canadian Press). — Demerara rum, twenty thousand gallons in one cargo, was brought up to a point off the Nova Scotia coast about twelve miles from the Town of Lunenburg last year by the schooner D. D. McKenzie and sold there to Canadian purchasers. The rum cost 46 cents a gallon in Georgetown, Demerara. It sold for $4 a gallon off the Nova Scotia coast. It was not declared, and no duty was paid on it.

These were some of the high spots in evidence given before the Royal Customs Commission yesterday afternoon by S. A. Ernst of Mahone Bay, who occupied the witness stand for almost half an hour. The duty on liquor entering Canada is $10 a gallon. Mr. Ernst, who is one of the shareholders in the D. D. McKenzie, proved a ready witness. He answered the questions put to him by Gordon Lindsay, Assistant Counsel, readily, and he agreed that the auditors be given access to his books, bank-books and records. He told the Commission, at the outset of his examination, that he was a merchant.

The liquor operations of the D. D. McKenzie, said Mr. Ernst, had been confined to the year, 1926. She had abandoned this lucrative but also dangerous business, and was now engaged in the less romantic occupation of transporting cargoes of salt. She had made but one rum trip from Demerara when the 20,000 gallons were brought to the Nova Scotia coast.

Mr. Ernst told the Commission that he was also interested in two other ships which had been utilized in the rum business. The Partara had brought up a cargo similar in size and disposed of at about the same figure. Another schooner, the "Partara" had been engaged in the same traffic. He confessed that he had not included any of the profits made by him in his income tax return. He had always understood, Mr. Ernst said, that any profits made outside of regular business should not be shown for taxation purposes.

Chief Commissioner Brown suggested that many people would be glad to agree with this.

Purchased by Cable

Rum was purchased in Georgetown by cable, the witness said. Apparently little difficulty was encountered in disposing of the cargoes. People in the vicinity were aware, said Mr. Ernst, that the D. D. McKenzie, for instance, had gone down to Demarara. They would ask him when she would return, or if she was standing off the Nova Scotia coast.

"If anyone asked me, I told them when the boat was there," he said. Also he had a canvassing agent working. People who wanted rum went out and got it. The D. D. McKenzie simply stood off the coast and supplied customers who went out to her.

The operations of the D. D. McKenzie and her sister ships shared the stage yesterday with transactions in liquor by members of the Dauphinee family who reside in the vicinity of Tantallon, not far from Halifax. Four members of this family appeared, and were examined by R. L. Calder, K.C., Commission counsel as to their, activities. Some time ago, Sergeant Blakeney of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police patrol here found a cache of liquor on the farm of Harry Dauphinee ,which Nathanie; Dauphinee stated yesterday belonged to him. The cache, according to the Mounted Police, contained thirty-three cases of assorted liquors and forty gallons of alcohol, but Nathaniel Dauphinee thought yesterday that this estimate wass too high.

Harry Dauphinee, of Tantallon, was the first member of the family to take the stand. He said that the owned a small farm of about three acres located on the shore, but he disclaimed any knowledge of the liquor cache on his premises.

"How did your uncle's liquor get into your cache?" asked Mr. Calder.

Mr. Dauphinee did not know.

H. W. Jones, appearing for the witness, told the commission that Harry Dauphinee had already been tried before a jury and acquitted.

Mr. Calder agreed with Mr. Jones that the witness could not be tried twice for the same offense, but he took the ground that Harry Dauphinee might be sued for the duty on the smuggled liquor. He asked the witness to allow the commission auditor to inspect his bank account, and Mr. Dauphinee agreed to do this.

Brought Liquor By Boat.

Then Byron Dauphinee, also of Tantallon, took the stand. At the outset of his examination, this witness said that he had not dealt in liquor. Later, however, after he had told the commission that he owned two motor boats, in addition to a motor truck, he said he brought some liquor in by boat. He had brought it in from a vessel off the coast for "a bunch of Jews."

"What vessel?" asked Mr. Calder.

"The McKenzie."

He could not tell who the Jews were, and he claimed to have run only two cargoes. The first one consisted of about 125 cases, while in the second there was about 300 gallons of rum. He did not know what happened to the liquor after it was transferred to the Jews.

"How much profit did you make on the liquor deals?" asked Mr. Calder.

"About $200."

"Did you declare them in your income tax return?"

"I never made an income tax return in my life."

"And you have a store?"

"I have a little store."

"And two motor cars and two speed boats?"

"I was never asked for an income tax return."

Mr. Dauphinee agreed to allow the auditors to look at his accounts also.

JOSHUA COLLINS FENIAN VETERAN

Has Lived in Peterborough Since Arrival From Ireland in 1857.

NOW 89 YEARS OLD

Among the few remaining veterans of the Fenian raid still living in Peterborough is Joshua D. Collins, who has been a citizen of this community since coming here from Belfast in the year 1857. Mr. Collins, who had been a member of the Militia for many years before the invasion of Canada by the fanatics south of the line, was one of the party which left here for service under Captain Kennedy, who had been a sergeant in the regular army in Britain.

On arrival at Toronto the Peterborough men were greeted by a sight which convinced even the most skeptical that they were engaged in no mere playing at soldiering—the bringing in of the dead and wounded from the battlefield at Ridgeway. Although members of the Peterboro units formed part of the contingent which came to grips with the invaders the company of which Mr. Collins wast part did not actually engage in hostilities. To their lot, however, fell an equally trying duty. It was anticipated that a number of simultaneous crossings of the border would be made, and Mr. Collins was one of the men who were placed in trains which travelled from point to point for days and nights to confront enemies who were believed to be in Canadian soil. The rumors which led to these extended journeys proved to be baseless, but the trip did not end without casualties. The weather was very hot and a number of the men climbed to the roof of the carriages. After some time, Mr. Collins observed little streams of blood trickling down the windows and called the attention of some of his comrades to this fact. Investigation revealed a grim explanation of the crimson stream. Passing through the very low tunnels on the line the men had failed to realize their danger and their heads had been crushed by coming in contact with the roofs of the tunnels.

Although he has lived entirely in Canada since first emigrating here Mr. Collins at one time meditated making the trip to Georgetown, British Guiana, at the request of an uncle but the fulfilment of this purpose was prevented by a tragedy. Mr. Collins' uncle, a Mr. Dunlop, visiting friends in Peterborough accepted an invitation to hunt deer which were then very plentiful in the neighborhood. Hurrying through the woods in the endeavor to get close to a deer, Mr. Dunlop slipped and discharged both barrels of the muzzle loader into his thigh. He was carried back to Peterborough, where his legt was amputated, but he died soon after the operation.

Since his experiences in the Fenian raids Mr. Collins has lived uneventfully in the city here. He is now 89 years of age and is somewhat deaf. Two years ago he underwent a very serious operation which taxed his strength to a considerable extent, but he eats and sleeps all right and looks well preserved for a man of his age.

HORSE STRANGLED.

Bonar Law Boys Have Severe Loss While Fishing.

BONAR LAW, June 28. — What proved to be the sad ending of a fishing party happened on Tuesday, when two boys of Spry's Settlement had taken their horse and rig and gone to Callahan's Rapids to fish. Leaving their horse tied to a tree, it became wound up and strangled itself to death. When the boys returned they found their horse just about gone. It only lived a short while. The horse was owned by William Spry of Spry's Settlement. It was a valuable horse, and indeed will be a big loss to Mr. Spry.

OBITUARY.

MILLBROOK, June 29.—Frederick William Wallace, formerly of Millbrook, and of recent years living at Maple Creek, Sask., passed away in the Cypress Hills, Sask., on Saturday, June 11, in his sixty-sixth year.

Death came suddenly from heart failure, while he was trying to extricate his automobile from a boggy spot on the road. Deceased had never fully recovered his normal health since serving in South Africa during the Boar war. He leaves to mourn his loss, his widow (nee Bertha Reid, Millbrook), and one daughter, Henrietta; two sisters, Mrs. J. W. Stevenson, of Balcarra, Sask., and Mrs. S. W. Wallace, of Carlyle, Manitoba. There are also several nieces and nephews.

The funeral took place from Saint Mary's church, on Tuesday, June 14, to Maple Creek cemetery.

JOHN K. GALVIN.

The death occurred at St. Joseph's Hospital, Peterborough, on the morning of June 20, of John K. Galvin, one of Eninsmore's most respected citizens. Though his passing was not unexpected, as a result of a recent serious attack of pneumonia, it was, nevertheless, a shock to his loving family and to his host of friends.

Born in Ennismore in 1851, Mr. Galvin spent there his long life of seevnty-five years. In that time young and old learned to love his bright sunny disposition, to appreciate his generous hospitality, and to admire his devotion to duty, whether this latter were owed to his God, his church, his family, or his neighbor. Mr. Galvin took a practical interest in all the religious and social activities of St. Martin's parish, and was a life-long member of St. Martin's church choir. He never grew old, but up to his last short illness, retained his interest in the welfare of his family, as well as in all the old friends of his boyhood and manhood. In fact, it would seem that for the very purpose of renewing these friendships he within recent years travelled considerably. The esteem in which the late Mr. Galvin was held, was shown by the numerous spiritual bouquets, and by the many expressions of sympathy from all sides.

The late Mr. Galvin is survived by his three daughters, Reverend Sister M. St. Louis, of St. Joseph's Community, Sault Ste. Marie; Mrs. John E. O'Donoghue, Ennismore, and Mrs. J. B. Doran, Ticket Agent, Hector DesHarnois, Medicine Hat; also by 4 sisters, one brother, Mrs. W. H. Crough, Ennismore, Mrs. M. C. Sullivan, Ennismore, Mrs. Byrns, Rainy River, Mrs. Tynan, Los Angeles, and Garret of Port Arthur. His wife, Bridget Sullivan, predeceased him less than two years ago. Rev. Sister Miriam, Westfort, and Rev. Sister St. Fergus, St. Joseph's Hospital, are nieces.

The funeral of the late Mr. Galvin was held at St. Martin's Church, Ennismore, on Wednesday, June 22nd, requiem mass being sung by Rev. P. J. Galvin, Downeyville. The following clergy were also in the sanctuary: Rev. J. V. McAuley, pastor at Ennismore; Rev. Fathers P. J. McGuire, J. J. O'Brien, P. Costello, J. Guiry, C. J. Carroll, all of Peterborough; and Rev. James McGuire, Douro. At the close of the mass, Rev. P. Costello spoke in eloquent terms of the deceased, taking for his text, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." While the Reverend Father extended his own sympathy and that of his brother priests to the bereaved family, yet he left with them that spiritual peace and joy that the Holy Mother Church never fails to give to those who live worthily, for she bids her sorrowing children remember "that eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things which God has prepared for those who love Him."

The pall-bearers were: Messrs. Wm. Killen, P. Y. Crowley, B. Flood, Leonard Clancy, W. D. Cavanagh, and T. Murphy who bore the remains to St. Martin's Cemetery for interment.

DR. J. P. ARMOUR.

Dr. John P. Armour, well known medical practitioner, passed away at his home, 46 Ontario street, St. Catharines, following a short illness. While he had been ailing for the past week, his illness was not considered to be serious and his passing has caused a severe shock to his wide host of friends.

He was born in Hastings, Ontario, 68 years ago, studying medicine at the Toronto University, from where he opened his first office at Lakefield, Ont. Later he made a visit to London and Glasgow, studying in the hospitals in those cities. In 1887 he came to St. Catharines and soon built up a large practice, his skill in operations and his vast knowledge of medicine placing him in the fore of the medical profession. For a period of eight years he represented this district on the Medical Council.

As An Author.

In addition to his medical work he found time to devote to authorship and several books have been published bearing his name and receiving wide distribution. He was the author of "Edenindia" and others.

He also found time to give to his city and served on the City Council in 1896 as Chairman of Finance and also on the Collegiate Institute Board. He was a coroner of the County and in younger days handled the majority of the inquests held in the city.

He was a Conservative in politics and a member of the First United Church. He is survived b yhis wife (nee F. Marie Cotton), two brothers and one sister, James of Peterboro, Wm. of Hastings and Miss Carrie Armour of Hastings.

In the passing of the late Dr. Armour, St. Catharines has lost a stalwart citizen. A man of sterling character and one held in the highest esteem by the medical fraternity and by his wide circle of friends and acquaintances. The flag of the City Hall was flown at half mast in his honor.

Funeral services were held on Saturday afternoon from his late residence to Victoria Lawn Cemetery.

W. H. Thompson was born in Peterborough in 1855. "I can remember the celebration as if it happened to-day," remarked Mr Thompson. "A band was here, leading the parade of volunteer firemen, and others joining in the great event. I have never seen a parade like this one ever since," he stated, "although I am looking forward to the one here on July First, as something worth while."

HAVELOCK WAS 'MATHISTOWN'; WILLIAM MATHISON RECALLS

Railroad Town's Oldest Resident Tells of Days Before Railroads.

THREE HOUSES

Today's Business Section Was Bush Land—Path Led to Post Office.

HAVELOCK, June 29. — William Mathison, Havelock's oldest pioneer, has the distinction of being the only resident of the village who can recall the time that Havelock was called Mathistown. Some years before Confederation the name was changed to Havelock by Peter Pearce, who was a great admirer of General Havelock, after whom the village is named.

Mr. Mathison's parents, Andrew and Janette Mathison, came to Canada in 1842 from Galashiels, Scotland, and he is the youngest of a family of five and was born here in 1853 in a log house on the east half of lot 9, in the 10th concession of Belmont. This house was torn down many years ago, but the spot where it stood is still marked by a large tree around which stones have been piled in pyramid shape. In 1862 the family moved into the old frame house, which is still in use on the same farm.

Mr. Mathison recalled Confederation year quite vividly. He was then a boy of fourteen years attending high school in Norwood, and Havelock consisted of the post office, a small frame building, buit by Jehiel Breckenridge, on the corner of what is now Ottawa and Orange streets, three houses, one on the farm now owned by Walter Wilde, belonging to James Johnston ,a second on the adjoining lot where William McKay now lives, was owned by two brothers, James and John Robb ,and the third belonging to Mr. Mathison's parents. The place where the main business section now stands was a woods, and to go to the post office from his home he followed a path through this woods. Mr. Mathison still has the deed for the sale in 1855 of the lot from Thomas Short to Jehiel Breckenridge ,for the erection of the post office. Peter Pearce was the first postmaster. Mr. Mathison can also recall the visit of the Prince of Wales to Canada in 1860.

In speaking of the hardships with which his parents had to contend as early settlers, Mr. Mathison said that Peterborough was the nearest market, and all the produce had to be taken there, the journey quite often being made on foot. The butter was packed in kegs and fifteen cents a pound was considered a good price, with eggs ten cents a dozen. Maple sugar retailed, when there was sale for it, at ten cents a pound. His father quite often made a thousand pounds of maple sugar in the season besides two barrels of vinegar and a large quantity of syrup.

The wool was taken to a carding mill at Norwood. After it had been carded it was made into rolls; half the quanity was left the natural color and the other half was dyed black and then it was spun into Shepherd Tartan. Mr. Mathison recalls how proud he felt when he was made a new suit of this home-made check material. The leather was also taken to Norwood to be tanned and boots were made there by a shoemaker named Kelsh. There was no church in Havelock an dall his family attended the old Presbyterian church that stood on the hill just south of the Norwood station.

Mr. Mathison has been reeve of Havelock for four and a half years, three terms of which he was elected by acclamation.

VOICE OF PEOPLE—SMITH.

TIME FOR RETROSPECTION

To The Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir: For Canadians this is a time for retrospection and introspection, and surely it will be conceded that, in spite of many mistakes and the adoption of some unwise policies, we have, during the past sixty years, made marvelous progress in religion, education, business ability, wealth and in the development of a wonderful spirit of loyalty not only to the Dominion but also to the great Empire of which we are proud to form a part.

Regarding the future, some people are very pessimistic, some even going so far as to tell us that the world is nearly approaching an end, to whom I think a course in introspective psychology would be beneficial. On the contrary, I venture to suggest that Canada will continue her progressive course and will gradually become more potential in world affairs.

For those who in the past have been so unpatriotic as to put party above country, thus greatly retarding our progress, now is the time for repentance, and for a firm resolve that with them in the future loyalty to the welfare of Canada will always be paramount.

Dealt In Liquor.

Nathaniel Dauphinee, father of the previous witness, admitted that he dealt in liquor "a little."

"Did you buy any liquor for sale?" asked Mr. Calder.

"Well, my plans were for that—," started Mr. Dauhphinee.

"But the rough-necks of Mounted Police interfered," finished Mr. Calder.

'It was pinched on me," agreed Mr. Dauphinee.

Mr. Calder asked him how much he paid for the liquor and the witness said about $175. Mr. Calder suggested that, on the basis of the quanitity seized by the police, that worked out at only three dollars or so a case. That was very cheap. Mr. Dauphinee, however, insisted that the quantity stated by the police was too large.

'Will you give Mr. Nash, our auditor, a letter authorizing him to draw your bank account?" asked counsel.

"Yes, he'll not find much there," was the reply.

"Oh, you'd be surprised at how much we find," encountered counsel.

The last member of the family to be examined was Noah Dauphinee, also of Tantallon. He said that he went out with one of Byron Dauphinee's boats to get liquor from rum schooners. He mentioned the D. D. McKenzie and the Marion Whyllis as two of the schooners from which supplies were obtained.

"What brands did you get?" asked the chief commissioner.

"One brand was old smuggler," responded the witness.

There was a laugh. Mr. Daughinee admitted stating that he had brought in 15,000 gallons in one season and 2,000 gallons in one trip.

Cecil Pancy, of Mahone Bay, was another customer of the D. D. McKenzie. He told of bringing in liquor last fall which was seized by the mounted police.

SCHOOL WORKERS MEET AT BETHANY

Annual Convention of Manvers' Religious Education Council.

BETHANY, June 29.—On Thursday afternoon and evening the 32nd annual convention of the Manvers Religious Education Council was held in the United Church. Delegates from three of the six schools were present.

The afternoon session was chiefly devoted to hearing reports from the different schools and in having various problems solved which come before all workers engaged in Young People's Work. Election of officers for next year was held by nomination and an open vote. They are as follows:

President—J R. Magee, Janetville.
Vice Pres.—R. W. Wright, Yelverton.
Sec.-Treas.—A. H. Monk, Bethany.
Children's Work—Mrs. W. Malcomb, Yelverton.
Boys' Work—Bertrand Monk, Bethany.
Girls' Work—Mrs. J. R. Bradburn, Janetville.
Adult Workers—Mrs. W. W. Stinson, Janetville.
Teachers' Training—Rev. A. Poulter, Bethany.
Home Dept.—Miss E. Richardson, Bethany.
Missionary—Mrs. T. J. Jackson, Bethany.
Temperance—R. W. Wright, Yelverton.

Supper was then served by the ladies of the Bethany Sunday School.

The evening session opened with a song service led by Rev. Mr. Patterson, of Janetville, followed by a devotional period.

J. R. Magee, president, called for the reports of the nominating committee and the resolutions committee, which were given by Rev. E. O. Seymour and Rev. R. J. Patterson.

The new officers were then installed by Rev. E. O. Seymour and dedicated to their new work after a few remarks by the president and prayer. The evening session continued.

A trio was sung by Mrs. T. J. Jackson, Miss Elsie Richardson and Mr. Douglas Driver, which was greatly enjoyed.

Rev. J. E. Griffith, of Blackstock, and Rev. E. O. Seymour of Fenelon Falls, gave very inspiring and helpful addresses on child life and work in the Sunday School, or church school as one of the speakers would prefer to have it called. Many suggestions were thrown out to the young people's workers who were present, which will be of great benefit in their work.

While in the village, Mr. Seymour was the guest of Rev. and Mrs. A. Poulter.

A most enjoyable time was spent at the home of Mrs. George Spencer on Friday afternoon when the Ladies' Aid of the United Church met to hold their regular meeting. Seventeen ladies were present, Mrs. F. C. Dawe presiding. After the devotional period Mrs. Lloyd Kennedy and Mrs. Otto Spencer gave a piano duet. The business was planning for the annual summer fete, which this year will take the form of a strawberry social to be held on the church lawn on Friday, July 8. Committees were appointed to arrange for the supper, program, etc.

At the conclusion of the meeting tea was served by Mrs. Spencer, assisted by Mrs. Lloyd Kennedy and Mrs. Otto Spencer. A note of thanks was tendered Mrs. Spencer for the use of her home and her kind hospitality. Among the ladies present were: Mrs. F. C. Dawe, Mrs. (Rev.) Poulter, Mrs. S. Arnott, Mrs. Ona Thorndyke, Mrs. Walter Rowland. Mrs. A. H. Monk, Mrs. Edwards, Mrs. Bert Monk, Mrs. A. Driver, Mrs. Wm. Byers, Mrs. Jones, Misses E. Richardson, E. Jackson, and Sarah McMullen.

The Standard of Quality For Over 50 Years

Norham Man Remembers July First, 1867; He Walked 7 Miles Looking For Wages

NORHAM, June 29. — In the little village of Norham, which has about one hundred residents, and which has the unusual record of having neither grown nor diminished in more than half a century, but of simply holding its own since before the days when the Provinces of Canada effected what has resulted after sixty years in the greatest colony of the British Empire, resides David Cryderman, who was a young man of nineteen years when the Act of Confederation was passed.

David Cryderman is a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Cryderman, and was born about two miles from here in what is now Cramahe Township. He has lived here all his days, which, with the exception of about seventeen years when he worked at masonry, were spent on the farm. He can narrate many interesting stories of the experiences of early days, when the weevil destroyed the fall wheat crop and family after family was compelled to subsist on johnnie cake, corn meal porridge, and rye bread, which, he states, was frequently so hard that one could easily knock a man down with a piece of a loaf. With the closing of the American War in 1864, Mr. Cryderman says times began to change, and there has been noted progress ever since.

Mr. Cryderman, when about eighteen years of age, was employed as blazer for a number of surveyors who were engaged in determining the boundary between Cramahe and Percy Townships, and also the lines separating the first and second concessions of Percy. This was in order to settle a dispute which had arisen between a couple of the settlers. His wages were very slow in coming through from the Government officials, and on July 1, 1867, Confederation Day, which he states was exceedingly hot, wearing a heavy fullcloth coat, he walked seven miles from his home in Cramahe to Mr. Russ', his grandfather in Haldimand Township, to see if the money had arrived. He was so nearly melted while making the trip that he says he has always remembered Confederation Day.

Mr. Cryderman remembers very well the time when a Mr. Parks, who farmed a mile east of Norham, offered Mr. Smith, a storekeeper in the village, a good cow for a barrel of salt, and could not make the deal because as Mr. Smith said, he could sell the salt, but if he took the cow, no person would buy it from him.

The late Ezra Cryderman, David's father, one year grew one hundred bushels of rye, which he hauled 18 miles to what was then called Cat Hallow, now Lakeport, and was told that there was no market, and that he would have to wait until the boats began to run the next spring. This he did, and in the spring one day received a letter stating that he could realize 27 cents a bushel for the rye, and this he accepted.

Mr. Cryderman says that his father sometimes grew club wheat and many a time he has gone to the field, and brought in a sheaf and threshed the grain out with a flail and then took it away to the mill and had it ground so as to get a little white flour.

The late Ezra Cryderman was a local preacher among the former Wesleyan Methodists, and very persevering and punctual about his moral and spiritual life, as well as being deeply interested in others. He travelled with his family through storm and cold to attend meeting, and David says that frequently he cried the most of the way home, he suffered so much from the cold, but his father was happy and contented to take his time. The meetings in those days were well attended, as practically every person in the neighbourhood turned out and took a keen interest. Mr. Cryderman spent several years as an effective superintendent of the Norham Sunday School.

IMPROVEMENTS TO CHURCH PROPERTY

Managers of St. Andrew's, Burnbrae, Remodel Drivesheds.

BURNBRAE, June 29.—The managers of St. Andrew's church have been spending some spare hours in making improvements to the church property. Some of the sheds, along the road, opposite the church, were too low to allow motor cars to enter. These have been raised and a new roof will be added.

The Burnbrae cemetery is again showing the effects of the efficient care of the manager, Mr. George Craighead. He has become noted as an expert along this line and has had the oversight of several jobs of cemetery improvements. Visitors to Burnbrae often remark upon the fine condition of the cemetery here as compared with many seen in other parts of the country. Many valuable and very handsome monuments show that Burnbrae people wish fittingly to honor those who have gone on before.

Mr. Alex Ketchen, of Humboldt, Sask., spent a short time last week in renewing friendships of his boyhood days here.

CANADA FLOUR HIGH QUALITY

Peterborough's Place in Cereal Industry Makes Facts Interesting.

BIG EXPORT

Peterborough's place in the cereal industry of Canada is now definitely established.

At this Jubilee of Confederation, therefore, it is quite fitting to review the progress of this industry. From the strides that it has made in the past may be formed some judgment of its future possibilities.

At the time of Confederation Canada had 2,295 flour and grist mills with a total capital of $9,929,898. The latest available figures show that the capital invested has grown to $60,104,258, while the number of mills has decreased to 1,310. The decrease in the number of mills provides a theme for some interesting speculation. Why did the number of flour and grist mills in a growing country decrease by about 900 in 60 years?

A journey over Ontario particularly reveals scores of ruined mill sites, or mills now turned to other uses. One solution for such a state of affairs will undoubtedly lie in the changed buying habits of the people. Few housewives to-day buy in bulk as their grandmothers did. The demand to-day for foodstuffs, particularly cereals, is that they must come in handy, sanitary packages. People, too, are far more particular and hard to satisfy than they were at the time of Confederation. To-day's consumers insist on quality. Sixty years ago, for instance, oatmeal was simply oatmeal. No two millers rolled it in precisely the same manner. The same with flour. There were no highly scientific tests to detect the slightest variations in quality as there are in the up-to-date mills of 1927. Extreme care was not always taken to see that the product was pure and wholesome.

The consumers in Canada to-day refuse to live as did their grandfathers in 1867. Just so, the people of Confederation times would not live as the people at the time of the Napoleonic Wars. All of which shows that the changed habits of the people had much to do with wiping out the small country flour and grist mills.

What has taken the place of these mills? We still have in Canada approximately 1,000 country mills and about 300 big modern plants with a total capacity of 125,000 barrels of flour a day.

The increase in milling capacity in Canada is not alone shown by the increase in capitalization from $9,929,898 at the time of Confederation to $60,104,258 to-day. In 1867 the value of materials used by Canday the value of materials used comes da ythe value of materials used comes to $163,164,668. In Confederation days the value of the products was $39,135,919. To-day the corresponding total is $187,944,731.

The quantity of flour exported by Canada has increased over 25 times in a period of less than 60 years, while the value has increased over 35 times.

To-day Canada's flour and grist mill products rank second in value in the industrial table, being only exceeded by pulp and paper with a total production of $193,092,937.

HEROIC DEEDS.

Efforts are already under way to have the bravery of Ross Davidson, the sixteen-year-old boy who heroically rescued a drowning girl from the clutches of the Otonabee, officially recognized.

It is fit and proper that such gallantry as was displayed by this quick-thinking and quick-moving boy should be marked publicly.

While the thought of a reward never flashes across the mind of those who go to the rescue of a fellow-being in peril, yet heroism should have its official recognition in the piping days of peace as bravery in the face of the enemy is honoured in times of war.

There have been many cases of the saving of life in Peterborough that have never received any more notice than the tribute of the press and the heart-felt thanks of the rescued.

Such heroic deeds as that performed by Ross Davidson on Monday should be brought to the attention of the proper authorities.

WELL DONE, THE ENGINEERS!

Vision was exemplified in the selection by the Peterborough Branch of the Engineering Institute of Canada of the Quebec Bridge as a suitable subject to be emphasized in connection with the Diamond Jubilee.

The building of this great structure across the St. Lawrence remains one of the outstanding achievements of Canadian engineering genius recorded during the sixty years of Confederation, and the local engineers did well in deciding to adopt a model of the huge bridge as their contribution to the Diamond Jubilee scheme of decoration.

The result is a most striking arch that in its originality of design and in its faithful duplication of the original structure is not likely to be surpassed anywhere in the Dominion.

The members of the Engineering Institute have devoted considerable time to this enterprise, and have done all the work of planning, building, wiring and erecting the arch, but they have the satisfaction of knowing that they have achieved a striking and unique feat of decorating.

The Quebec Bridge arch, situated near the Y.M.C.A., should be inspected by every citizen; it is well worth a visit.

PETERBOROUGH'S INDUSTRIES.

In presenting this special Diamond Jubilee number to its readers The Examiner acknowledges with gratitude the assistance rendered by the manufacturers and business interests, without whose co-operation the publishing of such an edition would scarcely have been possible.

The advertisements of Peterborough industries which appear in this number are in themselves a striking testimony as to the progress of this city during the period of Confederation.

They are eloquent of the industrial expansion of Peterborough, of the size and variety and importance of the city's manufactures, and of the part in the development not only of Peterborough but of Canada that has been played by local industrial plants, the products of which have nation-wide, indeed world-wide, fame.

A special number of this nature that did not emphasize the important role taken by Peterborough's industries in the record of the city's development would be totally inadequate.

In this community we owe much to our manufactures.

The willingness with which they have co-operated in the publishing of a Diamond Jubilee special number is but another evidence of their value to Peterborough.

Each advertisement tells the story of a contribution to the upbuilding of this city, and the effect of the combined publicity will be a new realization of the extent of Peterborough's manufacturing activities.

THE COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE EXTENSION.

The acceptance by the City Council of the Board of Education's building programme and the decision to arrange for the issuing of debentures to cover the cost of the extension to the Collegiate Institute, means that a big problem has been satisfactorily solved, and the members of the Council, of the Board of Education and the whole community are to be congratulated upon the outcome.

There is nothing extravagant in the Board's programme, nothing included that is not essential to give Peterborough the increased Collegiate accommodation and facilities for vocational training that are absolutely necessary.

The addition will give the city a modern Collegiate Institute at a very moderate expenditure when the appropriations of other centres for similar accommodation are taken into consideration.

Of the $295,000 involved in the carrying out of the Board's plan, the city's share will be approximately $170,600, as Government grants will take off $102,600 and the county's contribution has been estimated at $21,800.

The extension is very badly needed; the Board of Education has most efficiently and economically drafted its policy, and the City Council has shown a commendable spirit of co-operation and a real grasp of the situation in unanimously accepting the programme and making an early start possible.

The turning of the first sod on Dominion Day will add to the Diamond Jubilee programme a feature that will be a significant proof that Peterborough is moving off toward the centenary of the Dominion in full stride.

THE QUESTION OF CHEAPER BEER.

(From The Hamilton Herald)

One of the results which, it was hoped, would be achieved by the system of Government control of the liquor traffic was the encouragement of greater use of beer and light wines and the consequent diminished use of spirituous liquors. Through the substitution of the lighter beverages for the stronger, it was expected that a real measure of temperance reform would be effected. Obviously a practical way to encourage the greater use of malt liquor is to sell it at a low price. There was general disappointment when the original price list was published, mainly because the prices of beer were higher than had been expected, although the commission's prices were hardly more than cost. Negotiations with the brewers have resulted in a lowering of prices to the commission and the public.

For the present there will be no change in the price of beer bought by the bottle or in quantities less than six pints, but when bought in greater quantity it will cost less. Six pints can be bought for 90 cents instead of a dollar and six quarts for $1.55 instead of $1.75; but in these quantities the goods must be carried away by the purchaser. There are substantial reductions in the prices charged when the beer is delivered from the brewery in greater quantity. When thus procured, the price is now about four cents per eight-ounce glass.

It cannot be said that the new arrangement will satisfy the average beer-drinker, who wants a glass of beer when he wants it. He may want it today—just a glass or two when he is hot and thirsty, and may not want it again for a week or more. It does not afford such a man much satisfaction to know that he can get his beer for as low a price as four cents a glass by paying $16 for six dozen quarts, with an allowance for the empty bottles.

However, the lowering in prices is in accord with the intention of the promoters and framers of the Liquor Control Act, to make it a temperance measure by encouraging the consumption of light malt beverages as substitutes for strong drink.

DENTISTRY'S GROWING IMPORTANCE.

The first survey ever made of dental education in Canada and the United States has just been completed by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. The study had the hearty co-operation of the dental profession, and the findings now published are given the endorsement of the Dental Educational Council of America, which is the authoritative body on dental education in the United States. The conclusions of the survey are all directed to emphasize the point that dental education is in a serious predicament on this continent; that dental schools need more and better teachers, better equipment, special means for research, and improved facilities in general, and that generous public assistance is needed to improve dentistry in the public service. The author of the Foundation's bulletin is Dr. William J. Gies of Columbia University, and there is a preface by Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, president of the Carnegie Foundation, who concurs in the assertion that the situation is urgent.

Nearly everyone has painful recollections of childhood toothache, and it is almost universally known that many serious and even fatal diseases have their inception in diseased teeth. Increasing attention has been paid in this generation to preventive dentistry. London and many other cities have dental inspections and clinics in connection with the schools. That there exists also an active dental research is indicated by recent Canadian discoveries of great value to the public health. Hospital records attest the value which the physicians and psychiatrists are beginning to attach to dentistry. Indeed, it might have been thought that, with 4,000 dentists in Canada and 70,000 in the United States, this branch of health service should be in a highly satisfactory condition. But the Carnegie Foundation finds much to criticise and suggest, even while admitting that dentistry has attained its most advanced development in Canada and the United States.

The bulletin states there is antagonism between medicine and dentistry; that at most medical schools there is an indifference to dentistry, and that at dental schools the students receive inadequate instruction in oral medicine. It continues by pointing out that dentistry has devoted a great deal of attention to the preventive phases, in the interests of public health, "an ideal that has not as yet appealed strongly to the average practitioner of medicine." There is urgent need for improvement in the quality of teaching in dental schools, the report says, and the opinion is given that the medical curriculum should be reconstructed from the standpoint of practice rather than theory.

Briefly, the Foundation experts conclude that dentistry should no longer be considered a mechanical art, but that it should be made the full equivalent of an oral specialty in the practice of medicine; that this could be accomplished, without requiring dental students to obtain full medical education, through extension in universities of the system of dental education which most closely associates the dentist with medical schools, hospitals and dispensaries. It is suggested that two years of preparatory work after leaving high school, and three years intensive dental study, should fit students for useful work. In both medicine and dentistry, the Foundation holds that emphasis should be taken off specialties and placed on efficient and helpful general practice.

The report holds that the dental school is a most important agency for the training of a qualified body of public health servants, and that dental schools, to meet the responsibility, must be given a measure of the generous public assistance which has been accorded to many of the medical schools. This appeal, together with the arguments which place dentistry in some respects on a par with medicine in the public health field, makes the Foundation's bulletin of unusual interest in a city which has a growing university, including an excellent medical school, but no dental college.—London Advertiser.

EDITORIAL NOTES AND COMMENT.

Decorate and then celebrate.

Sixty years of Canadian progress are worth a special effort in the way of celebration. And Peterborough is making that effort.

Peterborough has never seen a parade such as is planned for the Diamond Jubilee. It will be a revelation to everyone.

The Confederation parade, appropriately enough, will start from Confederation Square.

Angle parking on George street may work out all right, but there are a lot of motorists who in this respect are from Missouri.

The decoration of Peterborough for the Diamond Jubilee must not be confined to the business section. Every house should be included.

The turning of the first sod for the Collegiate Institute extension on Dominion Day is another evidence that Peterborough is facing the future with confidence.

The first week of Government control has passed without the city police force having to make an arrest for drunkenness or for any other infraction of the Act.

MONTREAL GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

MONTREAL, Que., June 29 (Canadian Press). — The export trade in grain on the Montreal market was quiet yesterday. This was due to the fact that British exporters were not disposed to respond to the higher prices asked. Only a few loads of wheat were worked.

The cash grain situation revealed no change. Prices were maintained at the late advance. Supplies were of a limited nature and business was small. Car lots of American sample corn were quoted at $1.05½. Argentine corn at $1.04½ per bushel.

Spring wheat grades of flour were strong and millers generally marked up prices 10 cents per barrel for the various grades. First patents sold at $9.00, seconds at $8.50, and strong bakers at $8.30 per barrel in jute bags, ex-track, less 10 cents per barrel for spot cash. Business, however, was quiet, with the demand small. The advance is a reflection of the strength displayed in cash wheat at Winnipeg for the past few days.

The undertone to winter wheat grades was firm and prices were unchanged, with a small amount of business transacted.

The continued steady demand for all grades of millfeed and the present limited production of the commodity held prices firm. A fair amount of business was done.

A moderate trade was done in rolled oats, and prices were unchanged.

The egg market was without any new feature. Prices for all grades were maintained with a fair amount of business transacted. Supplies were ample to meet all demands. Receipts were 3,701 cases.

Trading in old crop of Canadian potatoes was quiet, but the demand for new American potatoes was steady. Business was fairly brisk in the latter commodity at Monday's price levels.

The undertone to the butter market was steady. The volume of business was small. Receipts were 1,075 packages.

The cheese market was again quiet. There was some demand for deep coloured Western No. 1 grade, and sales were made at 18⅛ to 18 1-3 cents per pound. Receipts were 18,239 boxes.

Demand—$4.85 13-16.

Cables—$4.86¼.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

CHICAGO, June 29 (Canadian Press). — Grain prices took a late upward swing yesterday, influenced by increased likelihood of black rust and baceuse of expected failure of the Kessinger Bill. Closing quotations on both wheat and corn were strong, wheat ⅞c to 1⅛c net higher; corn ⅝c to 1⅛c up; oats unchanged to ⅝c advance; and provisions varying from 10 cents decline to a rise of 7 cents.

Rapid progress of harvest operations south-west, with auspicious weather there and in Nebraska, had much to do with wheat price downturns which formed the rule yesterday except toward the finish. Aside from profit-taking sales, however, there was no great pressure on the wheat, and the market quickly responded to any good buying. Country offerings of new wheat were reported to be light at practically all points.

On a wave of late buying, corn went up about four cents a bushel from early low figures that were due to profit-taking and assertions that Monday's advance had been overswift.

Better weather for corn growth counted temporarily too as a bear influence. Oats followed corn.

Most deliveries of provisions showed some setbacks.

SIXTY YEARS OF BANKING

The little brown tea-pot on a shelf, the old stocking tucked away in a mattress, had long ceased to be the only popular banks when this Dominion was formed. They had never contained very much, for money was scarce in pioneer days. The farmers, who were the bulk of the population, exchanged their produce direct for the goods they needed. And the banks, from the time when they were established among us—the Bank of Montreal was the first, in 1817—won the confidence of the people who had money to deposit. That confidence was generally deserved and, though a number of banks have failed, the nature of the Canadian Banking system and the increasing precautions imposed by law have given the public a very high degree of security.

The first Bank Act passed by the Dominion Government, in 1871, provided for a limitation of dividends until a reasonably large reserve fund had been accumulated, and decreed that at least one-third of the cash reserve must be in Dominion Government notes. That proportion was raised to 4 per cent in 1881; then, also, the holder of a bank note was given first claim on the assets of the issuing bank. Such notes of $5 and upwards form the bulk of the money we use. Dominion Government notes of various denominations up to $50,000 are issued, but the large denominations are rarely seen except in Bank and Government vaults. Government notes are redeemable in gold. This law was suspended during the War, but on the 1st of July, 1926, gold payments were resumed.

The Bank Act of 1891 established a stronger banks. This has increased Bank Note Redemption Fund, by which all banks were liable, in proportion to their own note circulation, to make up the deficiency of any bank unable to redeem its notes. Since then no bank failure has caused the loss of a dollar to any note holder.

Between 1881 and 1926 the number of our banks has been reduced from 36 to 11, by the weeding out of the weaker or their amalgamation with the security given by the banks as a whole, without reducing the banking facilities available to the public through our branch bank system.

The number of bank branches in Canada has risen from 123 at Confederation to 1,145 in 1905, 3,198 in 1916, and 3,784 in 1927. Every branch is backed by the whole resources of the parent bank.

The bank notes in circulation have increased between 1867 and 1926 from $9,346,068 to $168,885,995, and bank assets from $78,294,770 to $2,864,019,213.

The deposits in Canadian banks in 1867 amounted to $31,375,316. On December 31, 1926, they stood at $1,981,652,000 with an additional $334,458,000 in branches alone.

The volume of business done in Canada through our banks as shown by cheques paid, amounted last year to $30,358,000,000.

VOICE OF PEOPLE

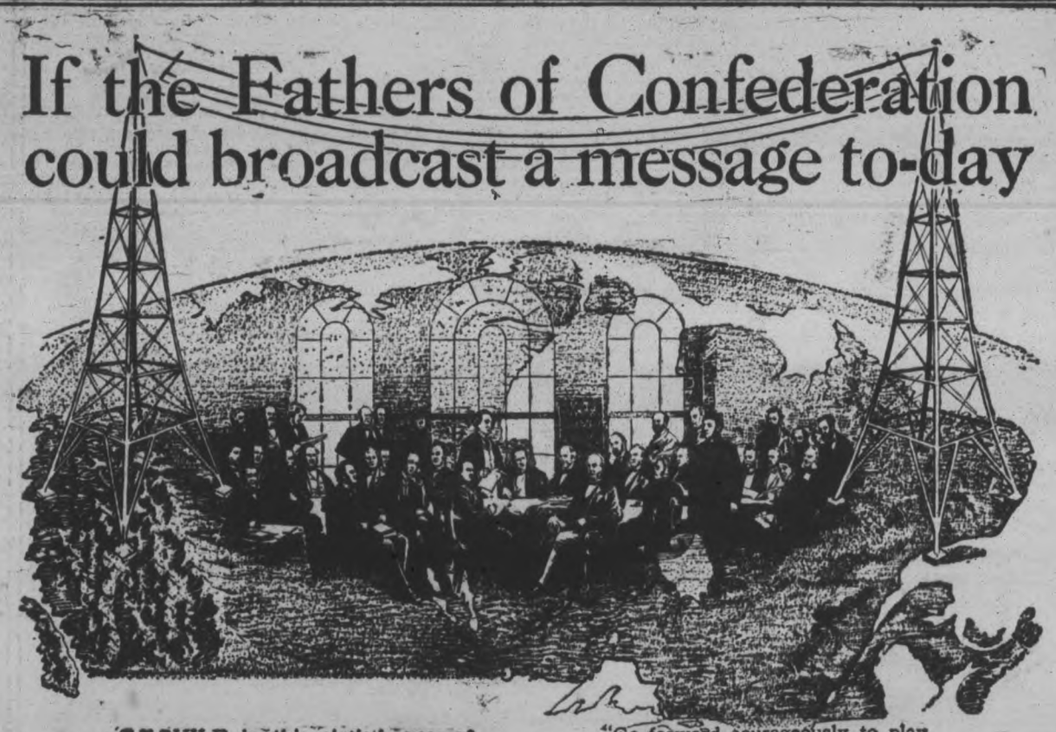
To the Editor.

Dear Sir,—In view of the fact that the county owns Victoria Park, don't you think the city should maintain it without begging a $100 from the county? Our parks have not cost us much. Inverlea, Jackson's Park and the Nicholls Oval are gifts from the late Mrs. Charlotte Nicholls, Victoria Park belongs to the county, and our newly designated Confederation Square came to us without costing the city anything. Riverside and King Edward Parks were bought by the city. Surely, then, we don't have to bother the county for $100 for Victoria Park, especially in view of the county's grant of $1,000 to the Fair Board last week.

If we were asking the county for $500 or some larger sum for Victoria Park it wouldn't seem so small an act as to ask them for a petty $100. The city is a diligent custodian of Victoria Park, but why shouldn't we be! It is one of our beauty spots, and is perhaps used by more people than any of the other parks. Our relations with the county will be more friendly if we avoid such niggling appeals as this $100 we got last week.

MURRAY BROCK.

If the Fathers of Confederation could broadcast a message to-day



WHILE in this sixtieth year of Canadian Confederation great honor is being paid to the founders of this nation we believe that if these builders of the Dominion could return for a moment to Canada to-day, it would be to the future rather than to the past that they would direct the vision and the energy of the Canadian people.

Suppose that John A. MacDonald or George Brown or Joseph Howe or D'Arcy Magee could speak to us from our great broadcasting stations, would not their message go forth, clear and ringing through Canada's crystal Northern atmosphere in words like these:

"The past belongs to us the present and future are yours. We did but begin the tremendous task that you must carry on.

"Go forward courageously to play some part in building your nation. If the stones of the past were well laid, consider what a mighty structure may be reared on this foundation. Only as our example is an inspiration to the Canadian of today have we succeeded in setting a beacon-light before those who now occupy the field of opportunity.

"It is the ideal of constructive citizenship that we would set before you. What can you do for Canada?"

And it is in this spirit, as one of the institutions founded many years before Confederation, that we desire to subscribe our tribute of respect to those men who, in the face of seemingly insurmountable obstacles, bound together one great United Confederation of Provinces.

Militia Important in Early Peterborough History; Shown by Early Records

(From the History by F. H. Dobbin).

On July 20, 1866, at a meeting of the Council, it was determined to at once take action to erect a drill shell. The military spirit brought to the surface by late events deserved such recognition. The Council heard a deputation of local officers in that regard. The shed, it was argued, should be of ample length and not less than 60 feet in width. The Council decided to appropriate $1,000 in aid, the County Council to be asked to make a similiar grant.

Early in May, 1867, the work was completed; the building was erected on part of the old burying ground on Murray Street, and of dimensions of 144 x 82 feet with an armory 72 x 17 feet, on the west side. Cost of building, $2,950.00. J. Hughes, contractor. During the course of erection the building was found to be insecure, and additional material was added by direction of the government. Following is the detail of the cost:

Cash from Town	$1,032.50
Cash from County	1,032.50
Cash from Government	1,000.00
	$3,065.00

On July 10, 1868, the battalion assembled for annual drill. Field officers: Lieut.-Col. Poole, Major Kennedy, Major Leigh.

Eight days were spent in service and inspection.

On September 17, 1869, the Battalion went into camp for the annual drill. Camp on east side of the river, about at the dam of the local waterworks. Assembled at the drill shed and marched to the camp ground. Inspected by Col. Robertson Ross and Brigade Major Patterson. Broke camp on October 9. Dinner served in drill shed through kindness of local ladies.

On July 19, 1869, a new band was organized with A. H. Rackett as bandmaster, known as the 57th Band. Band appeared out in uniform for first time on September 30.

On May 14, 1870, Captain W. N. Kennedy, of the 57th Battalion, was selected as one of the officers of the Red River expedition. Left town on May 3rd to join the brigade at Toronto. Received his appointment as Lieutenant. Among those gazetted from the 3rd Military District, eleven men from the 57th Battalion were also drafted. From the whole district were required 100 men and 6 officers. From the 57th Battalion were taken the following: D. English, W. Anthony, — Coates, G. Green, — Whitlaw, — Dinsdale, — Cotton, W. McGregor, — Campion, W. Waddell, and — Baxter. All proceeded to Toronto and left that city on May 14 for Collingwood. Embarked on steamer 'Chicora." Rev. R. S. Patterson' of Strathroy was appointed one of the chaplains for the expedition. He was at one time a member of the 57th Battalion. Messrs. W. Welband of Peterborough, Allan of Millbrook, joined the expedition in time to go forward with the main body from Collingwood.

During the week to September 18-25, 1877, the companies of the 57th Battalion put in annual drill on the ground adjoining the drill shed. They were reviewed and inspected by Lieut.-Col. Straubenzie.

North-West Rebellion

On Saturday morning, March 28, 1885, a despatch was received by Colonel J. Z. Rogers of the 57th Battalion P.R., from Col. Williams, at Ottawa. The despatch said that Col. Williams had been authorized to at once raise a regiment for service in the Northwest, and he asked to have a company from Peterborouh again under his command. The despatch asked for 42 men, a captain, lieutenant and bugler. It was suggested that seven men be chosen from each of the six companies of the Battalion. Norwood, Keene and Hastings were at once advised. Command of the company was placed in the hands of Captain W. Langford of No. 2 Company. Orders were received to report at Kingston on Monday morning, March 30. Over 400 men volunteered at once, and it was with difficulty that a selection was made. Orders were received by Captain Sanderson to hold the Field Battery in readiness. One Monday night all the picked men from the outside companies arrived and were quartered in the hotels for the night. All signed the roll of service.

Owing to illness, the command of the company fell on Captain Howard of No. 6 Company. Changes were made afterwards, and the company went forward with Captain Burke of Norwood in command; Lieut. Brennan, Lieut. Myles, 8th Rifles, Quebec, Sergt.

At 7 a.m. on April 1st, the company, to be afterwards known as "Co. G, Midland Battalion," was called out and marched to the station to entrain. The men were addressed briefly by the Mayor, G. A. Cox. Several of the Battalion officers accompanied the men as far as Port Hope. The company reported at Kingston and was then sent north via Kingston and Pembroke railway to catch the Canadian Pacific train. On April 6th the regiment left Kingston, reached Renfrew at 4.00 p.m., and Mattawa at 3 a.m. on Tuesday. The following are details of the composition of the regiment:

Two companies from 46th of Port Hope, one from the 57th Peterborough, one from the 45th Bowmanville, one from the 40th Campbellford, one from the 15th Belleville, one from the 49th Hastings, and one from the 47th Frontenac. In all, there were over 400 men.

The following were in command: Lieut.-Col. A. T. Williams of Port Hope; Senior Major, H. R. Smith, Port Hope; Junior Major, Col. Deacon, Lindsay.

The following are the names of the officers and men of "G" Company, Midland Regiment:

From Hastings Company: M Breckenridge, J. Thompson, J. Anderson, M. H. Riggs, M. Sedgwick, J. Lynch.

While at Kingston the men received a number of packages of comforts in the shape of underclothing, etc., thoughfully forwarded by a committee of ladies. The receipt of these things was duly acknowledge by Captain Burke.

While en route the regiment marched across the ice of Lake Superior, a distance of 20 miles, in a blinding snow storm, to cover a gap in the railway service. They arrived at Winnipeg on April 14, and were ordered to the front. They took a special train at noon for Qu'Appelle. They reached Swift Current and went into camp with the 35th Battalion, Simcoe Foresters. Embarked on steamer Northcotte to go down the river to Clarke's Crossing, which they reached on May 5. Joined forces of General Middleton. Here they participated in the Battle of Batoche and took prominent part in the operations. Batoche was taken at 4 p.m. on May 11.

Of the Midland Battalion, Private Boulton, Captain Helliwell and Private Benton, Lieut. Helliwell, were wounded. Captain Ed. Brown of Boulton's Scouts was shot and killed. Capt. Brown was buried on the bank of the Saskatchewan River near the spot where he fell. The body was not brought home. The wishes of his friends was that it should rest at the spot where he was shot. The 90th Foot of Winnipeg formed the funeral cortege, and surrounded by the Midland men, he was borne to the grave with all honors.

At the close of operations in the Northwest, the Midland Regiment was ordered home and reached Port Hope on July 20. Here the men were quartered in the buildings of the Agricultural Society to remain to attend the funeral of Col. Williams the day following. The funeral was one of the most imposing ever seen in the district.

On July 23, the members of G. Co. Midland Regiment reached Peterborough, at 5 p.m. They were greeted by a band, the local regiment, and an immense crowd of people. They marched through the principal streets to the drill shed. Here lunch was served. Platform meeting and addresses of a complimentary character were made to the men by Mayor Cox and others. A presentation of a $10 gold piece was made to each of the men. It was computed that they had travelled 7,500 miles since leaving the town.

On April 17, 1886, medals granted to the men of the Nile Expedition reached Peterborough and were presented to the men. They were as follows: Messrs. Anderson, Hanson, Faulkner, Matheson, Mowrey, Lowrey, Ross, Harris, Bradshaw, Sherlock, Pilelan, Welch, Gorman, Blade, White. Those for Messrs. Sherlock and Faulkner, who had died abroad, were handed to relatives.

On May 24, 1886, a notice was given in The Canadian Gazette, that Peterborough was made headquarters for Companies 1, 4, 5, and 6 of the 57th Battalion. These companies were so removed from Ashburnham, that Norwood, Keene and Hastings remained in Peterborough, forming what was known as a city battalion.

On November 16, 1886, the shifting team of the Durham Field Battalion carried off the Gawoski Cup at the Dominion Artillery Association competitions at Toronto. Four or five men of the winning team were from town and under the command of Sergt.-Major Metherell.

On January 23, 1890, Lieut.-Col. J. Z. Rogers appeared before the Council and asked for a grant of $2,000 for purposes of building an armory. Capt. R. M. Dennistoun also spoke. A resolution was passed that the town grant $2,000 on the condition that the county grant $1,000 and the Government $2,000. At a meeting of February 3, a deputation from the regiment again interviewed the Council. They asked that a grant be made of $3,000. The building was to cost $6,000. A by-law was prepared and submitted, specifying that the town would grant $3,000 on the condition that the Government grant a like sum.

On March 31, 1897, the "Veterans of '66" met at the drill shed and formed a Veterans' Association, to be made up of those who went to the front during the Fenian Raid of 1866. About forty were present, who served in 1866, together with several who had served in 1864-65 and in 1870. A committee was named to assist in the approaching 24th of May celebration. The officers elected were as follows: Hon. President, Lieut.-Col. H. C. Rogers; President, A. P. Poussette, Q.C.; Vice-Presidents, Lieut.-Col. J. Z. Rogers, Captain T. A. S. Hay, Lieut. H. Rush, Sergt.-Major John Irwin, Sergts. D. H. Holmes and Wm. Logan; Secretary-Treasurer, J. D. Collins; Executive Committee: Geo. Stethem, Geo. Brown, W. Anthony, H. W. Watson, and D. Breeze. A communication from Lakefield states that eleven veterans in that village desired to connect themselves with the Association.

On May 22, 1897, the 57th Battalion received an invitation from Montreal to go to that city and take part in the Jubilee celebration on June 22. A Council committee met and decided that the Peterborough celebration would be postponed until July 1st. The battalion was released from obligation to stay in town on June 22..

The battalion left for Montreal on June 19, reaching that city on Sunday morning at 8 o'clock. On return the battalion reported a grand time. They returned home on the morning of the 23rd.

On December 5, 1899, the 57th Regiment secured a new Sergeant-Major, Sergeant-Major Alfred E. Brittain, who belonged to the Royal Regiment of Infantry, Toronto.

On November 5, 1900, Peterborough did itself proud in welcoming the soldiers of the Canadian contingent, returning from South Africa. Word was received late on the night of the 4th that the train carrying the first installment of soldiers would pass Peterborough early in the morning of the 5th. It was arranged to hold a reception and to let the men go off on the arrival of the second train. A part of the Toronto reception committee came to Peterborough to greet the men and to tell the arrangements made in Toronto. The 57th Regiment Band and an immense concourse of citizens met the train at 5.30 a.m., and the invaders were given breakfast at the Oriental Hotel, then treated to speeches and a deal of praise. The brigade left by special train at 10.30 for Toronto.

On January 11, 1901, was the homecoming from the war of Sergt. Price, Private Chill Turner, Sergt. Thompson and Corporal Scollie. There were the usual processions, hearty welcome, congratulating speeches and general hilarity. Several of the men were entertained by brothers of the local fraternal societies, where they fought their battles over again and told of the march and trials of campaigning in South Africa. At the Armouries the place was packed, and Lieut.-Col. Rogers spoke words of welcome. It was a great night entirely.

On February 25, 1902, Lieut.-Col. Edwards of the 57th Regiment returned from Ottawa, where he had been informed that the sum of $40,000 had been placed in the estimates for the purpose of erecting a commodious armoury at Peterborough.

On October 3, 1903, the new ambulance in memory of the late Private Dan. Spence, who was killed in the Boer War in South Africa, arrived. It was a very fine and well-constructed vehicle, and suitably inscribed on the glass of the windows. The cost of the ambulance is $888.00. It is now stored in the Fire Hall.

On February 5, 1904, the new regimental colors were received from England, and it was proposed to have a formal presentation of them the next 24th of May.

At a meeting held in the Court House on April 7, 1904, a joint committee of the Town and County Councils met to confer with regard to a site for the new armoury. It was decided to make use of a part of Central Park and to face the building to McDonnel Street. The dimensions would reach that of 120 x 150 feet, with wings to the east and west.

On September 23, 1904, Messrs. R. R. Hall, J. J. Hartley, W. G. Ferguson, R. B. Rogers, V. Eastwood, S. R. Armstrong and Alderman Adams journeyed to Ottawa to see the Minister of Public Works, Hon. Charles Hyman. They returned laden with spoils. The proposition submitted to the Minister was this: That the Separate School buildings be purchased at a cost of $30,000.00 and that the Armoury and Collegiate Institute be both erected on the grounds. The Separate School to contribute $10,000 to the cost of the grounds, the town $10,000, and the Government could give $10,000. The Minister expressed himself satisfied that the 'Armoury would be built, and would likely cost as much as $100,000.00.

On December 7, 1904, the County Council met and considered the proposition submitted by representatives of the Town Council, Schhool Board, Militia and Government, looking toward the erection in Peterborough of new Armouries and possibly a new Collegiate Institute. The facts were stated to the Council by Mayor Rogers, Major Dennistoun and Captain Walker, Alderman Best and Alderman Adams. Mr. R. R. Hall, M.P., also addressed the Council. The matter was considered by the Council and a report submitted by the committee to the Council that the Council would convey its interest in certain lots of Central Park to the town, and lease for 21 years other lots, to be used for and held as a park.

On February 22, 1906, the proposal to establish a permanent military camp ground in this district and neighborhood met with favor, and the general manager of the C.G.E. Company gave his permission to make one of the grounds at Nassau, south and east of the big mill at dam No. 5. The militia camped for the summer to try out the grounds, which were admirably suited for the purpose, being on the river bank, dry and comfortable. For twelve days between 3,000 and 4,000 camped on the grounds.

On March 22, 1907, the officers of the 57th Regiment bade farewell to a most popular officer and comrade, Major R. M. Dennistoun, who was leaving for Winnipeg. A banquet was held in the mess rooms. Major Dennistoun was presented with a sterling silver charger, suitably inscribed. Expressions of regret and also complimentary references were made by all speakers. A feeling and appreciative address in reply was given by Major

On July 11, 1907, the 57th Regiment held their annual outing to St. Catharines. The "Garden City" gave a warm welcome to the visiting soldiers.

On September 13, 1907, Lieut.-Col. J. W. Miller retired from command of the 57th Regiment, and was succeeded by Major Arthur Stevenson as commanding officer. As a result of the transfer, there were several changes made in the force. Major Clegg, then junior major, replaced Major Stevenson. Captain Bennett became junior major.

At an early hour of the morning of April 28, 1909, fire wiped out the old drill shed at Central Park. The old building was in process of demolition. Built of wood, it offered a fine hold for the flames, and in two hours it was entirely consumed.

Here we have a most important event on a most important day. The anniversary of Her Late Majesty's birthday and the formal opening of the new Armouries at Peterborough on May 24, 1909. The delivery of the keys to Lieut.-Col. Stevenson of the 57th Regiment was made by Hon. Dr. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works. The regiments were formed up in a hollow square facing the eastern entrance of the Armouries, and on a temporary platform the ceremony took place. Addresses were made by Hon. Or. Pugsley, Hon. J. R. Stratton, Mr. R. R. Hall and others. A banquet was held in the evening at the Oriental Hotel, at which officers of the visiting regiments, local regiment and citizens were entertained.

On July 1, 1912, the 41st Regiment, Brockville Rifles, and the 14th Regiment, Kingston, visited Peterborough. They went into camp on Central Park. Church service was held on Sunday, June 28, and on Dominion Day a parade was held.

On November 8, 1912, the close of a long effort to secure a rifle range was told in a wire to J. H. Burnham, M.P., from the Minister of Militia, which said that the Department had bought the lands for the proposed range en bloc. The location was immediately back of the Lift Lock. Much credit was due to Mr. Burnham for his persistence in bringing this matter to a close.

On July 21, 1913, a complaint was received that shooting at the new range was dangerous to those using at least one of the roads in the rear of the range. Steps were taken to remedy the matter by changing the road or cutting down trees.

On September 23, 1913, the Daughters of the Empire presented to the Armouries a large tablet in memory of the late Sergt. Dan Spence, killed in South Africa.

Stations—A Squadron, Colborne; B Squadron, Millbrook; C Squadron, Peterborough; D Squadron, Wellington. Trumpet section, Millbrook. Band, Colborne. Regimental March, "God Bless the Prince of Wales." Establishment, 328. Mobilization, 2nd Cavalry Brigade.

After two ineffectual attempts to raise a satisfactory troop of cavalry to be attached to the 1st Northumberland Infantry Regiment of Canadian Militia, Lieut.-Col. James Rogers of Grafton undertook the task in March, 1833, and raised the 1st Northumberland Troop of Horse Dragoons.

In the autumn of 1837 after much smoldering discontent, the Canadian Rebellion broke out, and the Cobourg troopers were constantly under arms until July 1838, and on the 13th of November, 1838, the troop was called out for active service for a period of six months. Part of their duties consisted of despatch duty on the main route between Montreal, Kingston, Hamilton and Niagara, the Cobourg troop connecting up with the Governor General's Body Guard at Cobourg and taking the road to Hamilton, where in turn contact was made made with the local cavalry troops (new 2nd Canadian Dragoons). The officers and men during this period were paid by the British Government and on being released from active service the troop not only received the thanks of the Lieutenant Governor and the Major General Commanding, but seven days' additional pay for their arduous services.

About 1853, after repeated and unsuccessful attempts to obtain proper equipments, Captain Commandant Rogers, after 20 years' service, resigned in favor of Major D'Arcy Boulton of Cobourg, who had previously raised a company of infantry in the 1837 troubles. The affairs of the troop, owing to want of proper official encouragement, being in a very bad way. However, a new Militia Act coming into force in 1855, matters improved and the Cobourg Troop was taken over on the new Militia establishment still continuing to draw its recruits from the Cobourg district. The troop was now unofficially styled in the Canadian Militia Lists the "Prince of Wales Dragoon Guards" and the Prince of Wales plume adopted as a badge, their insigna, like the title, not having received official sanction. About the same time a troop was raised at Port Hope in Durham County by Captain Smart, their troop which afterwards came into the regiment first wearing a blue Hussar kit with yellow braid and buff facings. On the visit of H.R.H., the Prince of Wales to Ottawa on the 31st of August, 1860 the Port Hope Troop had the honor of forming the cavalry escort during the Prince's progress through the city and the historic ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the new Parliament Buildings. On September 6, 1860, the Prince visited Cobourg, and the Prince of Wales Dragoon Guards troop had the privilege of forming the caviary escort. On this occasion of personal attendance it occurred to Lieut.-Col. Boulton to make a formal application through the Governor (Major General the Hon. R. Bruce) to the Prince of Wales for the official recognition of the title of the troop. His Royal Highness gracefully assented and the home authorities in London communicated the grant of title through the G.O. Commanding, omitting however, the term "Guards" as inappropriate, the crest and motto of the Prince were at the same time officially authorized as well also was the scarlet and yellow kit of the English "Prince of Wales Dragoon Guards Regiment."

In 1870 the Fenians made their last attempt at invasion and during this year the Cobourg and Port Hope troops were united under Lieutenant-Colonel (Brevet rank 26 Nov. 1857) Boulton under the style of the scarlet and yellow kit of the Cobourg troop, whose title "Prince of Wales Canadian Dragoons" was retained as "Northumberland and Durham Squadron of Cavalry." During 1872 the Cobourg troop formed an escort to the Governor-General, Lord Dufferin, on the occasion of His Excellency's visit to Kingston.

On March 23, 1872, Major H. C. Rogers of Peterborough, a son of the first commanding officer, received permission to raise a troop in that County with headquarters at Peterborough. This troop wore a blue and white Carbineer uniform and by a general order of the 30th April was united to the Northumberland and Durham Squadron to form a Regiment styled the "3rd Provisional Regiment of Cavalry," Prince of Wales Canadian Dragoons. The number of its English prototype. Lieut.-Col. Boulton was gazetted to the command of the three troops with the regimental rank of Major, the 15 officers including an Adjutant, Paymaster, Veterinary and Medical Officer and that rare rank in an auxiliary cavalry regiment ,a Riding Master.

In 1895 Col. Boulton, after 34 years service in command, retired; he was the oldest and senior Commanding Officer in the service, being 71 years of age, being at the same time a Lieut.-Col. to close on 20 years seniority. He had served both in the Rebellion and Fenian Raids, and the great efforts he had made to bring the 3rd Dragoons to an efficient state was testified by Major General Herbert, commanding the Dominion Army in notifying his retirement, Lieut.-Col. H. C. Rogers of Peterborough was promoted to the command on 25th February, 1895, and during this year the D Troop had the honor to form an escort to the Governor-General, Lord Aberdeen, on his visit to Belleville. In 1896 the combined Regimental device of the beaver, maple leaves and Prince of Wales plume was confirmed officially. The Regimental headquarters were not removed from Cobourg to Peterborough. A small contingent of the 3rd Dragoons were in 1897 Jubilee contingent sent to England; the regiment in 1898 training in Brigade Camp at Belleville.

On Dec. 4th, 1899, Colonel Henry Cassady Rogers resigned in favor of Lieut.-Col. R. S. Greenwood. Lieut.-Col. Greenwood, a graduate of R.M.C. Kingston, went in the same year, 1899, to South Africa in command of a squadron of one of the mounted Canadian contingents, together with seven members of the regiment in the ranks, among the latter was Major W. W. Brown, C.O., 1904. Col. Greenwood, on arrival of expedition at Johannesburg, was put in charge of railways, succeeding Sir Percy Girouard, under S. A. Government and commanded a Railway Brigade.

In 1900, owing to the scarcity of cavalry offices caused by the war, Col. H. C. Rogers was sent for and given the command of the 2nd Canadian Cavalry Brigade, which he filled for three years in camp at Kingston.

On Jan. 19, 1904, Lieut.-Col. W. W. Brown, Colborne, was gazetted to the command, resigning in favor of Lieut.-Col. C. H. Syer, Millbrook, on Jan. 19th, 1909. In January, 1912, Lieut.-Col. Syer resigned and Major C. H. Rogers of Grafton, Ont., was gazetted, and is now in command.

"I've just had the ride of my life"

And this is the car—a Chandler—$995 f.o.b. Cleveland

NOW I know why so many friends of mine have been praising Chandler. And I can easily see why Chandler is making such widespread gains in sales, and enjoying such a successful and prosperous year.

For real performance, as well as style and comfort, I nominate Chandler. It ticks off the miles like an 18-jewel watch—and eats up distance at a pace that makes the famous charge of the Light Brigade seem like a slow motion movie!

And I like the way it stays on the job. No sick spells. No whining or whimpering. And the car lubricates itself from end to end the moment you press a plunger with your foot!

Just check up all I'm saying by seeing this car, and driving it yourself. I'm sure you'll like it.

3 NEW SERIES OF NASH CARS

Twenty-One Models Included, on Four Different Chassis Lengths.

Three entirely new series of cars, including 21 models on four different chassis lengths are announced to-day by The Nash Motors Company. The new series will be known as the advanced six, the special six, and the standard six, and despite a wide array of costly improvements, these cars are also featuring new lower prices, the reductions ranging as high as $195.00.

A new radiator design, lower and more sweeping body lines and a brilliant array of new colour combinations make these new models without question the most beautiful ever produced by Nash, and the cars fully justify reports which have been current for the past week that Nash would introduce an array of cars which would command nationwide praise.

Important mechanical refinements and improvements are also announced at this time, keeping pace with the progress which has been made in increasing the beauty of the cars' appearance. Outstanding among these are the introduction of new springs of a secret alloy steel which is said to increase riding comfort in amazing degree.

The new body lines are lower and more sweeping than ever before and the wheels are smaller, although interior roominess has not been sacrificed in the smallest degree.

Matching the beauty of line is the new array of colour combinations which Nash has adopted for these cars. Many striking new harmonies are used.

The radiator design of the Standard Six causes this series, now to possess a beauty of appearance which not long ago was confined entirely to cars costing two or three times as much.

The size of the motor in the Standard Six has been increased, giving ability. The size of the crankshaft has also been made larger to achieve greater motor smoothness. The crankshaft will, of course, continue to be of the seven-bearing type which has made Nash smoothness famous.

The new springs of secret alloy steel which Nash now introduces will be used on the Standard Six as well as on the Special Six and the Advanced Six for increased riding comfort. Another contribution in this respect is the use of shock absorbers at the front as standard equipment.

The Standard Six motor is now insulated from the frame at all points of contact with rubber, providing a quicker operation and saving the motor from road shocks.

Other important refinements are the carburetor heat control valve on the instrument board, a new type of head lamp, a new four-blade fan, a new stop light switch, a heavier oil pump cover plate, new parking lights, new instrument panel indirectly lighted, new remote control door locks, a new light control on the steering wheel, and new body hardware of special Nash design.

As far as the Advanced Six series is concerned, the most important change is, of course, the adoption of new lower body lines, new body colours and a deeper radiator. A number of important refinements in the interior and under the hood have also been made, however. The clutch, flywheel, and crankshaft are now balanced as a unit on a highly sensitive machine for increased smoothness in operation. Body quietness is increased by the use of a fender welt consisting of a contoured piece of heavy fabric-covered felt between the body and the fenders of the car. Springs are of the new secret process alloy steel type for increased riding comfort.

Other refinements are: Complete encasing of battery and tool boxes, preventing entry of dust or water; new friction pads on front brake support plates preventing rattles; new carburetor heat control valve; new heat indicator on the instrument panel; new reinforcement of the frame for rigidity; new heavier and longer parking brake lever; new nickel steering column; new improved horn, and new type of foot accelerator.

New and more beautiful body hardware for the interior is also adopted throughout the Advanced Six series to match the beauty of the new exterior colours and new upholstery.

The improvements which have been made in the Special Six series are very similar to those which have The body lines are lower and more sweeping and the wheels are smaller. New alloy steel springs have been adopted.

And the other refinements, including balancing of the clutch, flywheel, and crankshaft, the fender welt, the nickel steering column, the new accelerator, etc., are now a part of all Special Six models. (Advt.)

PASTOR AND WIFE RECEIVE GIFTS

Rev. J. F. and Mrs. Everson Leaving Norham For Dunsford.

NORHAM, June 29.—The congregation of Trinity United church assembled in the League hall on Friday night to spend a social hour with Rev. J. F. and Mrs. Everson before their departure for their new field of labor at Dunsford. The program was in charge of Mrs. Lorne Evans, Sunday school superintendent and recording steward of the Norham circuit. A hymn, "Yield Not to Temptation", was sung, after which Mrs. Oscar Laver read an address to Mr. and Mrs. Everson and J. Wesley Newman and Gordon Mitchell presented Mr. and Mrs. Everson with a rattan rocker and armchair and jardinere stand. Addresses were given by Oscar F. Laver, who represented the trustee board, and complimented the pastor and his wife for their capable, willing, and untiring effort in the work of the church. Mrs. Stanley Brenton, the president, spoke for the Ladies' Aid, Miss Lulu Mitchell for the young people, Miss Mildred Curtis for the Sunday school, and Mrs. J. W. Newman for the choir. The members of the Mission Band expressed their appreciation by a hearty hand clap.

Following is the address:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Everson:

Knowing that you are about to leave our community for service in another field we, your Norham friends have met this evening to enjoy with you a social hour and express to you our sincere regret that you are so soon to leave our midst. During the years that you, Mr. Everson, have been pastor of our church you have proven yourself a true and loyal shepherd to your flock and we have learned to look to you for counsel, help, and friendship. You have shared with us our sorrows and our joys being alike a friend and comforter in the sick room and a stimulus to all our social gatherings. Whenever a call came for workers you and your family worked with us side by side and when necessary alone. We wish you to know that these kindnesses have not gone by unnoticed.

We would not forget, Mrs. Everson the services you have rendered our community through the church as a faithful member of the choir, a devoted leader of the Mission Band and an earnest teacher of the young men of our Sunday school. We feel that in losing you we are losing not only a friend but a worker whose place will be difficult to fill.

And now as our old relations are about to be severed we ask you to accept this parting gift, not for its intrinsic value but as a constant reminder of the many friends you have made at Norham. It is our earnest wish and prayer that you and your family may be spared for many years of service for your Master and when your work is finished may you hear the Father say, "Well done, and enter into the joy of your Lord."

Signed on behalf of the Norham congregation—Lorne Evans, Recording Steward; Oscar F. Laver, Trustee Board; Mrs. Stanley Brenton, President of Ladies' Aid; Mrs. J. W. Newman, representing the choir.

WILLINGDON IN MONTREAL

Governor General and Lady, With Aides, Travel By Plane.

OTTAWA, June 29 (Canadian Press).—The Governor-General, accompanied by Lady Willingdon and two aides-de-camp, left Ottawa for Montreal by seaplane this morning.

The seaplane, piloted by Group Captain J. C. Scott, director of the Royal Canadian Air Force, soared into the air over Rockcliff Park at 9.27 a.m. and immediately headed in the easterly direction of the metropolis.

Another plane, piloted by Wing Commander Gordon, accompanied one containing the Governor-General and Lady Willingdon.

Both Group Captain Scott and Commander Gordon are honorary air aides to Lord Willingdon

A veil of official reticence was thrown around the air jaunt of their Excellencies, but it was understood to be strictly informal. One air official described it as a "pleasure ride"

The planes are to return to the capital around six o'clock this evening, Lord Willingdon having an appointment later in the evening with the Canadian Authors' Association in convention here

In 1926 Canada won the prize for the best dessert apple in the Empire—the McIntosh Red.

WILLIAM HAMILTON LIMITED HAS PROUD SERVICE RECORD

Business Established in Peterborough 11 Years Before Confederation.

SEVERAL LINES

Re-organization Enabled Company to Expand in New Field.

William Hamilton, Limited, has the proud record of over seventy years' service to Canadian industry.

The business was established at Peterborough, Ont., in 1856, by Mr. William Hamilton, as the William Hamilton Manufacturing Co., the products of which were especially at that time sawmill machinery, which became known all over Canada. This line was soon added to in the manufacture of hydraulic turbine machinery, when they entered into an agreement with James Leffel & Company of Springfield, Ohio, to manufacture in Canada their well-known line of turbine water wheels, head gate hoists, etc., and this agreement is still in force after nearly fifty years. Mining machinery was then added, and finally pulp and paper mill machinery and a general line of structural steel and steel plate work, which they have been manufacturing for some forty years.

In 1926 the company was re-organized to a broader field of endeavour under the following directorate:

President—P. P. Westbye.

1st Vice-President—L. Dunlop Palmer.

2nd Vice-President—M. V. Sauer.

Secretary-treasurer—L. A. Potvin.

Directors — B. J. Coghlin, Kenneth Dawes, J. S. T. Bethune, Theo. Kipp, C. H. Kaufman.

From a small beginning in 1856 the plant has been added to until to-day it covers nearly ten acres. Honesty of Purpose Wins!

No event is more glorified in Canadian History than that Historical Event which consummated the Labors of the Fathers of Confederation which welded into one harmonious unit the separate Provinces of Canada.

So the strength of any innovation is measured by its background of honest purpose. Its bulwark of defence becomes the sincerity of the people behind it.

In a hundred and one ways Loblaw Groceterias have adopted new methods and manners in merchandising—innovations intended for the betterment of its patrons. Sometimes these methods have met with derision among competitors, sometimes with doubt among friends. But they have served the purpose of contributing to the city's welfare—of establishing true merchandising ideals—of giving you sound values. And we have succeeded far more than could ever be estimated by any amount of material wealth.

Behind this institution is the purpose to build business through integrity; to strengthen friendship through service.

CHURCH MEETINGS

Warkworth Free Methodist

WARKWORTH, June 29. — Rev. John A. Kelly, financial agent for the Ann Arbor School, Mich., preached at both services in the Free Methodist Church on Sunday. Mr. Kelly was a Warkworth boy about twenty years ago. The services which were most interesting were largely attended.

In the evening Mr. Kelly preached from the twenty-second chapter of St. Luke, the forty-fourth verse—"And being in agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground."

In regards to Christ, the earnestness was pathetic. The Bible which is the most wonderful book in the world is also God's letter to the human race. God is manifested in this letter through the churches, it is also a book worth the time to read.

The speaker pointed out that Queen Victoria, General Jackson, President Coolidge and many other leaders or rulers as the case may be, believed in God. When a ruler is wicked, the people mourn, but when a ruler is good the people prosper and rejoice.

It was stated that the present President of the United States said in one of his speeches that civilization cannot live without Christionization.

There is no greater writer in the Bible than the Apostle Paul. He was the greatest missionary with the exception of Jesus.

A man or woman is a fool if they do not believe in God.

In nature God is manifest. Nature is God.

When God says a thing one cannot improve it and what He says is always right. There is nothing scientific in anyone trying to improve on the beautiful lily anyway it is impossible.

God did not make Hell, men make their own Hell.

Scientists say it is impossible to sweat blood and live, but according to two illustrations Mr. Kelly said it was possible.

If fathers and mothers could sweat blood for their children how much more must Jesus have sweat in Gethsemene for a world that has gone wrong. What agony He must have endured. Someone must go through Gethsemene to bring their boy or girl to Christ. In speaking to the boys and girls they were advised to prize and appreciate a Godly influence in the home and to turn always to the right.

God always knows in what way to bring people to Him. The Son of Man is still faithful in trying to save the world.

People may be interested in airoplanes, submarines, cars, large ships and many other things, but Angels would not be greatly interested, but let one soul turn from God or let a sinner seek for salvation, then the Angels would be interested. There is great rejoicing in Heaven when souls are saved.

One would walk a great distance to personally thank one for finding a baby but it was doubted by the speaker that not many would venture up the aisle to the altar to thank the Jesus for going to Calvary to save them.

In closing an invitation was extended to those of the congregation who were not saved to come to the altar and seek the Saviour who did so much for the world.

Uncle Wiggily

To-day's Bedtime Story

By Howard R. Garis

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE ROBIN'S EGG

(Copyright 1927 McClure Syndicate.)

"Well my dear Boppy and Um" said Uncle Wiggily to the little wooden man and woman in the bungleump one morning "I shall not be living with you much longer. I must go back to my own bungalow and my wife Nurse Jane and the forty 'leven little bunnies."

"We shall be sorry to have you leave us" remarked Boppy.

"And we hope you will often come to see us" added Um.

"Oh of course I shall!" answered the rabbit uncle. "But you two have learned how to unscramble you Wogglejigs now so really you don't need me here after the first of May."

You see Uncle Wiggily had gone to visit Boppy and Um in their bungleump to help the little wooden man and woman unscramble the Wogglejigs. For the Wogglejigs being made of wood were always changing tails legs heads necks and different parts of themselves. They would change one with the other. Dazie would let Wumple take her head and he would take hers. Such a scrambled time as there was.

"But now you know how to unscramble them" said Uncle Wiggily as he made ready to hop off and look for an adventure.

"Thanks to you, we do, yes," said Boppy. "And I have an idea," he went on as he bounced up and down in the air to look over the top of a currant bush in the front yard, "I have an idea that some of our Wogglejigs are off in the woods now, all scrambled up," he told Um.

"Oh, do you think so?" asked Um who was rolling around and around on a bunch of dough crust flattening it out to make a pie. Being without arms and legs, Boppy and Um had to bob up and down and roll themselves around when they wanted to do anything.

"I am sure Dazie, Mazie and the others are playing the scramble game in the woods instead of going on to school," said Boppy.

"I'll take a look," offered Uncle Wiggily. "I am going to the woods to find an adventure. If I see the Wogglejigs there I shall send them on to the Lady Mouse Teacher."

"How we shall miss you when you go back home!" sighed Um as she bopped up and down on the pie crust to flatten it out.

"I shall often come over to see you!" promised the bunny rabbit. So he hopped to the woods, and he was no sooner beneath the trees on which the new, green leaves were beginning to show than he saw the six Wogglejig children playing the scramble game.

"Oh, here comes Uncle Wiggily!" cried Wumple snatching his yellow head from red Dumple who had it on his neck.

"We had better run to school!" shouted Mazie, taking her light blue tail from Bumple who had given her his green one.

Then, before Mr. Longears could hop to the dingly dell, where the Wogglejigs were playing instead of going to the Hollow Stump School, all of a sudden the little wooden children ran off, not wanting to be scolded or to be late at class, for the Lady Mouse Teacher might keep them in.

"Well, I nearly caught them!" chuckled Uncle Wiggily as he hopped over the green grass. "But they got away—that is, all but one!" he added as he saw one Wogglejig child still in the dingly dell. It was a dark blue Wogglejig and by that color Uncle Wiggily knew it was Dazie.

"But, where is your head, Dazie?" asked the bunny, for the little wooden girl had none. There she stood without a head, though she had her neck, her four legs and her tail, all complete. "Dear me!" sighed Mr. Longears. "Some of the other Wogglejigs must have run on to school with Dazie's head. This comes of playing the scramble game! But walk along with me, Dazie," he said to the little Wogglejig girl without her head. "I'll lead you to school and then we'll get your head for you."

Dazie did not answer. How could she without her head? But over in a low tree a Robin bird suddenly began to flutter her wings and she chirped in alarm, so Uncle Wiggily asked what was the matter.

"Theres such a funny egg in my nest!" chirped the Robin. "It isn't exactly the color of my other eggs and it keeps rolling about under my feathers. I wish you would look at it, Uncle Wiggily."

When the bunny looked in the Robin's nest as she flew off it, he saw, amid her own blue eggs, the round, dark blue, missing head of Dazie Wogglejig. And the head was fast asleep.

"Why, here's Dazie's head!" cried the bunny. "Dazie's head is in the Robin's nest, like an egg." And then Dazie opened her eyes and laughed as she said:

"I hid my head in the nest to fool Bumple. Then I fell asleep, I guess, and the Robin covered me with her wings, thinking my head was an egg. But, where are my brothers and sisters?" Uncle Wiggily told Dazie they had gone to school, and when Dazie had put her head back in place she hurried on to her classes, and all was well.

FOUR AND A HALF YEARS OF PROGRESS

Local Business House Finds Additional Cause For Celebrating.

McBride & Franks, of Peterborough's Factory-to-Home Furniture and Home Furnishings store, extend to all citizens best wishes for a Diamond Jubilee celebration unmarred by a single drawback. They themselves have additional cause for rejoicing in that their four and a half years of business enterprise have been fruitful of gratifying appreciation by a yearly growing list of patrons.

In an interview, McBride & Franks attribute their business success to their Factory-to-Home selling plan, which, with its corisequent quick turnover, enables them to sell on the closest possible margin of profit, thus assuring customers of very substantial savings at all times. Then by selling at Toronto mail order catalogue prices, and in some instances even for less, they are diverting to their store considerable business that formerly went to Toronto. And in this connection customers are also realizing that by buying at home they get the advantage of such personal attention and advice as is not available when dealing out of the city.

This enterprising firm are proud of what they sell—the latest creations in beautiful furniture, really exquisite draperies, dainty curtains and perfectly lovely rugs—all of which, both in quality and price, and supplemented by super-efficient service, have won for McBride & Franks at 224 Charlotte Street, an outstanding position in Peterborough's mercantile arena.—(Advt.)

COMBINED SCHOOLS CONTAIN 45 UNITS

Collegiate Will Have 25 Class Rooms, Besides Shops and Offices.

The following statement was presented to the City Council at Monday's meeting by E. B. Fowler, Chairman of the Board of Education:

"In February of this year, you will remember, we appeared before you with sketch plans and estimate of cost to meet the much needed additional accommodation to our Collegiate Institute. The plans, as you will remember, were designed to provide for an extension to ur present building which would cover the lots to the west and south of our present School property. Receiving your unanimous approval of the scheme as regards the accommodation provided and the estimate of cost, the Board engaged the services of Mr. Blackwell as architect and we are this evening here to present to you definite plans and specifications confirmed by definite tenders from reputable contractors which the Board unanimously recommend be accepted.

"The specifications have had the most careful consideration by the Board in order that the citizens of Peterborough be provided with the best possible facilities for Secondary Education at the minimum cost. Every item has been carefully scrutinized, not only with a view of getting the best possible arrangement to meet the requirements but with a view of making the ourden as light on the taxpayer as possible.

"It might be of interest to you at this time to give you a few details with regard to the provisions which we have made for the various departments. The combined building will contain 45 units composed as follows:

Class Rooms.

Present building, Academic, 10; new wing, Academic, 5; Vocational, 10.

Shops.

Machines, electrical, wood working, agriculture, lecture rooms.

Drafting Room.

Commercial.

Typewriting room, office practice room.

Household Science.

Sewing and millinery rooms, cooking room, demonstration room.

Administration and General.

Library and board room with vault accommodation, principal's room, assistant principal's room, administration office, gymnasium (boys' and girls'), auditorium (on ground floor) with a seating capacity of 1,000, other rooms necessary for storage, bicycle rooms, lunch rooms, cloak rooms and janitor service.

"The building has been designed, so that the floors will be on the same level as the floors in the present building, thereby making it so that the whole building can be opened up as a single unit. The subbasement of the new section which will be below the level of the present basement will contain the boilers for heating, the ventilating system and the main floor the gymnasium.

"The next floor, on the level of the present basement, will contain the machine shops, wood working shop, electrical shop and several class rooms. Also the armory supplies, bicycle rooms and entrance to gallery of the gymnasium.

"The first floor, which on a level with the main floor of the present building will contain class rooms, administrative offices, lunch rooms and the auditorium, main entrance will come in from McDonnel street.

"The next floor, which is on the level of the second floor of the present building, will contian class rooms, commercial rooms, household science rooms and the entrance to the gallery of the auditorium.

"The third floor of the present building which now contains the auditorium will be completely remodelled and will contain the chemistry laboratory, art room, photography room, etc.

"We have endeavored to do as little to the old building as possible because as you are aware, the grants from the Government are not applicable on any expenditure to the old building, although we would like to say that the Department have been most considerate and have conceded to the requests of the Board when it was shown to them that the best interests of all concerned were better served by adapting certain portions of the old building to certain vocational requirements.

"The heating system will be taken care of by two boilers installed in the new wing. The present heating system of the old building will be connected with same at very little expense and the old boilers dispensed with. The ventilation in the old building, which is very bad, will be completely remodelled. The heating and ventilating of the new wing will be what is called the "Fan Blast System" which we believe will prove a most economical system both from the installation and operating standpoint.

"The auditorium, as I have stated, will have a seating capacity of approximately 1000 with entrance off McDonnel street on the main floor and gallery entrance from the second floor. The auditorium will be provided with the necessary equipment, fire escapes, etc., making it one of the best appointed and equipped auditorium in the city and it will fill a much needed want, not only for our school work but for our many civic activities.

on the plans and specifications as

"The cost of the building based computed from actual tenders which we now have in our possession, is as follows:

Total cost of building complete	$295,000
Less Government grants	102,600
Net	$192,400
Less County's share on the basis of 100 pupils	$ 21,600
Net cost to the City	$170,800

"This is approximately $15,000 more than the estimate presented to you in February which we believe in itself is remarkably close but it is largely accounted for by the fact that we had to increase the dimensions of the building previously figured on, approximately three feet. To do this, we arranged with the Department of Militia and Defense to give us the right-of-way as a laneway between the School property and the Armories and in this way we were able to provide sufficient driveway accommodation at the rear of the building.

"The above figures cover the cost of the building proper. The equipment we estimate will cost in the neighborhood of $30,000, 50 per cent of which is provided by the Government. As far as the equipment is concerned, we will, of course, have to provide full equipment for the class rooms, etc., but as regards the shops, it is our intention to start in a limited way and build to this gradually as the occasion may demand. It is also our intention to start an Agricultural Department in connection with our vocational classes at the very earliest possible moment as we believe in a farming community such as we have here, it will prove one of the most valuable vocational subjects and be of inestimable value to the farming community of this district.

FINANCE FEUD STILL GOING ON

Churchill-McKenna Differences Continue—New Statement Issued.

CHARGES DENIED.

LONDON, June 29 (United Press).—The feud between Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Reginald McKenna, head of the Midland Bank, continues.

A statement issued on the behalf of Mr. McKenna, in reply to the Chancellor's declaration in the Commons that there was no need for an impartial inquiry into the working of the Bank of England, says: "Mr. Churchill failed to appreciate the purport of Mr. McKenna's argument, which never contemplated the adoption of the Federal Reserve System for this country. Is this not an added reason for an inquiry?"

Churchill stated that McKenna wished Britain to adopt the American Federal Reserve system, which is denied.

London is naturally excited over the feud, which is unparalleled in recent years.

A bill introduced into the New Hampshire legislature would have required one of each 27 beds in hotels to be seven feet in length.

NAME ON PLANE IS EASILY READ

Byrd's Machine Bears the Word "America" in Large Letters.

STARTS FOR FRANCE.

ROOSEVELT FIELD, N. Y., Canadian Press. — Commander Richard E. Byrd, and his three-man crew, took off on their long delayed scientific air expedition to France in the monoplane America at dawn to-day.

The three motored Fokker took the air at 4.24 o'clock Eastern standard time.

The plane passed Cape Cod at 6.22 according to a radio received here from Commander Byrd. The commander reported "Misty and rainy, all well." The speed of the plane was estimated at 108 miles an hour. A report from Princeton Mass.says s plane, believed to be the America, passed at 6.20.

He who runs may read the name of the America, and there will be little doubt of her identity when the trans-atlantic air voyager has passed. The name of the triple-motored monoplane appears on the plane's side in huge letters of red, white and blue, and may be read at a great height.

The ship is all lettered up, but none of the decorations approaches the name in size. The word "Peace" appears with an olive branch decoration, and "U.S. Mail" is announced. The designation NX-206, and A.T.C., the initials of the owning company, "America Trans-Oceanic Company," are shown. "N" is for North America; "X" is for experimental, and "206" license number.

British Assist

LONDON, June 29 (United Press) Reaching out over the Atlantic to link up with communications from the United States, the British Air Ministry was prepared today to furnish the latest weather reports to the America. It was announced that the Ministry would broadcast special reports to all ships at 9.45 a.m. and 8.45 p.m. while Commander Byrd was in the air. The ships were to be asked to relay the reports to the America.

Desiring wholly to co-operate with the American authorities, the Air Ministry was ready if necessary to wireless advice regarding the best course if bad weather occurred over any part of the Atlantic.

Wants Gas in Paris

PARIS, June 29 (Canadian Press). — Instructions from Commander Richard Byrd have been received by the Air Union of the French Commercial Air Line to have nine hundred and sixty gallons of gasoline waiting for him at Le Bourget, leading to the belief here that he intends to return to the United States by air.

Near Halifax

HALIFAX, N.S., June 29 (Canadian Press).—The America passed over Martins River, forty miles from here, at 10.10 E.S.T. this morning. Commander Byrd was flying very high. A thick fog is reported off the coast with little or no wind. At 10.35 the plane was sighted at Bedford, nine miles from this city.

Crosses Cook's Falls

BRIDGEWATER, N. S., June 29.—Residents of Cook's Falls, near here, sighted an aeroplane passing over in the direction of Halifax at 9.55 E.S. T. to-day .Thep lane was flying very high.

KIWANIS CLUB

On the whole matters went from bad to worse in both provinces and and each experienced the excessive heat, if not the excessive bloodshed of a rebellion. In Lower Canada, Louis Papineau anticipated some of our modern continental demagogues, though fortunately with less success, and in Upper Canada it was William Lyon Mackenzie against the Family Compact.

Big Men for Work.

It has been one of the glories of Great Britain that whenever there has been a big job to do there has generally been a big man to do it. In this instance the big job was the pacification of the seething discontent of Canada, and the big man Lord Durham, who came to Canada as High Commissioner in 1838 and the condition of the country is well expressed in his own words when he said, "The vessel of state is not in great danger only as I had been previously led to suppose, but looks like a complete wreck."

Following the famous report made by Durham to the Colonial Secretary the third corner stone of Confederation was laid in the passing of the Act of Union 1840, which again united the two Canadas.

The passing of this Act practically closed all political controversy with the Motherland over the matter of responsible government and the principle laid down by Earl Grey, Colonial Secretary, has been followed ever since. 'This country,'" he said, referring to Great Britain, "has no interest whatever in exercising any greater influence on the internal affairs of the colonies than is indispensable either for the purpose of preventing any one colony from adopting measures injurious to another or to the Empire at large."

Unsettled Conditions

The Act, however, failed signally to bridge the racial divisions existing in this country or solve the problems made difficult of any solution by prejudice and bitterness. We talk now about third parties but in those days the number of parties was legion and the only way government could be carried on at all was by coalition with all its weaknesses.

Added to the troubles of Upper and Lower Canada were the troubles of the Maritimes and the talk of annexation was never so rife as say in the 40's, dispelled however to a great extent by the Navigation Act of the Imperial Parliament, 1849, which gave Canadian shipping immense relief and the Treaty of Reciprocity with the United States in 1845 which opened up new avenues of trade. But when it is remembered that between May, 1861, and June, 1864, there were two general election held in Canada and three governments formed and defeated, some idea can be formed of the unsettled condition which prevailed. That condition could not in the nature of things long continue.

Happily the wise men of the period saw a new star on the firmament, the star of Confederation, and this eventually led them in 1864 first to Charlottetown and later to the city of Quebec, where the fourth cornerstone of Confederation was laid in the passing of the seventy-two resolutions which afterwards formed the basis of the British North America Act, under which as a happy, prosperous, united people we have since been governed.

An exalted tribute has been recently paid by one of our younger Canadian poets, who is a personal friend of mine, to those far-seeing and patriotic statesmen, Macdonald, Brown, Howe, Tupper, Cartier, Galt, and the rest who buried their differences and pooled their talents for the common weal and the greatest Canada that was to be.

The poet says:

"And there, in retrospection's dark'ning gleam,
I see that valiant company again—
The Fathers of our country, whose fine dream
Welded a thousand leagues in one domain,
And lit the ardent Saxon fires anew
In regions where her purest flame now burns;
Theirs was the probing vision that discerns,
In fog and rain, the sunlight breaking through;
And theirs the seership and prophetic powers
To sense the rise of these amazing hours."

Putting it less poetically but none the less forcibly, another writer epitomizes the work of all those pioneer statesmen of this country who helped to lay the corner-stones without which the marvellous structure of Confederation as we have it now would have been impossible. He says:

"Practical men, they achieved those practical ends; but their achievement was greater and more lasting than they knew. For they had acted in accordance with political principles of permanent force and universal application—that, in the long run, the unity of the whole is all the stronger for the diversity of its part, and that on fidelity to the, deep loyalties of local or provincial or national life, and only indeed on that sure foundation, can be built, if men are wise and patient, a broader and more generous communion of human fellowship and service."

In conclusion I can only point again to the work that has been done by those who by unselfish devotion and unremitting labor have given to us a Dominion with greater possibilities perhaps than any other country in the world. We benefit from the labor and sacrifice of those who have built up this glorious heritage for us, but at the same time we cannot escape responsibilities which our heritage entails. We who are the sons of Confederation are also the fathers of the future greatness that is to be. The question is: Are we to be worthy of our sires that our sons may be proud of us. Wilson Macdonald, the poet I have already mentioned, gives us the note to strike, and I strike it today for this club:

"Arise, then, O my country, this great day,
And light your eyes with that crusading flame
Which burns all evil obstacles away—
The pigmies of our malice and our shame,
We have been cowards, traitors, fools and knaves;
We have been fine, heroic, strong and true;
So, in this purple hour, let us renew
Our strength and bear our hatreds to their graves—
A Kingdom, with crescendo of the sea
Sounding the golden age that is to be."

GIRL INJURED BY MOTOR CAR

Little One Breaks Away From Mother, Running Into Street.

TAKEN TO HOSPITAL.

Breaking away from her mother, this afternoon about 12.30, little Nina Fletcher, 125 Stewart Street, ran into the rear fender of a car in front of Confederation Square, and was knocked unconscious by the blow received on her head.

The automobile, driven by W. H. White, 598 Sherbrooke Street, was proceeding south on George Street, when the child tried to cross the street in front of the fountain. White made an attempt to miss the child, and in so doing ,swung the rear end of the car towards her, causing the little girl to strike her head on the rear fender.

Mr. White then picked up the child and rushed her to Nicholls Hospital, where she was attended by Doctors Morgan and McPherson.

At the time of going to press, the child was still unconscious and in a very critical condition. Constables Wheeler and Piffer investigated the accident.

ORPHANAGE SOCIAL VERY SUCCESSFUL

Large Crowd Attends Annual Garden Party Yesterday.

There was a good attendance at the annual social and garden party of St. Vincent's Orphanage, held last evening on the Orphanage grounds. The weather was propitious and the crowd seemed to thoroughly enjoy the attractions provided in the various booths and the excellent supper served by ladies from the city's parishes. The grounds were brightly illuminated by strings of colored lights and the band of the Salvation Army provided its usual programme of excellent music during the evening, the selections played by the bandsmen receiving much appreciation from the audience.

The al fresco supper, served on the green at long tables covered with white cloths and decorated with flower-filled vases, was in charge of Miss M. Croft, assisted by Mesdames Malane, Hogan, Murphy, Flynn, Turcotte, Daly, Gainey, Crowley, J. E. White, Hummel and Miss M. Nevin.

A booth for the sale of ice cream was in charge of Mrs. J. Lynch, Mrs. T. McQuillan and Miss May Grady. Peonies were also sold here, a quantity being kindly donated by Mr. J. H. Callander. The booth was decorated with yellow and white paper streamers and festoons.

The Misses A. Burns and C. Kennealley had the little doll booth, with its adornment of paper wheels in bright red, yellow and white, and Miss Annie Simons was in charge of the fish pond ,assisted by the Misses Josie Lynch, Agnes Weir, Josephine Clancy, Grace White, Theresa Meehan, Mary Doris and little Fred White.

The blue and white Sodality booth was supervised by the president, Miss Marion Hayes, assisted by Mrs. J. L. Donoghue and the Misses Mamie Archambault and Norah Shevlin.

A booth where the sale of general articles was in progress during the evening, under Mr. T. Turcotte's charge, was looked after by Mrs. W. J. Young, and Mrs. Frank Lynch, Miss A. Hurley and Miss M. Moloney. Messrs. F. Fairen and C. Rutherford officiated at the gate.

The draw for the Hope Chest, which was to have taken place last night, was postponed on account of returns not being available from all districts, and will be held on Tuesday next, July 5th.

Downturn In Corn Features Grain Market

CHICAGO, Ills., June 29 (Canadian Press). — Sharp early downturns in corn were a feature of the grain trading to-day. Better weather throughout the corn belt had a decidedly bearish influence, and so, too, did reports that the ending of a filibuster by the Illinois Legislature had revived chances of the Kessinger Bill enactment. Opening at ¼ cent to 2¼ cents drop, corn underwent some further setbacks. Wheat started unchanged to ⅛ cent off, and later showed loss all around. Oats were easy. Provisions tended to sag.

CONFEDERATION YEAR TEACHER TELLS ABOUT THE MILLBROOK OF MORE THAN 60 YEARS AGO

Not Much Interest in Celebration on First Dominion Day.

BOAT TRIP

David Hampton Sailed to Bobcaygeon With William Taylor.

MILLBROOK, June 292. — The actual consummation of Confederation on July 1, 1867, did not apparently excite as much interest in the way of celebrations, unless in the large centres, as it has in succeeding years, judging by the recollections of citizens whose memories travel back to the time the event occurred.

George Berry, a lifelong resident of Cavan, now in his eighty-fifth year, and retaining his memory to a remarkable degree, can recall no local celebration in connection with Confederation, but remembers hearing Sir John A. MacDonald, some little time afterward, addressing a big meeting in the old Opera House, Peterborough. On his way up the stairs, surrounded by a number of party friends, the company was halted by some little boys playing marbles on one of the steps. Later, Sir John convulsed the audience by telling how he asked the little shavers to gather up their marbles "and leave room for the gentlemen to pass, as we have to attend a meeting upstairs." One little gaffer looked up into my face and shouted, 'Hallo, old Union Jack!'"

In Millbrook when the Liberals held a meeting at Medd's Grove, a favourite picnic ground for all the churches, and for community events, at that time, Sir Alexander Mackenzie was the speaker, so to even matters the Conservatives afterwards brought Sir John MacDonald for a similar big gathering. Characterising Sir John as "a shrewd politician, not much of a speaker, with a wonderful faculty of attracting men to himself," and again illustrating his happy capacity of telling a funny story, setting his hearers laughing, and then sitting back and smilingly regarding them in a way that prolonged the merriment, Mr. erry recalls that on this Boccasion, while ridiculing the claim of the Opposition that a change of Government was in the best interests of the country, Sir John said: "A fox once lay by the roadside covered with flies and mosquitoes, when a passerby, moved with compassion, would have relieved Sir Reynard's sad plight by shooing away the pests, but the fox cried, 'Nay, do no so; these are nearly full, and will soon desist from lack of appetite; if you drive them away a new, hungry horde will descend upon me and begin afresh to gorge at my expense, and I shall scarce have strength to endure the onslaught."

The audience caught the suggestion, laughed, cheered, threw their hats in the air, the speaker sat down, smiling — the cheering and the laughter were prolonged; he had accomplished his purpose, having captivated the crowd for that time at least.

David Hampton.

David Hampton, who has had an experience of about fifty years in the teaching profession, thirty-six and one-half years of that time being spent as principal of the local school, may count among the former pupils many who now adorn the professions, who have attained marked success in their various life callings, and who are scattered to the four corners of the globe.

At the time of Confederation, Mr. Hampton was a young man of about twenty, and then in his second year of teaching, his school being at Reaboro; he recalls attending a big celebration at Lindsay on July 1st, 1867, featured chiefly by military manoeuvres, the troops participating being under the command of the late Adam Hudspeth. The Hudspeth family is one whose name has been connected with the history of Lindsay practically from pioneer days.

The excitement incident to the Fenian Raids of the previous year had not yet entirely subsided, and suspicion of activity on the part of Roman Catholics, though doubtless largely unwarranted, was still prevalent, hence the military character of the public gathering on Canada's first national birthday. Mr. Hampton does not recall public speaking at the event, but may possibly have missed this part of the programme because of enjoying his first boat trip, the excursion being to Bobcaygeon and return. William Taylor, an uncle of Millbrook's present Reeve, W. T Wood, was his companion on the pleasure trip.

Kent Street, though extended in length, was at that time about as well built up in the business section as at present, though there have been many improvements in the character of the buildings; the pavement was a rough board walk, and coal-oil lamps furnished the street lighting. Residences had their lawns enclosed with fences; grass was not of smooth, velvety greenness, but grew high and uncut, lawn movers, apparently, being of later invention.

In his boyhood days Mr. Hampton attended school on the Fallis Line, the teacher being Mr. Winslow, father of the late Major Charles Winslow, an officer who commanded the troops from this district during the North-West Rebellion. Individual desks were unknown, the pupils sitting in rows on long forms before pine desks, guiltless of paint or varnish, upon the slanting tops of which many initials were surreptitiously carved.

A custom, apparently in common use in schools of that day, was to have the scholars read aloud in unison, beginning in a comparatively low tone and gradually increasing in volume until all were fairly shouting; considering that lessons were not being read from the same book in every case the effect to an outsider must have been rather confusing, but the teacher evidently saw a purpose in the hubbub, for his face would actually beam with pleasure when the ultimate fortissimo was reached.

Private High School.

A private High School was at one time conducted in the village through the efforts of the late Venerable Archdeacon Allen, who wished to have this advantage for his six sons. The building in use was located where the local printing office now stands. Twelve boys and two girls (Harriet Kellett, afterwards Mrs. E. S. Clarry, and her cousin, Miss Giggin) made up the pupils.

A long table made of smoothed planks and laid upon "horses" was the desk round which the class gathered, the teacher, a Mr. Irwin, from his place of vantage at one end keeping a vigilant oversight of individual conduct. His chair was a common saw-horse, with level top canvas-covered, and his miserly disposition was shown when he once had the misfortune to break a lens in his spectacles; he contrived a rim of sole leather for the remaining glass tied a string to either end of the home-made frame, put this over his head, and thus held the aid to his eyesight securely in place.

The "strapping-machine" was of good hard maple, probably over two feet in length, two or more inches wide, and three-quarters of an inch in thickness. Punishment with this "instrument of torture," especially as Mr. Irwin was a tall man and usually stood on his toes when administering correction, was extremely severe. When in a rage the master would stalk up and down the room, brandishing his thick walking stick, storming at the pupils, and if he located an unfortunate culprit would shout: "Ye brat ye; I'll break the skull of you." Study under these circumstances must have been difficult at times, but Mr. Hampton considers that he did learn Latin that afterward stood him in good stead.

Evidently Mr. Irwin had sufficient provocation to try his patience and temper on some occasions. At one time a heap of shavings and other material for starting the fire had accumulated under the table; one pupil, a tall fellow named Waddell, while absorbing the teacher's attention with a knotty arithmetic question reached his long arm around, struck a match, and applied it to the pile. The pupils cast many fearful glances at the master, who was finally set coughing by the choking smoke and started wrathfully to find out who was responsible for the blaze. Waddell, of course, was not suspected, as he was beside the teacher apparently deeply engrossed with the problem requiring solution. No one was thrashed, however, the master scattering the flaming stuff with his stick and stamping out the fire to the accompaniment of dire threats of punishment—the combined activities providing a safe outlet for his towering rage at the practical joke. The fact that it was a very hot day aggravated the offence considerably.

If a pupil was dull or lazy, the teacher had no hesitation in expressing his opinion candidly, as when he addressed one boy: "Be a miller, George; you're too stupid to learn, and too lazy to work; but if you are a miller you can help yourself."

Ruler Disappeared.

During the year that Mr. Hampton attended this private school, the teacher's ruler finally disappeared one noon when he and a fellow-student were alone in the room; the latter, who had been the victim of its cruel strokes, was determined to dispose of the offending stick, and insisted that the two share in the act of putting it in the stove and burning it. In spite of angry questioning and threats, Mr. Irwin never discovered what became of his lost property, nor curiously enough, did he ever replace the vanished weapon of chastisement.

Almost from the beginning of his teaching career Mr. Hampton voluntarily increased his duties, and without extra financial remuneration, by taking up High Scohol work for advanced pupils, many of whom would never have had the opportunity of teaching (in several cases the stepping-stone to a successful professional career) had it not been for his ability and unselfish readiness to undertake the added work. This frequently meant teaching continuously from eight until six, and having classes on Saturday as well.

Looking back over his extended experience in the half century spent in instructing the hundreds of pupils who came under his care, Mr. Hampton can readily see what wonderful strides have been made in educational methods, study books, equipment, buildings, and standards of teaching, particularly in the past ten years, but considers that probably no one Minister of Education or other public individual may claim all the credit.

It is a far cry from the day when the "three R's" formed practically the whole "study menu," to the varied and comprehensive curriculum of the present day, yet the pupils trained in the little log school-houses of pioneer days have later been among the brilliant thinkers, speakers, and legislators of whom the nation has since been proud.

Gives Crunchiness and Flavour

Puffed Rice makes other foods taste good

Many ways suggest themselves for using Puffed Rice to make other foods more delightful. They add to the taste and attractiveness of many dishes.

Mothers know these whole grains are good for children because all the starch cells have been broken down by the puffing process.

In taffy, barley sugar and fudge, Puffed Rice gives crunchiness and nutlike flavour which children love.

And on ice cream or fruit, fresh or cooked, they give their flavour and receive the mastication which all foods need, but so many don't get from little people.

AGED RESIDENTS OF OMEMEE HAVE DEAR RECOLLECTIONS OF THE EARLY PIONEER DAYS

George English Tells How Main Street Was Dotted With Stumps.

HUMOROUS SIGNS

John Beatty Says Village Had More Buildings in 1867.

OMEMEE, June 29.—George English was born one mile north of Omemee, on Lot 5, Con. 5, 80 years ago. His father was one of the earliest settlers in Omemee, having taken 14 weeks to cross the ocean from Ireland to this country in 1820. Mr. English recalls Confederation year distinctly. It was in the year 1867 that he commenced to learn his trade in J. Hamilton's carriage factory, Lindsay. It was during the same summer that the Lindsay jail and courthouse were built and Mr. English helped put the iron on the flag pole, which was an immense stick like the mast of a schooner, to hoist the lag for the Confederation Day celebration.

In the brief conversation Mr. English was reminded of the numerous stumps which used to infest the main street of Omemee. He also recited the following verses which hung from a sign in front of J. S. Little's store situated where the Temperance House now stands:

"With the icy season waning fast,
The sleighing has not long to last.
And warmer grows the northern blast,
The roads will soon be broken.
And if you might your means be mending
Just make a trip to Omemee,
And when you're there, if ne'er before
Just call at J. S. Little's Store.
You'll pass the threshold of his door
And then you'll marvel greatly;
The old, the young, both girls and boys,
Make such a clatter and such a noise,
And buying off a stock of toys,
And eating of his candy,
And then his earthenware to see
His glass, his china and his tea,
For its flavor, all agree,
The like is not in Omemee.
His tea so cheap, so fine and strong,
It is the prayers of every tongue,
And the people all agree
The like is not in Ommemee.'

Mr. English is the only surviving member of a family of seven children. He himself has four sons and one daughter living: Messrs. William and John of Toronto; Edward of Saskatchewan, and Thomas of Bangor, Maine, and Miss Sadie of New York.

JOHN BEATTY

John Beatty, eldest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Beatty, was born in Omemee 75 years ago, and has a very keen memory. He remembers distinctly Confederation Day, but there was no community celebration in Omemee. In reviewing past history, the village of Omeeme had at that time more houses and buildings than today, but of course not as good. The population was about the same. There were more stores and places of business. For instance, there were three tailor shops, 5 shoemaker shops, five blacksmith shops, four carriage shops, and now the village can hardly boast one of these. The school was situated on the present site and composed of a high and public school; the teacher of the high school being John Shaw, while Miss Knowlson had charge of public school. There were six hotels and three liquor stores, and yet there were five churches—3 Methodist, the Episcopal, the Wesleyan, and the New Connection; a Presbyterian, and an Anglican—and all were well attended. Pigeon River was then open for navigation, lumber being transferred from Bobcaygeon by steamboat.

The 24th of May was always a red letter day in Omemee, when all showed their loyalty by attending the celebration. It was also known as training day, when the volunteers were trained by Drill Sergeant Turner of Millbrook, in preparation for the Fenian Raid.

Mr. Beatty recalled four men by the name of English, whose families totalled 42 children, and what a splendid showing they made as they attended church or any gathering at one time.

One of the humorous reminiscences related was an advertisement which hung very conspicuously from one of the prominent hotels. On this sign was the picture of a bee-hive with numerous bees around, and underneath was the following verse:

"Within this hive we live and thrive,
Our drinks are sweet as honey;
And if you're dry, come in and buy
But don't forget your money.

Miss Margaret Beatty and Joseph T. Beatty of Omemee, are other members of his family. He has also two daughters, Mrs. T. E. MacPherson of Omemee and Miss Lyla Beatty of Rochester.

GABRIEL BALFOUR

Gabriel Balfour, who is one of the pioneer residents of the village, having been born here 75 years ago and made his home in and near Omemee all his life, sanctioned what Mr. Beatty had said concerning the village and distinctly remembers many incidents in his early life. He is one of a family of ten children, all of whom have finished this life out but two brothers, William and John of Carberry, Manitoba.

HENRY LAIDLEY

Henry Laidley, who is now 85 years of age, was born on Griffins' Hill, west of Omemee, and while his memory is not as keen as a few years ago, he recalls many incidents, both humorous and full of interest. To hear the wolves howling in the swamp near his home and to have an animal killed by a bear were two hear-raising incidents recalled. Mr Laidley was the eldest of a large family and worked hard as a young man logging, underbrushing and many a bushel of grain he threshed with a flail.

Wild pigeons inhabited this neighborhood and, as described by Mr. Laidley, they appeared in large flocks that would almost cloud the sun. He has killed as many as two dozen birds with two shots on the stubbles after the crop was taken off.

Mr. Laidley moved with hi sparents to Manvers Township when a boy, and the land was not cleared there, as in this part. The shanty they lived in was roofed with basswood boughs and later they shingled it with pine shingles, which he helped to make by hand. He recalled the fireplace and the stone hearth, where his mother used to bake bread. The bread pan stood on legs and coals were placed underneath and on the lid of the pan to cook it. The handle of the frying pan was about six feet long and was supported by a cord from the ceiling.

The first horse his father owned was vividly recalled, and later he had a team of horses and a yoke of oxen at one time . One horse was disabled and the one horse and ox worked well together.

A true story of his uncle, James Laidley, who had just arrived from Ireland, was narrated by the aged gentleman. His uncle had settled on a hill to be above the treetops in the valley of Omemee. One evening, while the children were playing around the shanty they neard what they thought to be someone calling for help, so they told their father immediately. He, upon hearing the call (Who-hoo-hoo-who-hoo) maintained the same thought, and answered in a loud tone, "Keep the moon to the right and come this way; I'm a stranger in the country myself.' The lost man was afterwards found out to be an owl, but Mr. Laidley showed his willingness to help during the remainder of the night.

The surviving members of his family are one sister, Mrs. (Rev.) Phelp, of Lindsay, and one brother, Isaac, also of Lindsay. He has three sons, Fred of Colorado and Howard and James of Saskatchewan ,and one daughter, Mrs. Margaret Stephenson of Omemee.

Mrs. Joseph Morden.

Mrs. Joseph Morden, born in Ayrshire, Scotland, is now 78 years of age, and recalls visiting her brother in Illinois during Confederation year, going from Millbrook to Sarnia by train and continuing from there by boat. A vivid remembrance was the seeing of a bear with her two cubs, while she was crossing the field to visit her uncle. Needless to say, her nerve was not as good thereafter.

Mrs. Morden has two sons, Joseph Graham, of Pomona, California, and David Graham, of Detroit.

Joseph Morden.

Joseph Morden, who is 75 years old, attended the first celebration of Confederation at Belleville. He was born near Tweed.

He has six sons living, namely: David of Peterborough, Harry of Bowmanville, Fred of Reaboro, and Clere and Bert of Mount Pleasant.

Henry Nugent.

Henry Nugent, born in Tyrone, in Darlington Township, is in his 82nd year. He recalls to mind many happenings when a boy, and also remembers attending the first Confederation Day celebration in Port Hope. The mode of conveyance was on a flat car, with seats across and cedar boughs around the outside. One notable feature of the day was the large crowd and the train had to make the trip to Lindsay and return for the remainder of the passengers, who got home at daybreak.

Mr. Nugent recalls the Fenian Raid, having been called out in 1870, at which time he served eighteen days. (Sickness of Mr. Nugent prevented the obtaining of any further reminiscences. Mr. Nugent has a wonderful memory.)

Of a family of nine children he and three sisters, Mrs. Mary Robinson of Janetville, Mrs. J. W. Ridd of Elm Creek, Man., Mrs. Matilda Poast of Loop City, Nebraska, and one brother Thomas, of Iowa. The members of Mr. Nugent's family are his wife, who was Mary Jane Cork of Picton, two daughters, Mrs. L. A. Mahood of Omemee, and Miss Ida Nugent, of Toronto, and four sons, Rev. Walter H. Nugent, of Portland, Oregon, Fred and Percy, of Lindsay ,and Milton of Grand Forks, North Dakota.

Thomas H. McQuade.

Thomas Henry McQuade, of Omemee, who has passed the four-score mark, being now 82 years of age, is one of the pioneers of this district. He was born in Emily Township, and has resided there all his life. He is the eldest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Arthur McQuade. He recalls incidents of over sixty years ago. His father was M.P.P. for nine years, and he, too, took an active part in politics and general affairs of the community, having served as Warden of the county at the time of Sir John A. MacDonald's death, and had the privilege, with the other members of the County Council, of attending his funeral. He remembers distinctly of practising in preparation for the Fenian Raid ,a few months previous to Confederation.

William H. Kennedy.

William Henry Kennedy, although only 71 years of age, recalls the meeting the Fathers of Confederation in Montreal. He was born on the 14th Concession of Emily, and has resided in and around Omemee all his life. He has four brothers, namely, Rev. J. A., at present of Omemee, George and Joshua of Lindsay, and David, of the 14th Concession of Emily, and two sisters, Mrs. J. Courtney, of Omemee, and Mrs. T. Johns, of Toronto.

VENERABLE DOURO TEACHER HAS MANY EARLY RECORDS

Mrs. Honora Moher Was Teaching 137 Pupils in 1867.

STILL ACTIVE.

Husband Held All Important Offices in His Township.

DOURO, June 29.—Mrs. Hanora Moher was born in 1848 in Asphodel, about two miles south-west of Norwood, on the farm now owned by Mr. Patterson. She was one of a family of six sons and five daughters. The surviving members of the family are: Mrs. Mary Hurley, Simcoe Street, Peterborough; Thomas O'Shea of Norwood; William O'Shea of Hastings, and Jeremiah O'Shea of Norwood, residing near the old homestead.

After finishing her studies in the public school, Mrs. Moher attended grammar school in Norwood for two years, and commenced to teach school in the year of Confederation, or the year previous, she cannot remember which. At any rate she was teaching in S.S. No. 7 in 1867 (the school near the village) in Douro. The school was an old roughcast building, where the east and west church sheds are now. The number of pupils on the roll was 137! Teachers now adays would hold up their hands in horror if one-third of this number was given them to teach. Mrs. Moher boarded with Mrs. McCarthy (mother of Mrs. Frank Fairen, of Peterborough) for a time, and with Mrs. Nancy O'Brien, now of Edmonton, Alta., for a time.

One of the most touching and interesting sights was the teaching of a class of her former pupils, now grey-haired men and women, by Mrs. Moher during the Douro re-union and centenary celebration in 1925. Two or three of the class are full of Irish wit and funny were the answers she received to the primer class questions that she asked. Her hands trembled from nervousness, and a tremor was in her voice and tears came to the eyes of the one-time pupils when they looked at the venerable old lady still bright and active.

Not all the former pupils still living were able to respond, but the following were present: Patrick Leahy, Maurice O'Brien, Augustine Whibbs, (Douro), Mrs. Frank Fairen (Peterborough), Mrs. Edward Carlow, Mrs. Bridget Sullivan, Mrs. Martin Kylie and Dennis McCarthy (all of Peterborough), Mrs. James W. Collins, Mrs. John R. Allen, George Hamilton and Edward J. McCarthy of Douro.

Mrs. Moher taught in Otonabee and in No. 6, Asphodel, and then came to No. 8, Douro, where she met and married her husband, the late William Moher.

Asked to name all the teachers she could remember, who taught in S.S. No. 8, in the past 55 years, Mrs. Moher gave the following list: Rev. Fr. Whibbs, Emma Leahy (now Sr. Loyola, of St. Paul, Minn.); Miss Mary O'Leary (Downeyville), now Sr. Philomena, of the Order of St. Joseph, Peterborough; Mr. Quinn of Rice Lake district; Miss Johanna Geary of Ennismore; Maurice Condon of Douro; Timothy McCarthy, Miss Nellie Buck, B.A., of Rochester, N.Y.; Miss Aylward, Peterborough; Miss Costello, Ennismore; Miss Emma Kennedy, Lakefield; Mr. Peter Sweeney, Douro; Miss Frances Houlihan, now Mrs. Frances Carveth of Toronto; Miss Mary Houlihan, who died in Rochester; Miss Teenie Boland of Asphodel, now Mrs. Barry of Buffalo; Josephine Condon, of Douro, now Sr. Mary Elizabeth of the Sisters of St. Joseph, Peterborough; Miss Loretto Dalton, Douro, now Mrs. James Murphy, of Tamworth; Miss Anastasia Moher, now Mrs. Peter Greenan of Lindsay; Miss Zita Moher, Douro, now Sr. St. Patrick of Sudbury; Miss Eleanor Moher, Douro; Miss Margaret Perdue, Downeyville; Miss Katherine Houlihan, Downeyville; Miss Ella Tobin, now married and living in Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.; Miss Katherine Fleury, Lindsay; Miss Eva Doherty, Otonabee, and the present teacher, Miss Veronica Johnston of Lakefield.

In Mrs. Moher's youth people travelled in wagons, with here and there a buggy. She remembers bears coming and carrying off a young pig. Her father and the neighbors used to drive to Trenton with a grist to be ground.

Her father was at Myersburgh at the grist mill when the building collapsed from the weight of the wheat and two Asphodel men, Messrs Curtin and Lonergan, were killed.

A Disastrous Explosion.

Mrs. Moher also recalled the explosion of a wagon-load of dynamite on the road to Lakefield, a mile or so from her home. Her son was within a quarter of a mile of the scene of the accident, and was thrown violently to the ground and stunned. Two men were taking a quantity of dynamite from Tweed to Government works in the north country when somehow the dynamite exploded, and men, team and wagon were blown to atoms and windows in houses were broken as far away as Campbellford.

Mail has always been brought to Douro by the Warsaw stage since Mrs. Moher has lived in the township. Local postmasters that she remembers were Mrs. McCarthy, Mr. Hanrahan, Mr. Gorman and now Mr. Towns.

Lakefield, three miles distant from her home, was only a small village when she knew it first, there being two hotels, two stores, a saw-mill and a few residences.

People lived in log houses in those days. The women got wool, carded and spun it into yarn for knitting or making into cloth. One kind of yarn was used for dresses and another for blankets.

The men were always busy brushing and clearing the land, burning up what would now be valuable timber.

Mrs. Moher is fond of reading, and does some beautiful tatting. She has her set of dishes that she got when she was first married in good condition yet.

Interesting Diaries.

Mrs. Moher showed The Examiner many of the diaries, business papers and books of her late husband. It would be hard to find better written and composed books and documents. Diaries were found of various years back into the seventies. While most of the entries were of the everyday doings of his family, some interesting entries of current local events were made. Almost every day the weather was recorded.

'Part of one entry was: Saturday, Dec. 4, 1897, sold hen turkey for 65c, and ducks for 70c a pair.

Wednesday, Feb. 26, 1898—Sold load wood (which was No. one maple) for $3.25.

February 28, 1898—Blizzard's (political, Liberal) meeting at Douro village.

March 1, 1898—Election Day.

March 24, 1898—Bought Farley's farm (now the home of Albert Moher).

March 4, 1899—C. Brown, school inspector, here for dinner.

Mr. Moher was license inspector for thirty years. One of his certificates of appointment was signed by the late Hon. J. R. Stratton, Provincial Secretary.

Another document was the copy of the will of the late Dennis Leahy, drawn up by Mr. Moher in 1884.

A copy of The Examiner of Wednesday, July 30, 1902, recorded the address and presentation given Dr. Moher by the Peterborough C.M.B.A., when he was moving to Orillia. The address was signed by the following: H. Phelan, Pres.; James O'Brien, R. Sheehy, M. Connors, John Coughlin, T. J. Doris, U. J. Devlin.

There was the copy of a lease given to Patrick Leahy by William McCarthy.

Mr. Moher was a Justice of the Peace for years. Copies of information laid before him were among his papers.

There was a book of by-laws of Douro Township in 1871, and a journal of the proceedings and by-laws of the County of Peterborough in 1868. Mr. Moher was a township councillor for some years, and Reeve for some years.

The census of the township was shown as 2,864 in 1881, and a slump to 2,131 in 1891. Lakefield in 1891 had 1,120 persons.

Another interesting exhibit was a copy of a sale bill for a sale of his farm, stock and implements in March 27, 1877. Chas. Stapleton, auctioneer, Times print.

Mr. Moher was a school trustee in S.S. No. 8 for a great many years and here and there are records of proceedings of meetings, also receipts and records of school affairs.

January 7, 1889—Wheels and sleighs at election municipal). Robt. Allen, E. Foley and J. Walsh among those elected.

January 27, 1880—Bishop visited church to arrange for making up a purse for the late Father O'Connell on the eve of his departure from the parish.

Resolution passed the Nova Scotia Legislature in 1854: "That a union or confederation of the British provinces on just principles, while calculated to perpetuate their conection with the present state, will promote their advancement and prosperity, increase their strength and influence and elevate their position."

Cartier - Macdonald Government sent a delegation to urge union upon the Impeial authorities in 1858.

MADOC WAS MADE PROMINENT THROUGH GOLD RUSH IN 1867

Thousands Invaded District in Hard Winter and Settled Eldorado.

SOME REMINISCENCES

Charles O'Hara Recalls Early Days in Hastings County.

MADOC, June 29.—To the citizens of Madoc and the surrounding district the years of 1866 and 1867 were remarkable and destined to go down in the annals of county history as the years which introduced this section of the country to the rest of Canada, many parts of the United States and even to the Mother Country. And all this was not because of the great Act of Confederation, but because of that unique incident in the history of Hastings County known as the "gold rush."

The discovery of gold in Madoc Township caused a mushroom growth in Madoc and brought about the founding of the village of Eldorado. The winter of 1867 was one of intense excitement and prospectors poured into the north country. In February a correspondent from Harper's Illustrated Weekly paid a visit to Madoc and its mines to gather full particulars on the spot. Two local photographers took pictures of the hill on the farm where the Richardson mine was situated, of the residence of the Richardsons, and of the fortunate John Richardson himself, and of the "Anglo-Saxon" hotel which had been erected near by, and before these views could be published so many more buildings had been erected as to give an entirely different aspect to the place.

Previous to the sudden influx of visitors, Madoc was a quiet little village known to comparatively few. Charles O'Hara, who was ninety-five last November, remembers when the west side of Durham Street, now the main street of the town, was covered with bush. On the east side were small log and frame buildings. Mr. O'Hara was born on his father's farm about a mile and a half from the village. As a boy, Mr. O'Hara walked into the village to go to school. In those days school was held in an upstairs room of the hotel in the winter time, and Mr. O'Hara recalls looking down through a pipe-hole and seeing the Indians drinking whiskey in the bar-room below. In the summer school was held in an old building where the commercial sample rooms now stand on the west side of Durham. There were many Indians in this part of the country then. Mr. O'Hara remembers his father being called on to help on an occasion when an old Indian grandfather, John Snake, having been left alone, fell in the fire and was burned to death. He was buried on a knoll in front of the spot on which D. McKenzie's house now stands.

The first buggy in Madoc was owned by Mr. Ward, while Mr. O'Hara, Sr., owned the first one ever made in Madoc. Buggies then had very large wheels, and at first glance they appeared so high that one felt the need of a ladder in order to reach the seat!

First Circus.

Mr. M. O'Hara recollects going to the first circus ever held in Belleville. He drove the thirty miles in a lumber wagon with his parents, and they made a three-day trip of it, spending a night going and coming at his sister's home in Sydney. All the little boys were placed in seats close to the circus "ring," and the horses kicked so much dirt into their eyes, they could scarcely see the performance, Mr. O'Hara laughingly tells.

At the time of the gold excitement some blasting was done on the O'Hara farm and a small "show" of gold was found in consequence, but not enough to be of value. This was in March, and in the same month, six stages a day were making the trip from Belleville to Madoc, sometimes carrying as many as twenty passengers in a stage, while a great procession of private sleighs and cutters wended their way northward.

The weather of 1867 was cold and forbidding as is learned from the newspaper of those days, The Madoc Mercury. In one paragraph, dated March 22, it says: "The weather has been very unpropitious for gold-hunters for the last few days. At the end of last and the beginning of this week the cold was as great as it was, on the average, in what is generally called the depth of winter; now, a rapid thaw has set in, rendering locomotion very uncomfortable. We are therefore not at all surprised to see in Thursday's Leader that three hundred persons who had come thus early to look for "gold" and "employment" had returned to Toronto without finding either. How are men who do not own a foot of land to find gold while the snow is still on the ground and the creeks are frozen over?"

On May 11, The Mercury remarks: "Not having met with that universally known individual, 'the oldest inhabitant' since the snow cleared off, we are unable to state whether he recollects a season so cold, wet and backward as this has been, but we are told by some who have lined in this township for very many years, that they do not remember anything like it."

This backward spring appears to have been followed by a long dry spell, for on July 6 the following note appears: "There was a fine rain on Thursday, which will greatly benefit the growing crops. The late drought has, however, affected the spring wheat in this section to such an extent that except in a few favored localities only half an average crop can be looked for."

The heavy rains of the early spring made the roads almost impassable, yet still the people came. A large hotel was built with dimensions of 60 by 40 feet and three and a half stories high, which contained a large dining-room and office on the main floor and parlors and bedrooms on the others. In April the roads were so bad the stages frequently broke down. A heavy snow storm turned the world white again, yet people crowded in so fast that they had to sleep on the floor in the hotels and were thankful to get beds made there for them.

An excellent picture of the growth of the district and of conditions prevailing is given in The Mercury of July 6, copied from The Toronto Leader and evidently sent in from Ottawa:

"An official report from the inspector of the gold mining division, dated the 6th inst., gives the following particulars: About 100 shafts have been sunk in Madoc and adjoining townships but the heavy rains of the past fortnight have filled up the excavations with water so that nothing can be done at present. In a few weeks, however, work will be vigorously proceeded with. Within the last month from 3,000 to 4,000 persons have visitetd Madoc and a large proportion of them are still in the neighborhood prospecting. The increase in the settlements around the mines is extraordinary. At Eldorado, where last Fall there was but one log shanty, there are now eighty dwellings and new ones going up every day. A post office is about to be established there with a daily mail from Madoc. At Madoc eighteen new buildings are now in course of erection. Between Madoc and Belleville there are four four-horse stages and two covered stages and there is also a daily stage between Brighton and Madoc, via Trenton and Stirling. There is besides a daily express and a line of telegraph is being rapidly pushed forward. Thirty mining licenses have been issued."

Perhaps the floating population and unsettled condition of the country had something to do with the lack of a celebration in Madoc on July 1, 1867. An agitation for a celebration in Madoc was started but nothing was done and The Mercury record its disappointment thus:

"The inauguration of the new Dominion of Canada on the First of July, was celebrated in Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and other places with much enthusiasm. Processions, reviews and excursions were the order for the day, illuminations and fireworks for the night. But in Madoc, to the mortification of many, far less was attemptetd than has in former years been successfully accomplished on the Queen's Birthday. All that was done in response to the request of the Reeve that the day should be kept as a public holiday, was to shut up the shops, display some flags and parade the Volunteers through the streets after firing a 'feu des joie' on the cricket ground."

Yet, in spite of their lack of ostentatious enthusiasm, Madoc and the surrounding country have always proved themselves loyal adherents of the new Dominion and the old Motherland. Their faithfulness and loyalty were abundantly shown in the years of the Great War. Madoc has remained the centre of a certain amount of mining activity, but at present it is talc, and not gold, that is its steady industry. The Mounted Police are gone; the frame and log houses have been replaced by more substantial brick; the muddy road from Belleville by a provincial road; the stages by a railroad train. Only the weather repeats itself, cool and rainy, yet not so backward as that Spring of sixty years ago, for the fields give promise of good crops.

A paragraph from The Montreal News of '67 in an article reviewing the progress of Canada, says: "In one hundred years we have, by means of the Victoria Bridge, made an uninterrupted line of railway from Sarnia to the Atlantic and along its length there have arise flourishing towns and cities, where there was then nothing but the primeval forest. . . . It palls the imagination to conjure: What we shall be in another fifty or one hundred years, under a prosperous, peaceful and united confederation."

And now sixty years of that confederation have passed by and the railway stretches from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and Canada has made even greater strides in progress and advancement than the writer of the article dreamed. Our vision again turns forward after thinking back over the past and dreams of a still greater Canada gleam before the eyes of every Canadian. In Hastings County, gold may never be found again, but her fields are green and many minerals may yet be hidden in the rocks. In 1867 the gold rush came to Hastings and passed. Confederation came to Canada and stands. She has become a golden country with a beauty that cannot fail, and Hastings is still one of her many golden counties, rich in faith and loyalty.

HIAWATHA MAN RECALLS 1867

John Hawkins Chopped Down Tree for Flag Pole to Celebrate.

HERE 50 YEARS AGO

HIAWATHA, June 29.—John Hawkins, who lives in the vicinity of Hiawatha, remembers very well the first Dominion Day in 1867.

He was a young man then, living in the Village of Columbus, some six miles north of Oshawa. Mr. Hawkins was working in a four set woollen mill, which was of log and frame construction, and over a mile from Columbus on a little creek which furnished the power.

Coarse cloth, blankets and yarn were made from the natural wool.

The holiday passed over very quietly in the village, but the forty or more employees celebrated by the ladies making a flag by hand and the men chopped down a tree and erected it as a flag pole.

Mr. Hawkins moved to Peterborough soon after, and there he cast his first vote by open ballot and met his present wife. They will soon be married fifty years. Both are very active and are at home with their son, Fred.

Mr. Hawkins was a machinist by trade.

C. H. HUFFMAN.

C. H. Huffman, 349 Hunter street, was born in 1858, in the Township of Manvers Ontario. Going back to the old days, Mr. Huffman in an interview with The Examiner, remarked that as a carpenter, he was the first man in Peterborough to do away with wooden fences separating the lawns. Mr. Huffman stated that while in the States he had perceived this idea and had immediately acted upon it on his return to this city.

EX-CHIEF ROBERT PAUDASH PRAISES WORK OF PIONEERS

Says Soldiers Are Given Too Much Credit in Proportion.

TELLS OF OLD DAYS

His Two Sons Served Throughout the Great War.

HIAWATHA, June 29. — Sixty years ago Hiawatha had a holiday on the first Dominion Day. The venerable old man, who through ill-health was not able to attend the celebration at Lindsay, where he was invited, ex-Chief Robert Paudash, remembers the occasion. His father, Musang Paudash, was chief at the time, and spoke on that day, first in Indian, and then he translated it into English.

During the afternoon a ball game was played between picked-up teams of the village. From the description given, it must have been similar to our present hard baseball.

In the evening a square dance was given, and the late William Copeway on his fiddle supplied the tunes.

Sports were also held, sprinting and pole-vaulting.

Mr. Jeremiah Crowe, father of Mr. Benjamin Taylor, and uncle of Mrs. Alfred Crowe, both now residing in Hiawatha, was the best all-round athlete. He vaulted four inches over his own height.

In June Mr. Paudash, when the correspondent called on him, was hoeing his potatoes. While chatting, he stated that people who have made the Empire are the pioneers. People who in the early 20's, 30's, 40's, and 50's settled in the wilds and started homes. He thought too much spread was made over the soldiers in proportion to the work and sacrifice that both had come through.

Mr. Paudash is a very loyal subject to the British Crown, and in every war that has threatened Canada and the Empire since there was a British Canada, soldiers or scouts bearing the name of Paudash, or their grandsires, who did not at first have that name until 1774, have served.

George and Johnson Paudash, sons of the ex-chief, both served throughout the Great War.

Mr. and Mrs. Paudash carefully preserve medals and documents bearing dates of far-gone days.

Sir John A. MacDonald was a great idol of Mr. Paudash. Sir John had charge of Indian affairs for some time after Confederation.

Mrs. Paudash does not remember many facts of Confederation, at which time her parents lived at Rama, near Orillia. But she was able to recall very vividly the great joy, bell-ringing, hat-waving, and shouting when word reached their home that the Fenians were driven back a few years before Confederation.

Mr. Paudash then remembered that the Hiawatha church bell was rung, and some people were afraid that a hole would be worn in it, as they rang it so long on that first Dominion Day.

IRON WORKS AT MARMORA WERE STARTED OVER 100 YEARS AGO

Cost $100,000 to Erect and $300,000 to Operate up to 1865.

EARLY HISTORY

First Manager is Buried in Marmora Cemetery—Name is Unknown.

MARMORA, June 29.—The evolution of Marmora Township from the happy hunting grounds of peaceful Indians into a white settlement was due to the discovery of immense deposits of iron ore within its borders. The publication of the first Hastings Directory in 1860 by Mackenzie Bowell of Belleville preserved many interesting facts of the previous history of Marmora which otherwise would have been lost to posterity. Therein it is mentioned that works were established on a large scale by Mr. Hays, who had been accustomed to manage a similar business in the King's Dockyards in England. A large amount of money was expended, but little or no judgment was exercised. In the Hastings Directory for 1865 it is stated that $100,000 was spent for the erection of these works and that $300,000 was expended on their maintenance up to the year 1865. These works were erected over a century ago as the following extract from "The Irishman in Canada," published in 1877 by Nicholas Flood Davin, and dedicated to the Earl of Dufferin, Governor-General at that time, goes to show:

'Anthony' Manahan was born in 1794 in Mount Bellew, County Galway. He went to the Island of Trinidad in 1809 with his brother, a merchant in high repute who was private secretary to Sir Ralph Woodward. He married Sarah, third daughter of the Hon. John Nugent, who was administrator of the Government during an interregnum of two years and came to Kingston in 1824, which he left to take the management of the Marmora Iron Works in 1825, established by Mr. Hayes, like himself an Irishman. After the death of that gentleman who sank a large fortune in the undertaking (Manahan also lost a considerable sum) he returned to Kingston in 1830. Mr. Edmond Murray (of Irish descent) and himself ran on the Conservative side in the election for Hastings in 1834 when both were returned. He was elected for Kingston in 1840 after a very severe contest with Mr. J. R. Forsyth owing to the fact that both Orange and Green supported him, for though a Catholic, he was most popular with his Orange countrymen. He was defeated in 1844 by Mr. (now Sir) John A. Macdonald, and died in Kingston in 1849." Mr. Manahan was not the first manager of the works. The first appointed to that position by Mr. Hays is buried in Marmora Cemetery, but at the present time there is no means of recalling his name. In those early days two buildings served for public worship. The Roman Catholics used a goodly sized stone church which was erected about the year 1812 on the western bank of the Crowe River at a very picturesque spot. The church today is a ruin, a brick church having taken its place until destroyed by fire when it was replaced by the handsome edifice of today. Services of all other denominations until half a century ago were held in the old Town Hall. At the time when the works were operated, the roads to market—that is to say Belleville—were in really an impassible condition, which with the bad management mentioned, brought ruin to the parties who in turn undertook to work the mines. It is stated that specimens of manufactured iron from these mines sent to the World's Exhibitions held in London and Paris were pronounced by the judges to be of finest quality and for which diplomas were given. So says that writer of sixty-seven years ago. "It only requires men who understand the working of the mines, who have the capital, the energy, the enterprise and the proper judgment to make them remunerative." For this, Marmora has waited more than three generations in vain. The population of Marmora Township in 1839 was 369. In 1860 it was about 1,130. In 1860 there were 241 householders, 41 of whom are recorded as residing in the village. In 1865 the population of Marmora Township was about 1,500 and 40 householders are mentioned as resident in the village for that year. Satistics for 1839, 1850 and 1859 as given in the first Hastings Directory concerning Marmora are interesting:

	1839	1850	1859
Uncultivated lands	7852	6424	7211
Cultivated lands	1098	1661	1980
Houses	9	15	161

The Township Council in 1860 was Reeve Hugh Jones; Councillors, Solomon Johns, Richard Campion, Laughlin Hughes and Jas. Hamilton. George Wiggins was Clerk, and Daniel G. Bowen the Treasurer.

In 1864 the following composed the Council—Reeve, Hugh Jones; Councillors, James Hamilton, Solomon Johns, John Crawford and William Leonard. W. W. Armstrong was Clerk, and the Treasurer was Geo. Bleecker.

Living in Marmora Township in the year of Confederation was a native of Ireland who bore the pretentioum name of Royal Keys. He was then 103 years of age and his demise occurred four years later. As far as is known, he was the only one in the district to die a centenarian.

Weather forecasting has been adapted to forest fire protection in Canada with sufficient success to indicate that it will shortly be a prime essential in protective work. It is hoped that the burning of settlers' slash and similar forest operations may be governed by fire weather forecasting methods.

Canada has invested in the fruit and vegetable industry $257,500,000.

MARMORA HAD FIFTY PEOPLE IN YEAR OF CONFEDERATION

Several Residents of Those Days Recount Interesting Happenings.

FETE AT BELLEVILLE

"The Works" Consisted of an Iron Smelting Plant in 1867.

MARMORA, June 29. — Marmora in the year of Confederation with scarcely fifty on its list of householders, was more often referred to as "The Works." These works were essentially the Marmora Iron Works, which by 1867, had twice changed ownership. They were erected some years before by a certain Mr. Hays for the treatment of iron ore, which was shipped by scow across Crowe Lake and down Crowe River from the neighboring Blairton mines.

The population of Marmora 60 years ago was therefore too small to permit of a celebration there. In fact no celebration of Confedreation was found possible nearer than Belleville. An old life-long resident of Marmora township, who has long since reached life's allotted span, Llewellyn Jones, delights in recalling those early days. His faculties have been wonderfully preserved to him, and his memory is exceptionally good regarding dates. He recalls the holding of a large picnic at Belleville in a field on the Kingston Road. In this picnic, he says the military loomed large, for no less than five hundred soldiers—regulars and volunteers—participated. About one-third of Marmora's population made the long journey of thirty two miles each way by horseback and lumber wagon, while about one hundred people journeyed there from Madoc. One is indebted to Marmora's grand old man William Bonter, J.P., for further particulars concerning the Belelville celebration. Born in 1842, five miles east of Consecon, in Prince Edward County, of United Empire Loyalist stock at the age of thirteen, Mr. Bonter came with his parents to Marmora, and has resided in this district practically all the years since. As a young man, he worked extensively on surveying parties, covering quite a large area. The seat of government at this time was Quebec and not Ottawa. Mr. Bonter rode horseback to Belleville to attend the celebration and recalls two speakers who were on the platform, George E. Dixon, a barrister, who was a United Empire Loyalist and E. Murney, M P. Mr. Bonter hinted at the possibility of William Flint, a noted temperance man of those days having also addressed the gathering. Asked if any of the celebrants showed any signs of intoxication at this event, for those were the days of unlicensed houses, Mr. Bonter replied "Not to my recollection. Everybody was apparently sober." In the year of Confederation there was a county celebration at Stirling, on the 12th of July which Mr. Bonter also attended. Confederation, he said, was one of the chief topics of the day, speeches at Belleville being commented upon. No anti-Confederation propaganda in those days could be recalled by him. He admitted though that there were those who showed lack of interest and doubted the wisdom of Confederation. The United Empire Loyalists, who settled in Prince Edward County, had as in other districts, a prominent part in the securing of Confederation for the Provinces. Having been a Justice of the Peace for over twenty years, and in turn served as county and village constable, Councillor and Reeve of Marmora as well as tax collector, Mr. Bonter was in a position to speak on the county of his adoption. Hastings County, he declared, was the father of the good roads systems of Ontario. He recalled, as did others interviewed, the pine plank road between Stirling and Belleville, sixteen miles in length, which had to be traversed in pre-Confederation days. These planks were fifteen feet in length, and three inches thick, and wre laid on stringers. His father, Thomas Bonter, owned the first threshing machine to be used in Rawdon Township. Mr. and Mrs. Bonter celebrated two years ago their sixtieth wedding anniversary, and thus are one of the few local couples to have been married before Confederation.

Mr. and Mrs. William Knox were also married before that event took place. Mr. Knox, a veteran of the Fenian Raid, resided in the neighboring Seymour township in 1867. He recalls the day and celebration referred to but through distance and slowness of travel in those days, was unable to attend.

To many another old resident of the district Confederation is a faded memory. With the Jubilee, sixty years hence we may well believe that it will be different, for the commemoration of the Jubilee is a challenge to the patriotism of each individual, and few there will be who will not respond in some way or other.

Chief Justice Sewell, of the Quebec Bench, suggested the union of British Colonies in America in 1814.

Diamond Jubilee Confederation Day

Confederated Stores

When the Fathers of Confederation met 60 years ago to organize the scattered provinces into one strong whole, they acted on the same principle which is prompting the Canadian Department Stores, Limited, to-day. They knew that several states existing independently, with no organized interests to link them together could never be as efficient as a Dominion of federated provinces with one central Federal Government to deal with matters that influenced them all. In 60 years we have proved them right, and the nation that was founded in Ontario and Quebec now spreads from ocean to ocean — a recognized power in world affairs. We believe that, as the Dominion of Canada succeeded, so the Canadian Department Stores, Limited, must succeed in their aim in better values, and ultimately form a great confederation of chain stores reaching from Halifax to Vancouver.

FIFTY-TWO YEARS POSTMASTER OF LAKEFIELD IS HIS RECORD

W. H. Casement Remembers Entry of Railway Into Village.

BIG BANQUET

Walked Into Peterborough for Celebration of First Dominion Day.

LAKEFIELD, June 29. — W. H. Casement was born in January, 1855, on lot 19, concession 7 of Douro, and has lived all his life in Lakefield. From 1870 to 1914, he acted as agent and operator of the Montreal Telegraph Company. On the death of his uncle, Robert Casement, in 1875, who had held the office since 1847, he was appointed postmaster of Lakefield, so that he has served 52 years as postmaster in the village, and is still going strong. He has filled with distinction the offices of Reeve of the village and Warden of the county. He remembers vividly the entry of the railway to Lakefield in 1867, the event being celebrated by a banquet attended by Peterborough, Port Hope and Lakefield people.

Mr. Casement has of course a very distinct recollection of the celebrations in Peterborough on the first Dominion Day, 60 years ago. "My brother and I walked into Peterborough on July 1, 1867," he said, "and saw the Calithumpians—men on horseback dressed as Indians. In the afternoon there was horse racing near the Little Lake. I think the population would be about four or five thousand. We had dinner with an old friend of my father, named Adams, who was a gardener, with a place near the west end of the town. He took us with his grey horse and wagon to see the races. He brought us back to the house, and gave us a lunch and we started for home about 4 o'clock.

My father often bought goods from the railway station, and from Nicholls and Hall's store, for my uncle, who kept a general store in Lakefield, then called North Douro. Some of the places I remember were Nicholls and Hall's store, Cluxton's, Caisir's Hotel, Menzies' and a place called Mitchell's, where we got lunch, situated near where the Bank of Toronto now stands. Across the street was a hardware store kept by a man named Robert Hamilton. Ormond's sold clocks and watches. The Bank of Montreal was in the building where is now the Peterborough Club. The Royal Canadian Bank was on Water street near the corner opposite that occupied by the Munro Hotel. The Ontario Bank was where the Bank of Montreal now is. The Auburn Mills had been built just a few years then. There was a stone grist mill across the river where the prestent raceway now is. Where the water works now are, there was a sawmill.

I remember the completion to Lakefield of the Midland Railway in 1867. The event was celebrated by a big banquet attended by Peterborough, Port Hope and Lakefield people. It was held in a large building erected as a tannery, but never used for that purpose. The soldiers drilled in it in the winter, and afterwards it was turned into a grist mill, operated by a man named Knox. I knew two doctors—Alex. Bell, now of Toronto, and John Mann, who practiced in the East City, now known as Ashburnham, then called the Scotch Village."

OLD DOURO RESIDENT TELLS CONDITIONS SIXTY YEARS AGO

Richard Carveth, of Robinson Street, Recalls the First Confederation Day.

78 YEARS OLD

Heard Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the Old City Skating Rink.

Richard Carveth

Richard Carveth, residing on Robinson street, Peterborough, since 1924, was born in 1848, on the farm now occupied by his son Arthur, being Lot 2, Con. 3, Douro.

Mr. Carveth, despite his years is bright in mind and strong and active in body and having always been fond of reading is an exceptionally well informed man and an interesting talker.

Mr. Carveth's father, the late Henry Carveth, was of English birth, being related to Lord Lansdowne and a first cousin of the late Archbishop Temple who crowned King Edward. These facts were not given by Mr. Carveth, nor his sister, but by a friend who was present at The Examiner interview.

Mr. Carveth's sister, Mrs. Eleanor Borland, who resides with her daughter, Mrs. Felix Brownscombe, on Murray St., was a visitor during The Examiner's interview, and though eighty-one years of age is bright and active and assisted greatly with her reminiscences of old days. Mrs. Borland became a resident of Peterborough in the year of confederation and remembers well the first July 1 celebration. She has been a constant re sident of Peterborough during the sixty years past.

Mr. Carveth's father was a subscriber of the Toronto Globe, weekly and later daily, for over fifty years. Mr. Carveth remembers well the newspaper accounts of the events leading up to confederation. Much newspaper space was given to the leaders Sir John A. McDonald and the others of that period. Mr. Carveth had the pleasure of listening to the silver-tongued Sir Wilfred Laurier in the old skating rink, Peterborough, before the election in 1896 when he was elected to the premiership. Mr. Carveth has been a subscriber to the Montreal Family Herald for over fifty years.

Recalling old days, he spoke of the slow and toilsome task of cutting hay with a scythe and grain with a cradle and binding sheaves by hand. He says the old reapers were a Godsend even though the binding had still to be done by hand. There were no buggies and roads were poor, so most of the trips to Peterborough (the nearest stores being there) were made on horseback or even on foot.

A great deal of each farm was covered with bush in those days.

The first school was the old log house owned by Henry Borland and vacated when he built a more commodious residence. A few years later a school was built on a corner of the Sullivan farm, now owned by Thomas Forsythe. The teachers who taught in those two schools were Daniel Sheehan, William Burke, John Perdue Wm. Thompson, Jas. Keenan, Dennis Daley (Asphodel), and Misses Mary and Annie Callaghan (Norwood), Miss Wren (Irish), Miss Cummings (afterwards a nun), Miss Brittain, Miss Hurley (Asphodel), Miss Frances Carveth, who later married Mr. Carveth's brother Henry. The latter lady was a resident of Peterboroug for many years, but now resides in Toronto.

Of Mr. Burke, Mr. Carveth says, that he used to take the boys to the river to fish in school hours as a pleasant change from school work and as a result was quite popular with the boys. Mr. Thompson, an Irishman, though of different faith, taught the Catechism to the Catholic children, giving an example of tolerance and broad-mindedness in those days when those qualities were much rarer than now.

Mr. Carveth's father owned the first saw mill in the vicinity. He sawed the lumber for the first church in Douro.

Louis Borland, a brother-in-law of Mr. Carveth, built the present grist mill, which is close to Mr. Carveth's home, in 1861. Mr. Borland's widow sold it years later to James Yourex and Mr. Yourex sold it to the late Matthew Staples, whose son, Ross, is the present owner.

Henry Carveth had seven children, five girls and two boys. Besides Mr. Carveth there are two sisters still living, Mrs. Eleanor Borland, mentioned above, and Mrs. Elizabeth Borland also of Peterborough.

Mr. Carveth remembers the wolves coming up the ice on the river in packs and people had to guard their sheep carefully. At one time his father tied an old, useless sheep, hoping the wovles would approach it so he could shoot them, but they were too cunning.

He also related an incident in connection with the late Colonel Strickland of Lakefield. He was driving a team of oxen from Peterborough to Lakefield when a pack of wolves approached from behind. He had a long chain tied to the harness and kept letting it out to trail behind and the wolves were afraid of it, so he climbed on the back of one of the oxen and urged them homewards at their utmost speed, arriving in safety, thanks to the chain. Mr. Carveth also remembers of seeing wild cats on the fence as he went for the cows.

Mr. Carveth remembers Fathers McDonough, Lynch, O'Connell and Kielty. Like many others of the older residents he helped haul material for the present church. The white stone came from Longford and was shipped by rail to Nassau and hauled from there by the parishioners. Other stone came from Taylor's quarry, Warsaw and from the Walsh farm, now the home of Frederick Walsh.

It is said that many people, when they have enough weath acquired on which to live in comfort and ease, cannot retire for they have nothing to which to retire, meaning that they have no interest in life outside of their work. They have no taste for reading, leisure, art, or any of the better things of life, so their only happiness lies in working on to the end of their days. This idea is brought out splendidly in Eleanor Porter's book "O Money, Money" which so well depicts human nature.

Mr. Carveth is not in this class. He has always been an extensive reader and managed during his many years on the farm to give at least a little time each day and now has leisure to read extensively. He has a garden in which he works every day of the summer season, when weather permits.

Mr. Carveth has a well stocked library of travel, poetry, government year books, fiction, etc.

Canada's Bible verse, from which the word "Dominion" was chosen: "He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth."—Ps. 72: 8.

Lord Burnham: "Canada's achievement in its institutions of learning is one of the most striking features of Canadian life."

Canada's population is estimated at 9,504,709, over one to the square mile, as against 29 in the United States and 379 in the United Kingdom. The increase during the decade of 1901-11 was 34 per cent., and 23 per cent. between 1911-1921.

Testify To Success After Sixty Years

Rev. D. A. Thomson

Ten years ago the Dominion of Canada reached its Jubilee. 1917 marked the 50th year of Confederation. It was not that we forgot the date, or were careless regarding it. The great war was at its height and other things occupied the attention and time of Canadians; and there were other channels of extreme importance controlling the country's purse. But now that peace prevails, and prosperity is in sight; Government and people have invited to celebrate the Diamond Jubilee of Confederation with lavish hand. Let us do so heartily in gratitude to Almighty God for all the way He has directed us as a people throughout the ups and downs of those sixty years. Looking back with gratitude, making our fair Dominion better known and loved than ever before. As we look back we think of the great and good men, the Fathers of Confederation, who struggled to unite the different parts of Canada into one, under one federal government. The 50th anniversary of Confederation found us united in the interests which affected the mother land, and the entire Empire and we were then taking part in the great struggle going on in Europe for human rights and liberty. Blest be the tie that binds us still to the interests affecting our Empire.

It is interesting to recall the efforts of the Fathers of Confederation to give us a united Canada. It was no easy task. It entailed much patience, great tact, superior wisdom and immense work. It was surely with high satisfaction they could regard Confederation as an accomplished fact, and it is with higher satisfaction we can testify to the wisdom of it after sixty years' trial. It has proved to be a great and wise movement, entailing great deplomacy even to the giving of the name, for we are told when every detail seemed fairly settled there was some difficulty in finding a name. Various names were suggested and considered. To name our country a Kingdom, a Dependency, or a Republic they felt did not fit. After many vain attempts to decide on a name, they adjourned to meet the next day. Each man left the building with one thought in mind: What name shall we now give the confederated provinces. The Hon. Samuel L. Tilley, in line with the others, felt the importance of the question. That night, as his custom was before retiring, held family worship, a custom which we are sorry to add, is not as well observed by us as it should. Well may Burns sing of such a worthy custom "From scenes like these old Scotia's grandeur springs: It makes her loved at home, revered abroad." It was at such a scene the name was given to the land we love. It was on this wise Hon. S. Lenard Tilly, afterwards known as Sir Lenard Tilly, on the night referred to "waled a portion wi' judicious care" from the "big ha' Bible"—The portion that night was the 72nd Psalm. And it is related when he came to the 8th verse he paused and read that verse again "He shall have dominion from sea to sea." "That He shall have," he exclaimed, and this surely is the name by which Canada shall be "named." That thought that came like an inspiration to him seemed to give the only name that became a land so great and so united. The next day when the Fathers of Confederation met, pursuant to adjournment, the giving of a name was the only business before them. Sir Lenard moved that the Confederated Provinces of Canada be henceforth known as the "Dominion of Canada." It was so christened, and so it remains "The Dominion of Canada."

Thus 60 years ago on the first day of July, in the year our Lord 1867, our fair Dominion began its career as such, and it is surely most befitting that this year we should celebrate the event.

The progress of our vast Dominion extending from sea to sea, and from the 49th parallel to the 60th has been most remarkable and satisfactory. Bound as it is by bands of steel from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and soon we hope, from the Southern border to the Hudson's Bay in the north. Whether or not we can claim to be a nation may be disputed as yet, but what cannot be questioned is the fact that Canada is rapidly becoming a recognized power among the nations.

As our country becomes better known, not as a land of snow and ice, but as one of the most fertile of lands, capable of producing all kinds of fruit and grain "a land of wheat and barley and vines, a land wherein thou shalt bread without scarceness, a land whose stones are iron and out of whose hills thou mayest dig gold." There is no better country under the sun. As it becomes better known desirable people will flock to our land. And while we give honour to whom honour is due, and credit to whom credit is due, for the progress made in our Dominion during the past, yet we must not forget that the making of Canada has been largely due to the character and labour of our plain folks. In the humble homes of east and west, and those between, are found today the children of heroes. The sons and daughters of those pioneers who ventured into the bush, and on the lonely prairies and built up the homes of Canada. Who sowed the golden grain which has made our land famous. What untold hardships; What self-denial; What anxieties these great wheat fields should mean to us. We honour those early settlers.

"Our fathers' sepulchres are here,
And here our kindred dwell,
Our children too—how should we love
Another land so well."

WOMEN HAVE ACHIEVED STATUS UNDREAMED AT CONFEDERATION

Changes Have Come in Last Ten Years Following War.

GIVEN VOTE 1920

It is an Unusual Board of Education That Has Not a Woman Member.

For the first fifty years of Confederation the legal status of Canadian women remained practically unchanged, but with the World War and the nation-wide public efforts of those years the relationship of the women of the Dominion to public affairs took a radical change. And it is during these nine post-war years that women have assumed the full responsibilities of citizenship.

It was in 1920 that the Parliament of Canada by statute gave the women of the country the right to vote and in the following year Miss Agnes MacPhail was returned to Parliament a the first woman to sit in the House of Commons. Miss MacPhail has retained her seat during two subsequent general elections. The provinces were quick to follow suit and by 1923 all the provinces of Canada, except Quebec, had admitted the right of women to vote in provincial elections. In eastern Canada no women were successful a candidates, but in the west several became members of provincial legislatures and some have risen to cabinet rank in the provincial political arenas. Most of these women who tepped suddenly into public life had distinguished themselves either in patriotic work during the war or in some form of social or community service.

While a comparatively few have, during the years since the war, achieved prominence in federal and provincial politics a very great number are serving actively in municipal governments, urban and rural. It has been a rapid change but to-day it is an unusual Board of Education of a Canadian city that has not at least one woman trustee. Many women are serving as aldermen in cities and many on the county councils of rural districts. This phase of women's participation in public matters has also been stimulated by numerous provincial acts which have given women the right to equal citizenship with men in municipal affairs. Most of the provinces made this change when the provincial franchise was extended.

Among the women who have served their provinces in the legislatures is Mrs. Ralph Smith of Vancouver, whose husband was a member of the Federal House and later Provincial Treasurer. Upon his death Mrs. Smith contested his seat and won. She has survived three elections and was the first woman to sit as a member of a British government.

Mrs. Edith Rogers of Winnipeg, after some years of social and patriotic work, was elected to the Manitoba legislature in 1920 and has been a member of that body ever since. She is the daughter of a Hudson Bay Company official and a native of her province.

In Alberta several women have served in the Legislature. Mrs. Nellie McClung was elected to the Provincial House after active W.C.T.U. and press work. She is a novelist and has been in politics since 1921. Mrs. Mary Iren Parlby represents Lacombe district in the Legislature. Her home is Dartmoor Ranch, Alix, Alberta, and she is a member of a family of British parliamentarians and naval officers. She, too, has been active in public life since 1921. Miss Roberta MacAdams (since married) sat in the Alberta House for some time, and Mrs. Louise McKinney was the first woman in Canada to be elected at the polls. She, too, sat for some time in the Legislature.

Many women in the past few years have been unsuccessful candidates in elections and many more have been active in political organizations. This general movement has been supplemented to some extent by the employment of women in the electoral machinery. Recently women have been employed as returning officers and polling clerks.

SAINT and SINNER

By ANNE AUSTIN

It was exactly five months after Cherry's disastrous wedding to Chris Wiley that the husband with whom she had refused to live, but whose child she was soon to bear, paid his first call at the pretty new home of the Bob Hathaways on Serenity Boulevard in the prosperous new suburb of Enfield.

Without having said a word of her intentions to Faith or Bob, Cherry had instructed Stephen Churchill, her lawyer, to draw up a petition of divorce.

Kate Lundy, Faith's maid of all work, answered the door that Monday afternoon, curtly bade Chris wait on the front porch, then stamped heavily to Cherry's room, where the two sisters were sewing on tiny garments for Cherry's unwanted child.

"It's your husband, Miss Cherry," Mrs. Lundy announced, her face and voice grim. "You say the word and I'll run him off the place."

"Chris" Cherry whispered, her lovely little face going quite white. "Oh, Faith! I—I don't want to see him— I'm—I'm afraid to see him—"

"Then I'll talk to him," Faith said sternly. "Thank you, Mrs. Lundy," she added pointedly. And when the middle-aged housekeeper had trudged out of the room, Faith turned to her cowering, wide-eyed little sister with a sharp question:

"Does Chris know you're going to have a baby"

"No," Cherry whispered, shaking her head violently. "Don't tell him, Faith. Promise! He—he'd try to make me go back to him—"

"You don't love him at all any more?" Faith persisted, her brown eyes narrowed, her voice cold and steady.

Again Cherry shook her head violently, but color swept up over her neck and face. Her voice stammered as she answered: "I—I d-despise him, Faith! I hate him! Don't let him come in here looking for me! If he does, if he gets his hands on me, kisses me—oh, Faith! I'm afraid of myself—"

"Listen to me, Cherry Faith begged, her voice suddenly soft and coaxing. "If there is still a spark of love in your heart for Chris Wiley, go back to him. He is the father of the baby you are going to bring into the world soon, and he has a right to that child, a right to stand by you during your agony—"

"I hate him, I tell you!" Cherry whimpered, flinging Faith's hands from her shoulders. "He hasn't any right to the baby! It will be all mine—just mine! I'd rather leave it on someone's doorstep than to give it Chris Wiley for a father. You don't know—you can't imagine—" she shuddered.

"All right, Cherry," Faith said huskily, kissing the girl's distorted mouth before she rose from her knees. "But you'd better sue for a divorce before the baby is born, so there will be no question of its custody. Otherwise, Chris will make trouble for you—"

"I've already put the case into Stephen Churchill's hands," Cherry confessed. "That's why Chris is here, of course. Churchill has had him served with the papers. I hadn't told you, but Chris has tried to see me, has written a formal request that I return to him. That's what his silly letter said.

"And now he's dared to come here. Oh, I'd like to scratch his black eyes out of his good-looking face! If he just looks at me, narrowing his eyes and smiling with them, one corner of his lip twisted upward and one down, I'd be just like wax in his hands. Don't let him come in here, Faith, Promise!"

"Of course I promise," Faith reassured her. "But I doubt if you can stay out of the living room yourself. If you do come in wear that silkiest negligee—the pale blue one—if you don't want him to suspect the truth."

"I won't come, don't fear!" Cherry cried scornfully, but Faith gave her a sad, understanding little smile as she went to interview Cherry's husband.

Madame Cavalieri in admitting to the United Press that she expects the divorce to be granted shortly added that it would not affect their business relationship. Both she and her husband, she said had agreed that she was to bring the divorce action in the Paris courts.

"It will be only a matter of days now although the Judgment has not yet been granted," she said. "Both of us felt that this action would be to our great interests."

DRESS

By MARY MARSHALL

Black and white frock showing the triangle silhouette. The skirt is made of applied folds of black silk on a white crepe foundation.

There is never literal exactness in the terms we use to indicate the prevailing silhouette. The hour-glass silhouette was not an exact replica of the hour-glass, the shape of which is best known to us from the humble egg timer. The fashionable lady of the 1880's with her kangeroo silhouette did not of course look like a kangeroo There were curves about the umbrella silhouette of a few years ago that have never been seen in a real umbrella and the pencil silhouete that has barely gone out of fashion would not have been smart if it had really conformed to the contour of a pencil. So when we speak of the new triangle silhouette, we must bear in mind that it depat decidedly from the contour of the triangles in geometry. It should also be borne in mind that the triangle suggested is a triangle with a decidedly obtuse angle at the top—a tall, narrow triangle—with sides much longer than the base.

Close-fitting hat or closely-cropped hair contributes to the narrowness at the top. The illusion is somewhat spoiled when one of the new wide-brimmed hats is worn. Narrow shoulders with slightly greater breadth at the hips continues the slight flare downward—and below the hips the slight flare is continued to the end of the usually short skirt. True to the triangle idea the greatest breadth is at the base and the greatest narrowness at the head. When the frock is sleeveless with narrow shoulder line the gradual spreading from head to hem line is more apparent.

But women no longer content themselves with but one silhouette. Parallelograms persist amidst triangles—string beans in the presence of pears.

WOMEN MAKE BREAK-AWAY FROM HOMES

Life is Changed From Days of Confederation Era.

MANY PROFESSIONS

Apron is Discarded for Overalls and Scientific Text Books.

In the days of Confederation woman's sphere was mainly in the home, but now women find a place in practically all trades and professions, besides taking an active part in municipal, provincial and federal affairs, one woman has occupied a seat in the Dominion House for the past six years.

Sixty years ago the teaching profession was largely in the hands of men, for the most part poorly equipped for their work and sadly underpaid. Now, especially in the public schools, teaching is almost exclusively done by women, there being 49,975 women teachers in Canada as against 11,042 men.

In many cases women have discarded their aprons and donned overalls. There is one woman mining engineer in the Dominion, twenty-one electrical engineers and six civil engineers. So far, no women blacksmith or veterinary surgeons are recorded, but there are women painters, boiler makers, engine builders, carpenters, etc. The census shows 587 women barbers and hairdressers, three bootblacks, thirty-four boot-and-shoe repairers, two garagekeepers, and three chauffeurs. Seven earn their living at logging and fifty-one are trappers and engaged in fishing, one is a cemetery-keeper and gravedigger and another an auctioneer.

In certain industries women find employment to a predominating degree. Textiles absorb a vast amount of female labour, over 57,000 women being employed in textile factories, while 41,211 are engaged in manufacturing textile goods and wearing apparel, of which 16,612 are dressmakers, 3,029 milliners, and 2,240 tailoresses.

There are over 35,000 saleswomen in Canada and over 8,000 are employed in Banks. One important occupation, telephone operation, is practically monopolized by women. Out of 13,769 engaged in this work, 12,827 are women.

Women have invaded the professions, 152 being physicians and surgeons, a number have been admitted to the Bar, and are now practising law, and two are judges and justices. There are eleven women clergy and 199 missionaries.

The farm has always demanded the attention of women, until recently in a minor capacity, but Canada now has 15,949 listed as farmers as compared with 646,288 male tillers of the soil. There are besides 225 women gardeners and one lone female earns her livelihood by raising fur-bearing animals.

Domestic service is still the greatest source of employment for women and there are at present about 80,000 employed in private homes.

The nursing profession has attracted a host of women and the total number of nurses now in training in Canada is over 21,000. There are besides 11,192 nuns occupied mainly in nursing and teaching.

In these and many other ways the Canadian woman has proved her ability to take her share in the public and economic life of the Dominion, while still maintaining her original place in the home. She has, as it were, become emancipated, every walk of life is open to her. In all professions and grades she competes with men. The colleges are open to women, a thing unthought of at the time of Confederation and high honours, scholarships, and medals are as frequently won by women as by men. Women are now equipped to be the true helpmates of men in the home, in professions, and even in "big business."

National Council of Women

The National Council of Women of Canada was organized on October 26, 1893—the second in the chain of National Councils, in thirty-seven countries, that together form the great international Council—a veritable Women's League of Nations.

These Councils are federations of Societies and associations of women, organized nationally, joined together to work for the furtherance of the Golden Rule.

At the first annual meeting, which was held in Ottawa, April, 1894, eight Local Council and three nationally organized societies were represented, while at the last annual meeting in Vancouver fifty-six Local Councils and twelve nationally organized societies were on the roll, the membership beting approximately 450,000.

From the beginning the need, especially, of work for the introduction of Manual Training in the schools, for Women Factory Inspectors and Women Police Matrons (there were none in Canada at that time), for Associated Charities, and for a better and more interesting History of Canada for use in the schools appealed strongly to the members, who pledged themselves to work for the same—a promise that has been faithfully kept.

The work of the National Council is chiefly carried on by means of Standing Committees. The first Committee so appointed was that on "Laws for the better protection of Women and Children," and during these years through the work of this Committee the need of many changes in existing laws, and of the addition of most desirable laws has been pressed upon the Dominion and Provincial Parliaments.

Other standing committees that have been added from time to time as need has arisen show the wide extent of the Council's work and interests for Canada and its people. They have to do with good citizenship, the conservation of natural resources, the suppression of objectionable printed matter and films, the promotion of fine and applied arts, education, equal moral standard, good housekeeping, immigration and colonization.

Two urgent reforms in particular that for many years the Council has striven to bring about are for the sequestration of feeble-minded women of child-bearing age, and for the prohibition of the imprisonment of the insane in jails. While in a measure success has attended these efforts, yet much has yet to be done in the way of the needed education of public opinion.

While every Local Council throughout Canada joined all other women of Canada in strenuous work for the soldiers during the late war, the National Council as a whole sent large gifts of furs to the soldiers in Italy who were fighting on the high mountains and who suffered bitterly from the cold.

Mention must be made of the fact that the inauguration of the Victorian Order of Nurses, of the introduction of supervised playgrounds, and of the adoption of mother's pensions all originated with the National Council of Women of Canada.

"What is to be the work of the National Council?" the first President was once asked. "Chiefly mothering," was her reply, and surely her words were prophetic.

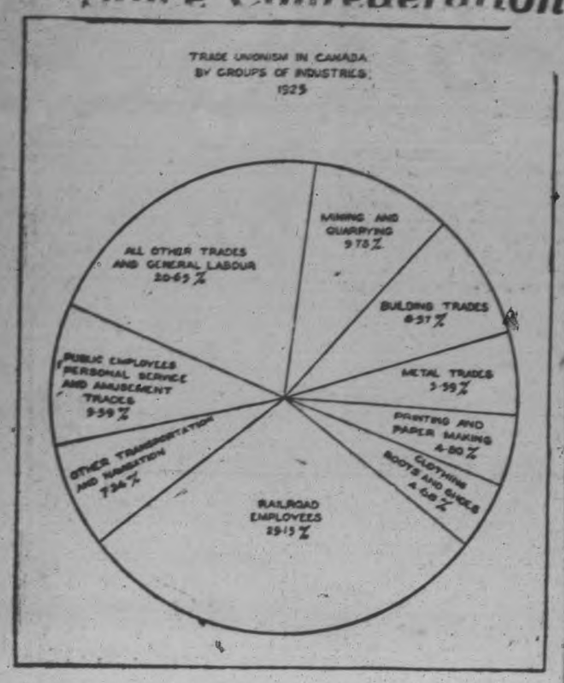
Trade Unionism Since Confederation



Few trade unions were in existence at the time of Confederation but immediately afterwards, or in the early 70's, they began to appear in various industrial centres, with Toronto as the spearhead. In 1872, during a strike for a nine-hour day in the printing industry, a number of printers were arrested under the old conspiracy laws which had been inherited from England. The arrest occasioned a storm of protest and the prime minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, introduced a Trade Union Act which repealed these laws. While the act was not retroactive, the case against the Toronto printers was not proceeded with and the men were liberated. During the same session of Parliament an amendment was made to the Criminal Law, inflicting heavy penalties for activities in connection with picketing.

Whether or not these laws in themselves were of sufficient moment to the workers to cause them to consider common and united action the fact remains that a national convention, called by the Toronto Trades Assembly (now the Toronto District Labor Council), assembled in the Queen City on September 23, 1873, when the Canadian Labor Union was organized. Meetings of this national body were held at Ottawa in 1874 and at St. Catharines in 1875, but for a number of reasons no further meetings were held.

With the holding of the annual convention of the International Typographical Union in Toronto in 1881, a new impetus was given to the labor movement in Canada and agitation was again voiced for the reorganization of the Canadian Labor Union or some similar body. This agitation resulted in the holding of a convention in Toronto in 1883, when the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress was formed. No further meetings were held until 1886, when the body was organized upon a permanent basis under the name of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada. Annual conventions have been held since that date to the present.

The annual reports of these national gatherings reveal the intolerably unhealthy and dangerous conditions which attached to many occupations, and also indicate that where legislation, designed to afford some measure of protection, did exist, no reasonable effort was made to enforce it. They also show that organized labor contributed materially in directing the way towards contentment amongst industrial workers. Resolutions were adopted calling for the passing of legislation to provide for free education and free school books; to abolish sweatshop conditions; to humanize conditions of seamen; to prohibit the competition of prison-made products with free labor goods; to establish the eight-hour day on all work under government control; to make illegal payment of wages in kind instead of money; to protect building trades workers against the danger of unsafe scaffolding; to establish departments or bureaus of labor and provide for efficient factory, workshop and scaffold inspection; to establish free government employment offices; to provide for the collection and compilation by governments of wages and general labor statistics; to extend the franchise on a manhood and womanhood basis; to abolish election deposits and property qualifications for candidates; the exclusion of all Asiatics, etc.

The enactment of the Ontario Workmen's Compensation Act of 1915 is perhaps the most outstanding labor legislation. This law stands to-day as the most advanced legislation in respect to workmen's compensation in the world and has become so popular with workers and many employers that it has been copied in most of the provinces and will soon be in effect in all parts of the Dominion. Another significant law was passed during the 1927 session of Parliament when labor was given an increased legal status through amendments to the Trade Marks and Designs Act to allow for the registration of union labels. A section of this act protects labor unions from possible legal attack because of property rights in a trade mark.

During the past sixty years, in addition to assisting in the creation of a contented nation through beneficial legislation, united labor has also played a very important part in the creation of a national or Canadian spirit. Unions accept into membership all workers irrespective of race, nationality, creed or color and as Canada depends very largely upon immigration for her population the trade unions are a very essential agency for the inculcation of Canadian ideals amongst the newcomers.

SIXTY YEARS OF INSURANCE

Business is Now on Firm Basis After Wonderful Strides.

QUICK GROWTH

The phenomenal growth of the practice of life and health insurance in Canada since Confederation is a striking evidence of intelligence and foresight among our people and has reduced to an extent beyond all calculation, the suffering of families deprived of their bread-winners by death or even illness.

For twenty years before 1867 several insurance companies had been doing business here, but the policies in force in 1869 only amounted to $35,680,000. Last year the total reported was $4,609,902,248 and the increase for one year was more than the whole amount of policies in force in 1900. In addition, policies amounting to $168,703,838 were reported by companies doing business in not more than one province and therefore subject only to provincial laws.

The first Insurance Act of the Dominion Parliament was passed in 1868. It provided, among other regulations for the protection of the public, that every company should obtain a license from the Minister of Finance and make a deposit of $50,000 before doing business. A few years later a federal Superintendent of Insurance was appointed.

The business now is not only on a firm basis, but has been extended and diversified in many ways to meet the varying needs of the people —by insurance against loss from disease and accident, for instance, and by policies payable at a fixed age. Industrial insurance has developed, with weekly or monthly premiums for small policies; group insurance, too, generally taken out by an employer for his workers.

Of the insurance reported under federal law in 1924, the total being then $3,763,997,565 two-thirds represented the business of purely Canadian companies.

The "British" companies doing business here reported a total of $103,519,130, and the "foreign" companies $1,346,622,786.

The assets of the Canadian companies in 1924 were valued at $733,633,143; the assets in Canada of the British companies at $47,072,743, and of foreign companies at $204,939,546.

Fire insurance business was started in Canada by a British company, the Phoenix of London, in 1804; and the first company organized in this country, the Halifax, was founded in 1809. The fire insurance in force the year before Confederation amounted to $188,359,809. In 1926 the fire insurance reported by companies under Dominion license was $8,045,437,096. The total a year before had been $7,597,224,627. Provincial companies at the same time reported $1,215,000,000 and, reckoning $566,000,000 insured with other underwriters, the grand total exceeded $9,378,000,000.

Insurance against many other risks besides those of death, disease and fire has become a fairly general practice, though unknown sixty years ago, —against burglery, for example, against embezzlement, boiler explosions, and plate glass breakage. Companies doing hail insurance have paid losses of $22,308,852 in fifteen years, the premiums paid amounting to $35000,774. Their premium income in 1925 was $5,397,594. Municipal hail insurance under provincial law is carried on in the west.

Automobile insurance, unknown in the early days of our Dominion when the only automobile was "shank's mare", has in the past twenty years or less become an important business, premiums have grown from $80,446 in 1910 to $6,950,856 in 1925.

The text in the book reproduced above is from "Hakluyt's Voyages" in the Everyman's Library. Published by J. M. Dent & Sons, Toronto and London.

WITH all their faith and all their foresight, the Fathers of Confederation cannot have even imagined, sixty years ago, the world influence that their new-made country was destined to exert in the twentieth century. Their chief concern was to keep the Provinces together, to preserve their integrity, to bind them, with tracks of steel and cords of understanding, into a great nation. But the effect of their accomplishment, of the unification and opening up of this vast territory, has been felt to the ends of the earth. The Canadian Pacific, at first a means of bridging the Continent, has spanned the world—and spanned it for Canada!

Its ships, laden with the silks, the spices, the fabrics of the Orient, transfer their cargoes to its trains, which race across the continent to reload their precious freight into fresh vessels bound for Great Britain or Europe under the same Company flag. In every port and commercial city of the world are to be found Canadian Pacific representatives seeking and obtaining business for Canada, to be handled by Canadian ships and trains.

The regular sailings of the ships are supplemented by those of cruising vessels carrying passengers on pleasure or education bent, and flying the House Flag in every quarter of the globe. This traffic enhances the trade of Canada, gives employment to more than 80,000 workers, consumes a huge volume of supplies, mainly of Canadian origin.

But more important even than this is the world outlook that it gives to the Canadian people, the influence that it gives to Canada in world affairs.

Where the Canadian Pacific goes, there goes Canada, her men, her standards, her ideals.

EMPIRE'S LARGEST CEREAL MILL IS SITUATED IN PETERBOROUGH

Quaker Oats Company Produces 33 Different Products.

BIG OUTPUT.

Helps to Develop Canada's Greatest Industry, Agriculture.

The Quaker Oats Company, now the largest miller of cereal products in the British Empire, has been fortunate in the location of its two Canadian plants. Milling is done at both Saskatoon, Sask., and Peterborough, Ont. One plant is in the centre of the best grain growing section of Western Canada; the other in one of Canada's busiest industrial centres.

Since The Quaker Oats Company is an ever-expanding concern, locations are important, particularly in a country of so vast an area as Canada. Plants must be near the source of supplies of raw materials; the best transportation facilities must be available; and in addition there is an advantage in being close to the largest group of consumers. It would be manifestly impossible to combine these almost necessary conditions in any one plant in Canada; but The Quaker Oats Company has overcome the difficulty with two locations. In addition the Company owns a number of elevators in some of the finest grain growing sections.

Every Summer and Fall practically the whole of Western Canada, and many parts of the East, too, are covered by Quaker Oats buyers in their search for the finest grains the land produces. These buyers are not after oats alone for the list of Quaker products is now so extensive that almost every kind of grain is used. A great deal of hard Canadian wheat is purchased, because Quaker flours are in demand, not alone in Canada, but in many countries—and there is no flour which can be compared with that from wheat of the Canadian West. In short, money from The Quaker Oats Company goes into the pockets of Canadian farmers, both East and West, spread over an area almost as big as the country itself.

While the raw material for the Quaker mills comes from widely scattered points because of the excellence demanded, the finished products are now shipped to 58 countries of the world. The trade-mark of the "Quaker" is the best-known food trade-mark, and the friendly face of the man with the wide-brimmed hat is familiar in most places where men work and live.

The Quaker Oats Company takes particular pride in its plants. Years of business have built up facilities for the creation and purchase of milling machinery that are unrivalled anywhere in the world. Combined with this best machinery yet devised, is a personnel possessing the most exacting technical training and practical experience. Purity and cleanliness are constantly kept in mind in these big mills. Unremitting care is exercised in buying grain, milling, packing and shipping, so that Quaker products reach consumers in a pure and wholesome condition. Nothing is left to chance that can be scientifically regulated and guaranteed.

Today the Quaker mills are producing 33 different products, each with its own brand name. These embrace package cereal foods, 12; flour, 6; cereals foods sold in bulk, 7, and live stock and poultry feeds, 8.

Nearly every one of these products is extensively advertised. The people of the countries where Quaker foods go are never allowed to forget the name and trademark. Behind this advertising is a selling organization that is constantly active.

The Quaker Oats Company now has in its own right in Canada an elevator capacity for 2,500,000 bushels of grain. The possible daily output of the Canadian mills is 5,000 barrels flour, 3,000 barrels oats products, 350 barrels cornmeal, 1,000 cases puffed goods, 1,000 cases corn flakes, 200 kegs barley, and 500 tons poultry and live stock feed. At the present time important extensions are being made to the mill at Saskatoon.

The Quaker Oats Company is helping to develop Canada's great basic industry—agriculture—by taking the products of that industry and turning them into foods for consumption. The Quaker Oats Company is making the fame of Canadian agriculture known in foreign lands. It is helping to maintain Canada as "The Bread Basket of the World."

DE LAVAL CO. SERVES WORLD

Manufactures of Local Plant Are Shipped to Wide Market.

HERE 15 YEARS

The De Laval Company came to Peterborough in the spring of 1913, almost fifteen years ago, and have spent practically one-quarter of the period of Confederation here. Their plant, occupying about fifteen acres, is delightfully situated on the corner of Park and Lansdowne streets.

The buildings are of brick construction throughout, modelled after the latest type of factory building and are exceptionally well lighted, heated and ventilated. The buildings have been called the best of this kind in Eastern Canada.

The factories are equipped with the latest models of machines and labor-saving devices; they comprise the largest and best equipped plant for the exclusive manufacture of dairy machinery in the British Empire. The employees number about four hundred and usually remain in the service of the company for a long time, many of them have been with the company since the first year it entered Peterborough.

The most up-to-the-minute equipment is manufactured for creameries and cheese factories, milk and ice-cream plants, and a complete outfit for any of these industries can be furnished at a moment's notice. Here, also, are manufactured the world-famous De Laval Cream Separators and De Laval Milkers.

Not only is the whole of Canada served from coast to coast, but made-in-Peterborough products are shipped to all parts of the world.

Electrical Equipment Manufacture Is Peterborough's Chief Industry

Biggest Plant of C. G. E. System Located Here—Organization Is Widespread and Powerful.

With seven manufacturing plants in Toronto, Montreal and Peterborough and warehouses and offices located in eighteen of the principal cities of this country, Canadian General Electric Company, Limited, has developed in the past thirty-nine years into one of Canada's outstanding industrial enterprises.

Launched by a group of prominent business men in 1888 with the modest capital of $10,000,000 Canadian General Electric Company has become a nation-wide organization with assets of more than $30,000,000.00, and through the manufacture and installation of electrical equipment has played an important part in the development of Canada's natural resources.

By the manufacture of such products as motors, generators, transformers and such gigantic apparatus as that required in the power plants at Chippawa, Canadian General Electric Company has assisted in a big way, Canada's amazing water-power development.

It requires a voluminous catalogue to list the electrical products manufactured in the plants of the Canadian General Electric Company, Limited. From heavy duty apparatus utilized in power plants, paper mills, mines and various other important industries, down to the small motors which operate fans and vacuum cleaners; Edison Mazda lamps for factories, houses and street lighting; Hotpoint heating devices for the home; the world-famous Radiola—C. G. E. truly cover the entire scale of electrical equipment manufacturing.

The main electrical and porcelain works are located in Peterborough, and cover approximately forty-five acres. Here are manufactured generators, motors, switch-boards, meters, wire and cable, and porcelain products used for insulation of electrical equipment.

Two factories are located in Montreal and Toronto, respectively, operated by Canadian Allis-Chalmers (a subsidiary) where such products as turbines, pumps and other allied equipment are made.

In Toronto, there are four Canadian General Electric factories, such as the Edison Mazda Lamp Works, Ward Street Works, where lamp bases, wiring devices, radio sets and Hotpoint heating equipment are manufactured; and Davenport Works, devoted to the construction of heavy duty apparatus. The principal foundry of the Company is located at this plant.

The history of the Canadian General Electric Company, Limited, dates from December 27, 1888, when the late Senator Frederic Nicholls called together a number of prominent citizens, having at heart the welfare of Toronto and the Dominion.

The object of the meeting was the formation of a syndicate which should provide funds necessary for an inquiry into the possibilities of the establishing a plant to supply electric light and power by means of underground wires to the citizens of Toronto.

This syndicate was formed by the late Senator Nicholls, Messrs. W. R. Brock, W. D. Matthews, J. K. Kerr, Geo. A. Cox, Robert Jaffrey, Hugh Ryan and H. P. Dwight.

Little did these men dream what the future held in store for this modest company, although six of the eight original directors remained with the project to see it develop into a nation-wide organization, with present assets of over $30,000,000.

The first company to be organized by this syndicate was the Toronto Incandescent Electric Light Company on June 26, arrangements having been made with the Edison Electric Light Company of New York for the exclusive use of their system and with the City of Toronto for the franchise to generate electric light and power. This company was most successful in their operations and was afterwards amalgamated with the Toronto Electric Light Company.

The next company was the Toronto Construction and Electrical Supply Company, which was incorporated on February 11, 1891. It was to this Company that the present Canadian General Electric Company owes its foundation.

Its business was the sale of electrical apparatus and supplies and on October 14, 1891, it formed an alliance with the Thompson-Houston Electric Company of Boston to act as their sole agents in Canada. So successful was this company in gaining the confidence of the Canadian public that arrangements were made in 1891 for the purchase of all Canadian property and interests of the Edison Electric Light Company. It was at this time that the Company was organized as the Canadian General Electric Company, Limited.

When this company was formed its assets consisted solely of the land and buildings at Peterborough. Branch offices were leased in Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

Since that time there has been a steady growth and progress, so that to-day the Canadian General Electric organization comprises seven manufacturing plants.

Controlling as it does the manufacturing and patent rights for Canada of the General Electric Company of Schenectady, N. Y., with its world-wide ramifications, the Canadian General Electric Company occupies a unique position in the electrical industry of this country.

Branch offices are maintained in Halifax, Sydney, Saint John, Montreal, Quebec, Cobalt, Ottawa, Hamilton, London, Windsor, South Porcupine, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver, Nelson and Victoria.

In the most important centres, the buildings occupied are owned by the Company, and have been constructed to meet their requirements. The head office building at 212 King Street West, Toronto, was built for the Company's own special requirements in 1908. To this has been added another large building devoted to the wholesale merchandizing division of the Canadian General Electric Company's operations.

Since the inception of radio, Canadian General Electric Company has kept pace with its amazing growth. Part of the Ward Street Works is used for the manufacture of the Radiola, which has always occupied a position of leadership in the radio world. No radio set has been so popular with the Canadian public. Indeed, the many models of the Radiola, from the smallest size to the last word in reception—the superheterodyne—are to be found in thousands of homes in all parts of Canada.

The business of the Edison Mazda Lamp Works in Toronto has shown great expansion in recent years. Today most of the lamps sold in Canada for street, factory, office, home and motor car bear the Edison Mazda trade-mark.

The C. G. E. trade-mark will be found on many tools by which electricity works. They are on great generators used by electric light and power companies; and on the lamps that light millions of homes.

They are on big motors that pull railway trains; and on tiny motors that make hard housework easy.

By such tools electricity dispels the dark and lifts heavy burdens from human shoulders. Hence the letters C. G. E. are more than a trade-mark. They are an emblem of service—the initials of a friend.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD FIRST PRIME MINISTER

With the growth of Canadian confederation, the memory of its first Premier seems to be more clearly outlined against its historical background. His wit, his broad-mindedness and his remarkable statesmanship will be famous for all time. He was a bold champion of Canadian Union, an upholder of closer relations with the Mother Country, and, nothwithstanding insistent demands for wider political liberties, was a firm upholder of established institutions. And his integrity was such that, at the end of a lenghty career, he was a poor man.

An able negotiator, a subtle and far-sighted chief, Macdonald was the man for such an unstable period. But he did more than score victories in Parliament; he was the virtual ruler and leader of the people. He recognized the enormous wealth of the vast Northwest Territories, and his purchase of this stupendous area from the Hudson's Bay Company at the comparatively small cost of £300,000 was a splendid piece of statesmanship.

He sponsored the building of the Canadian Pacific railway, which opened the prairies to eager and earnest settlers, and was largely responsible for the admission of British Columbia into Confederation. To him also may be attributed the tariff policy which successive Governments have adopted with or without modification.

Born in Glasgow, in 1815, John A. Macdonald came to Canada, with his family, in 1820, and settled in Kingston, where he attended the Grammar School until he was 15 years of age. He then entered a lawyer's office, and was admitted to the Bar when twenty-one. He practised for eight years, at the end of which he was elected to the Canadian Legislature as a representative of the Kingston constituency. He was a member for this county up to 1891. In the year 1847-48 he acted as Receiver-General in the Draper administration, and, in 1857, became Prime Minister in the Cartier-Macdonald Government. In 1864, when the Tache-Macdonald cabinet met with defeat, he very energetically advocated the "Great Coalition" movement, which paved the way to Confederation. George Brown having resigned, in 1865, Macdonald was the accepted leader in the preliminary movements which led to the passing of the British North America Act in 1867. This Act gave birth to the New Dominion whose Premier still was Macdonald. He remained in power until he died, save during the five years of the Alexander MacKenzie administration.

History will be indulgent to Sir John A's weaknesses, by acknowledging the eminent part which he played in the making of a new Canada. He endeavored to build for the future, and to unite the different elements which composed the young Canadian nation whose life was only budding.

Nova Scotia Government suggested union of Maritime provinces in 1857.

Lord Durham in his report outlined a confederation in 1839.

Sir A. T. Galt advocated confederation of all the provinces in 1856.

Nova Scotia Assembly requested the Colonial Secretary to open up communication with other Provincial governments to bring about union in 1861.

Maritime Provinces held conference at Charlottetown in 1864 to discuss Maritime union, attended by delegates from Quebec.

July 1, 1867—Proclamation issued naming this date as the birthday of the Dominion of Canada.

FOKKER PLANE AVERAGES 100 MILES AN HOUR

Reported More Than Third of Distance Has Been Covered.

EXPECT RETURN FLIGHT.

Smith's Backers Decide To Withdraw Because of Maitland's Lead.

MUNICIPAL AIRPORT, OAKLAND, Calif., June 29 (A.P.).—Racing westward over the Pacific Ocean with the setting sun, the six-ton United States army Hawaii flight plane with two airmen aboard was roaring on to Honolulu late yesterday.

A radio report received by the Federal Telegraph Company in San Francisco at 2.44 a.m. said the steamer Sonoma had sighted the plane approximately 750 miles off the California coast.

The message from the Sonoma, read:

"Army plane passed 2.44, San Francisco time, about 200 feet high. Came low and near us. We blew siren to him. Everyone left dining saloon. Passengers screamed and shouted at plane."

The big tri-motored Fokker had averaged approximately 100 miles an hour up until the time it soared over the Sonoma and disappeared into the west. More than a third of the 2,407 miles to Honolulu had been covered since 7.09 a.m. yesterday.

Race Broken Off

The expected air race to the Hawaiian Island failed to materialize when Ernest Smith, piloting a civilian plane, was forced to return to the airport after having taken off more than two hours later than the Fokker machine. The air deflector on Smith's plane was damaged and before a new one could be fixed the navigator, Charles Carter, decided it was too late to start, as the army plane had a lead of almost five hours.

The clocklike precision with which the army plane was prepared and departed on its attempted non-stop flight to Honolulu surprised the thousands of spectators who witnessed the take-off. Army officials asked for a clear field at 7 a.m. They arrived at the field with Lieuts. Lester J. Maitland and Albert Hegenberger, pilot and navigator, ten minutes before that hour. The ship had been fuelled and oiled during the night. Everything was pronounced ready at the starting hour. Covers were unwrapped from the three radial motors and they were started.

After brief exchanges of greetings between the aviators and Major-General Mason Patrick, chief of the Army Air Service, the two fliers leaped into the machine, waved goodbye to friends and relatives and the plane taxied along the runway. It took the air with ease and quickly attained an altitude of 2,000 feet and flew out over the sea.

Before leaving here Lieut. Maitland declared he expected to arrive at Honolulu in about 24 hours. Word received from Honolulu yesterday was that army officials on the field were planning for the arrival of the plane there at 7 a.m. today.

Smith Wept

Smith wept like a child after it was announced his flight was postponed. He had argued hard with Carter, trying to make the latter consent to a hop-off two hours after the plane was returned to the field. But Carter stood firm on the contention that it was too late to start; that he would not be able to make proper navigation observations and that the army plane had too great a start on them.

"I wanted to go," Smith sobbed as he left the field. "When the window, which is also known as an air deflector, broke. Carter pointed to it and indicated he couldn't make observations because of the wind the opening let in. I shouted, 'Let's go; let's stay with it, please,' but he refused."

With receipt here of reports from Honolulu that Richard Grace, Hollywood, Calif., aviator, might hop off on a non-stop flight for California within a few hours, interest in the Pacific fliers was intensified.

FINE WEATHER AIDS FIELD DAY

Ayrshire Breeders' Association Meets at Pinecrest Farm Near Bridgenorth.

SPLENDID HERD.

The annual field day of the Central Ontario Division of the Canadian Ayrshire Breeders' Association was held in splendid weather yesterday at Pinecrest Farm, the home of J. Gordon Mann, in Smith Township, a short distance beyond the village of Bridgenorth. About 150 attended, some representatives travelling from places as far apart as Campbellford and Dundas.

Officers of the association who were present were: A. Hume, Campbellford, president; R. H. Little, president of the Central Ontario Branch of the Association; John Lock, secretary; Kenneth A. Hay, field man of the Canadian Assoication of Ayrshire Breeders, who spoke on different phases of progress in the development of the Ayrshire breed and gave a demonstration on some of Mr. Mann's fine herd of the true types of the Ayrshires; J. Seymour, Cavan, and M. H. Winter of the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Hume presided over the preliminary stages of the meeting, introduced the speakers, and later took part in an interesting phase of the day's proceedings—the coaching of the younger men present in the art of judging live stock from a scientific standpoint. Mr. Hume gave the following twelve reasons for regarding the Ayrshire cow as superior to all others:

1—The Ayrshire is the most economical producer of milk and butter of any of the so-called dairy breeds, producing the largest quantity for the food consumed and yielding the largest net profit. This has been proved in competitive public tests.

2—The Ayrshire produces the most desirable milk for the milkman of any of the dairy breeds, because of the uniform high quality in total solids, placing it above the standards required by the municipal laws.

3—The Ayrshire milk is the most satisfactory to peddle because it will bear transportation without churning to butter, and will hold its uniform quality to the last quart in the can.

4—Ayrshire milk is the favourite with the housekeeper because it has a good colour and never looks blue, even to the last that is poured from the pitcher, the cream remaining in the milk to give it a uniform quality until the last is used.

5—Ayrshire milk is of the highest value for infant food because it is the most evenly balanced in the bone and muscle producing qualities of any of the dairy breeds, thus making it a perfect food for growing children. Children fed on Ayrshire milk are not inclined to stomach trouble, and make a strong and steady growth.

6—The Ayrshire has a strong healthy body, with a super-abundance of vitality and vigour, is rarely sick, and almost never has any disease of udder or teats, which is probably one reason why there is so much life-giving quality to her milk.

7—The Ayrshire has never laid claim to being at the head of dairy breeds for butter production, but the official records made in Record of Performance tests during the past few years would indicate that she is the most profitable butter cow, and second to none.

8—The Ayrshire is the dairy rustler of all the dairy breeds, thriving and paying a profit where other breeds can hardly exist, because she is a vigorous feeder, and not at all dainty in her appetite, eating with relish everything that comes in her way in the line of forage, good grass, poor grass, and browse; all is food for the Ayrshire cow.

9—The Ayrshire cow is a most uniform milker, holding out well up to calving, and must be watched or she will not dry off ,which makes her a desirable cow for steady profit, or for a family cow.

10—The Ayrshire cow is the most attractive looking cow and the most perfect cow in form of body and udder of any of the dairy breeds. She breeds the truest to type, and has the smallest percentage of poor cows of any of the dairy breeds.

11—The Ayrshire in the dairy will solve the problem of "How to make the dairy pay."

12—The Ayrshire has proved by official tests that she is a big producer.

G. A. Gillespie.

G. A. Gillespie, president of Peterborough Milk Products Ltd., Peterborough, spoke briefly on the progress of the dairying industry of recent years. He believed the men engaged in raising pure-bred stock were doing a good work, but he felt that a bigger job lay still ahead of them, namely, to get a larger production per cow. He paid tributes to those who were all the time trying to raise the standard in quantity and quality of production.

Mr. Seymour also made a few remarks in commendation of the work of the Association.

Mr. Winter in a few well chosen words, urged the necessity of testing the milk production of pure-bred cows.

Frank Napier, secretary of the Canadian Ayrshire Breeders' Association, and a well known writer and expert on agricultural subjects, brought the greetings of the Dominion Association.

Object Lessons.

In the judging demonstration, the younger competitors were given slips of paper on which they wrote down their placings of the various cattle. Afterwards they were called to the front and asked to point out the features in the animals which had led them to their decision. The remarks of the younger generation showed a comprehensive knowledge of the finer points of cattle judging. A healthy difference of opinion was manifested by all the judges, young men as well as old. Particularly interesting were the remarks of William Stewart, of Campbellford, the pioneer Ayrshire breeder in this section of Ontario, a veteran who first showed half a century ago. In 1893 he secured second prize at the World's Fair at Chicago for an Ayrshire exhibit. Mr. Stewart's remarks, as coming from a practical breeder, were followed with great interest by all his hearers.

Mr. Mann's heard of pure bred, fully accredited Ayrshires was the subject of much admiring comment. As a result of high awards attained in shows, especially the National Dairy Show at Milwaukee, held in 1924 against animals from all over the Continent, Robin Hood of Springbank is placed in Class A.A., the higest score an animal can be awarded. At the Milwaukee Show the animal headed the Ontario Provincial herd, leading both the State and Provincial herds.

Two cups won at Peterborough Industrial Exhibition last year are also on view to bespeak the high quality of the herd. One was awarded for the best dairy cow on view of any herd. The other was for the best pure bred cow. Another prize was gained at Lindsay Exhibition, Eaton's Special Prize, for the four best dairy cows of any breed.

TEACHER RECEIVES GIFT FROM SCHOOL

Miss Elsie Rae Is Leaving Park Street Sunday School Staff.

At the close of the session of the Park Street Baptist Sunday School on Sunday morning a very pleasing event took place when the superintendent called upon Miss Elsie Ray to come forward, while the secretary-treasurer, Mr. O. S. Matchett, read the following address:

To Miss Elsie Ray:

We all join in wishing you a wealth of joy and happiness.

These words may sound common place but we assure you that the feeling of love and goodwill which inspires them are more than mere than mere formal sentiment.

Much as we all esteem your friendship, we love you most because of your unfaltering testimony for our Lord and Saviour. This is your church home and we will not soon forget your self sacrificing devotion to all her interests. We will miss your voice in song and your presence in our Sunday school but we will pray our Heavenly Father, that He may bless you where you go. We know what now is our loss will be another's gain.

I got me flowers to strew thy way,
I got me boughs off many a tree;
But thou wast up by break of day
And brought'st thy sweets along with thee.

We beg of you to accept this small token as a proof of our best wishes and kindly feelings, and as an expression of our deep regret in your leaving us.

Signed on behalf of the teachers and officers Park Street Baptist Church Sunday School, Peterboro—Rev. James L. Harton, pastor; E. W. Young, superintendent; O. S. Matchett, secretary-treasurer.

At the proper moment Mrs. Harris presented Miss Rae with a beautiful afternoon tea set lined with gold on a beautiful tray. Mr. E. W. Young, superintendent, and Rev. Mr. Harton, spoke. Miss Rae, although taken by surprise, replied very feelingly.

Miss Rae, who has been one of the primary teachers for a long time, is leaving the city shortly to embark on the sea of matrimony.

Canada won world's wheat championship for the 11th time last year.

Sixty Years of Canadian National Progress

IN 1860, the Grand Trunk Railway, now a part of the Canadian National Railways, comprised 872 miles of track. Today, Canadian National embraces 22,548 miles of line, the largest railway system in America, touching every important Canadian City; fleets of steamships that carry Canada's ensign and products to every quarter of the globe; Dominion-wide express and telegraph services; a chain of distinguished city hotels; resort hotels and bungalow camps, and an Industrial Department to foster the location and development of new industry.

The development of Canada and the Canadian National Railways is interwoven closely. As one grew, so did the other, mutually dependent.

Before even the memorable year of Confederation, portions of the present-day Canadian National had attracted world-wide attention to themselves and to the then-struggling young country. The construction of the original Victoria Bridge for the Grand Trunk Railway and its opening by the Prince of Wales in 1860, focussed the eyes of Nations on Canada as perhaps no preceding event had ever done.

Canada, being a land of vast distances, the railway was seen to be the key to her future expansion and prosperity. Indeed, the Grand Trunk Railway had long been the dominating factor in Canada's growth to date. It had opened up the then known parts of Ontario and Quebec to settlement and had tapped the country's resources from the International Boundary at Sarnia to Riviere du Loup.

In Confederation year, the dependence of national growth upon rail communication became even more strikingly evident, the construction of the Intercolonial Railway being insisted upon by the Maritime Provinces as a condition of entry into the Dominion.

Thus, within a single decade, Canadian National was linked with two of the greatest events in Canada's history, and helped make Confederation an accomplished fact.

Since then, Canada and the Canadian National have developed hand in hand. Mile upon mile of new track was laid in Quebec and Ontario; new towns and industries sprang into being, new lands were opened to cultivation. The sister country to our South was brought into intimate communication with us, commerce was stimulated, capital attracted, immigration fostered.

Then the West called and the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways opened up vast areas of fertile prairie to the settler; rich Pacific timber and mineral lands were made to yield their wealth; scenic wonderlands were made accessible and a new route afforded to Canada's Pacific Coast. The Transcontinental Railway, from Winnipeg to Quebec, connected this great west with the eastern provinces.

Wherever it was needed, the railway appeared, a typical modern instance being that of the Rouyn Mining District the development of which is made possibe by Canadian National service.

CANADA'S FINEST RESORTS

Whatever your vacation preference, you will find it served by Canadian National, whose lines reach Canada's finest mountain, seaside and lakeland resorts. Among them are — Jasper National Park, 5,300 square miles of rugged Canadian Rocky Mountain splendour; the flower-decked Pacific Coast; Minaki the beautiful, on the Winnipeg River; the Highlands of Ontario; the Laurentian Mountains and the Lower St. Lawrence in quaint old French-Quebec; and the seaside and woodland havens of the Maritime Provinces.

HOTELS OF DISTINCTION

INDUSTRIAL OPPORTUNITIES

The Canadian National Industrial Department has taken a leading part in placing the facts as to industrial opportunities in Canada before prospective entrants and in inducing and helping them to locate and prosper here. Canada, with its cheap and plentiful power, desirable sites and stable labour conditions, affords unique opportunities for industrial location and growth. The expanding domestic market is supplemented by tariff preferences which throw the whole of the British Empire open to Canadian-made merchandise.

CANADIAN NATIONAL STEAMSHIPS

Palatial passenger steamers ply the Pacific Coast from Vancouver and Prince Rupert to Alaska and Queen Charlotte Islands. The Canada-British West Indies passenger and freight service implements the Canada-British West Indies trade treaty, and has been largely augmented as a result of this arrangement. Trade and traffic between Canada and the Islands is growing rapidly—another instance of the close relationship between the Dominion and her railways. World-wide freight service is operated by the Canadian Government Merchant Marine in conjunction with Canadian National Railways.

EXAMINER TEAM LEAD ALL WAY AGAINST C. G. E.

Bill Bennett's Club Beaten in First Game of Post-Season Series.

A NEW BATTERY

Veteran Bill Simmons Victorious in Debut With the Examiner.

The Examiner got the jump on Bill Bennett's C.G.E. team in the first inning of the opening fixture of the post season softball series at Confederation Square last night and by scoring five runs in the opening frame were ahead all the way, and won comfortably by 12 to 6. The big first inning for The Examiner was followed in the second session by a long home run by Harry Cheu with two on the sacks, and this mighty wallop about settled the argument.

Manager Scales of The Examiner crew trotted out a new battery in Bill Simmons and "Scotty" McGrath, and they performed in stellar fashion. The veteran Simmons pitched smart ball over the whole distance and, with much steadier support, would have held the losers to a smaller score. He allowed the C.G.E. but eight hits while Powell, on the rubber for the Electricians, was touched for an even dozen including a homer by Cheu and a long triple by Roy Taylor.

Although both teams made costly errors there was plenty of spectacular fielding. Wilson, the C.G.E. third baseman, had the feature play with a one-handed leaping catch of a hot drive from Dugan's bat, while Corbett made a fine running grab of a fly from Baker. Heard, the C.G.E. shorstop, fielded smartly. On The Examiner side Cheu was in the limelight with a running catch that he converted into a double play, and Bradshaw's work at third was clean cut.

The line up:

LEAGUE MEETING AT ZION CHURCH

Young People of Petherick's Play Exciting Softball Game.

PETHERICK'S CORNERS, June 29.—The regular League service on Thursday evening was in charge of Gladys Simpson, social convener. A short but interesting program was short but interesting program was discussed. Among these was a resolution of thanks to the cast of the play "Dust of the Earth" for the donation of over $30.00 to the League funds. It was decided to withdraw the meeting for June 30, as the Sunday School social at Mr. Fred Barnum's takes place the next evening. It is probable that the combined picnic to Crow River of the three Leagues on the Seymour circuit will take place during the first week in July.

Before the League meeting a close and exciting game of soft ball was played between the Khaki and Blue teams, the former winning 9 to 8 with one out in the seventh. The Blues were only able to muster five men so added three from the Red-White team and presented a strong combination. The two juvenile catchers, Don Watson and Art Petherick were the stars of the game. The former also provided the winning punch at bat driving in McKenzie with the winning run by a nice single to left field. Fred Barnum was the batting star of the Blues and accounted for half of their runs. Runnel's playing his first game of the year was the heavy batter for the Khaki team.

Associated with them in the ceremony this year will be the ladies of the L.O.B.A. 129. Rev. C. D. Daniel, himself a loyal follower of all that true Orangeism stands for will deliver the address of the day. As is usual, the Orangemen extend a hearty invitation to the public to join with them in this service.

Mr. H. M. Donald and his gang of carpenters last week finished the remodelling of Mr. Charles Watson's barn.

Several local farmers have been spending a few days hauling gravel to fix some of the worst places on the roads. The town line has been greatly improved. Local motorists also appreciate the work done by the town gang in improving the surface of the river road.

STARR STERLING'S PROBLEM

A Serial for Boys - By BERT REED

Directly in front there was apparently a sharp angle in the passage, for at that point a subdued light was reflected on the damp walls. Silently they crept forward and listened. Not a sound—not even the roar of the storm penetrated the rock vault. Now in the dim light they could see each other and Starr beckoned to Harry. With noiseless steps they walked toward the light.

The turn in the passage led into a rocky chamber some twenty feet square. A lantern resting upon an upturned box flung a dim light across the rim. Signs of recent habitation were in evidence. A couple of boxes, pine boughs that apparently served as beds, a cut loaf with a quantity of canned goods lay in another box that served as a cupboard. A couple of boxes were drawn up to an improvised table.

"Mystery number two," ejaculated Sterling. "First a cave in the side of a sheer cliff, now cave dwellers." Picking up the lantern Starr turned the light on full. "Well," laughed Sterling, "we've stumbled into some person's bedroom, living room and kitchen, but whose is mystery number three?

"And here," yelled Northway, who had started on a tour of exploration, "is mystery number four."

Sterling ran across to where Harry was bending over a box he had pulled out of a niche in the wall. He had already opened it.

"What do you think of this?" he cried.

Starr peered over his shoulder. What he saw filled him with amazement. Packed inside the box lay bundle after bundle of bank notes.

Northway straightened up. He was trembling with excitement.

"Starr," he gasped, "what's the answer?"

Sterling slowly shook his head. "You've got me, Northway," he confessed. "Looks as if some one had tucked something by for old age. We must have run into some hermit's nest. It's a mystery all right. Don't disturb anything, put the cover back and let's explore this cave of Ali Baba a little further."

"Let's rap on the wall and say, "Open Sesame," grinned Northway, as he put the lid on the box.

Around the chamber the boys went examining every crevice for further treasure. Sterling was about to suggest that they examine the passage when a voice broke the silence of the cave:

"Throw up your hands, kids, and do it quick!"

Both boys turned. They were covered with a gun in the hands of a roughly dressed man who walked into the cave, while closely behind him came a companion.

Starr's eyes involuntarily flashed to the entrance through which he and Northway had come. The man read his purpose instantly.

"Go ahead, kid," he laughed coarsely. "There's a fine old drop waiting for you out there."

Both Sterling and Northway realized the futility of such an attempt and mechanically raised their arms.

"Throw up your Hands, Kid, and do it quick."

Quickly the men went through them. If they had expected to find hidden weapons they were disappointed. Sterling's flash was the only thing they discovered.

If, on the other hand, the boys expected their freedom, they were quickly disillusioned. Under cover of the gun they were backed up against the wall.

Smarting under the treatment, Sterling at one moment was on the point of resisting. The man seemed to read his thoughts and raised the gun slightly.

"How did you kids get in here" Sterling hesitated. If he told them that they had come from the passage that led to the river, he knew that both men would think he lied. He remained silent.

"Got no tongue, eh!" he cried, skaking Sterling roughly. "Well we're going to give you time to think it over—a mighty long time," he grinned viciously. "Your friends won't know whatever became of you. Butting into other peopl's business ain't no health occupation."

While the man had been talking, Sterling had noticed that the other, believing that they could handle both boys without its assistance, had tossed his gun on the box beside him. It was Starr's chance. With a cry to Harry he sprang upon the man. Harry with a crouch flung himself at the other's legs, bringing him down with a low tackle.

Taken by surprise, Starr's man stepped back—for a moment only. With an oath he threw himself at Sterling in a furious attack. Starr sidestepped. The man missed him by an inch. Sterling jumped for the gun that lay on the box. To late—before his fingers could close over the weapon the man had hurled himself upon him. Both crashed to the floor. Sterling was underneath.

For a moment after his flying tackle, it seemed as if Harry might get the better of his man—it was for a moment only. With a side twist the man tore himself from Northway's grasp and flung himself upon him. Both boys were once more in the hands of the ruffians.

Driving a knee into his back, Northway's arms were twisted beneath him and he was bound hand and foot. A moment later Sterling, bound in a similiar manner, was flung beside him.

The two men held a whispered consultation. Sterling from where he lay, noticed the men give quich glances toward the box Northway had discovered.

Whatever the result of the consultation had been neither boy knew; for the men without a word gagged and blindfolded both of them. They were then jerked to their feet, half carried, half dragged along the passage.

A sudden fear smote Sterling with terrific force. Where were the men taking them? Were they going to drop them into the Mad River? He realized that both were sufficiently desperate to attempt anything. He could feel the damp air from the clammy rock, but which passage they had taken he could not tell.

Finally, without a word, they were both dropped and the retreating footsteps of the men grew less and less distinct. They were alone in the black silence of their rocky prison.

FAIRWAY WINS

Lord Derby's Colt Victor in Historic July Stakes Yesterday.

NEWMARKET, Eng., June 29.—(Canadian Press).—Lord Derby's two-year-old colt Fairway won historic July Stakes yesterday afternoon, beating by a head the Aga Khan colt Hakin, and leaving Lord Dewar's filly Jurisdiction three lengths behind. Nine entered the race, which has been run since 1876 over a five furlong 140 yard course. The race is worth about eight thousand dollars.

REDS TAKE TWO OUT OF THREE

Present New Battle Front to Defeat Chicago Cubs 8-1.

GIANTS LOSE 7-3

NEW YORK, June 29 (Canadian Press). — The Reds presented a new front to the enemy yesterday, and with success. The visiting Chicago Cubs fell before the onslaught, 8 to 1, giving the Reds two games out of the three played at Cincinnati. Zitzmann ,an old hand at shortstop post in the National League, was at the shortstop position, supplanting Pew Wee Wanninger, who is some place en route back to St. Paul.

Clarence Mitchell pitched the Phillies to a 7 to 3 victory over the Giants at Philadelphia, timely hitting by his team mates giving him a four-run lead in the first three innings. Henry, Songer, Fay Thomas, and Henry Boney occupied the mound for New York. Boney, a recruit from the University of Florida, made his initial start in the majors. Rogers Hornsby hit his 14th homer with Roush on base in the eighth.

The Cardinals Lose.

The Pittsburgh Pirates knocked Robert McGraw out of the box in the fifth inning at St. Louis, and won from the Cardinals, 9 to 8, thereby increasing their league leadership to 1½ games. Each team used four pitchers. Glenn Wright, Pirate shortstop, was hit on the head with a pitched ball in the seventh inning, and was carried off the field unconscious. Hospital physicians said his injury was slight, and he would be back in the game in a day or two. Two spectators fainted, and Keen, the Cardinal pitcher, was so nervous that he was taken out.

SOCIAL EVENING.

Held in Honor of Mr. and Mrs. Reginald McGee at Bonar Law.

BONAR LAW, June 28.—A very pleasing event took place on Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John S. McKeown, where about three hundred friends and relatives gathered there in honor of their daughter, Lillian, who was united in marriage to Reginald McGee on June 15. The numerous beautiful and costly gifts goes to show the high esteem in which the young couple are held. Music was supplied by Miss Freida Matthews of Stirling and Miss

CARTER HERO AT BUFFALO

Bison Outfielder Crashes Three Homers to Account for Seven Runs.

ORIOLES DEFEATED 6-5

NEW YORK, June 29 (Canadian Press). — Blackie Carter, slugging Bison outfielder, emulated Messrs. Gehrig, Ruth, Lazerri et al to beat the league stars single-handed at Buffalo yesterday. He crashed three homers on a line over the left field fence to account for seven runs, the score being 12 to 7. All of Carter's homers were registered off Sylvester Johnson, crack right-hander of the Stars. Carter usurped the hero role in the high spot of the game when in the seventh round Bissonette was purposely passed to get Blackie, who had previously cracked two homers. The visitors were leading, 7 to 6, but Carter immediately whistled his third circuit drive of the game far and wide over the left field fence to cinch matters once and for all. Carter drew a pass on his fourth time to bat, gaining credit for a perfect day.

Newark handed the Orioles their fourth consecutive defeat at Baltimore, 6 to 5. With the score at four-all in the eighth, Beard placed Earnshaw on the mound and hits by Mackin, Hawks, and Davis gave the visitors their two winning tallies. The Birds threatened again in the ninth when Maisel hit a long home run, and Porter followed with a double.

Reading's ninth inning rally fell short and Jersey City nosed out the keys in the first of the Reading series, 6 to 5. Reading scored three runs in the nal frame, Barbee hitting a homer as a pinch hitter with Quellich on first.

BELMONTS MEET LOCKBOYS TO-NIGHT

Great Struggle Promised Softball Fans at Confederation Square.

One of the best games of the local Softball League will be staged tonight at Confederation Square (Central Park) when the Lock Works will lock horns with the Belmonts. On the last occasion when these two teams met the Belmonts won out, but only after a gruelling ten-inning struggle. Tonight's game should be a repetition of the last struggle these two teams had.

It is likely that Joe Dunkerley will be sent in to stop the Belmonts, while either Harrison or Carruthers will receive the Belmonts pitching assignment.

There should be a record crowd on hand for to-night's big game. Lou Lebarr will start the teams away at 6.15 sharp and Max Swanston will call them on the bases.

YANKS REGAIN LEAGUE LEAD

Defeat Athletics 9-8 to Make Even Break of Series.

RALLIED IN 9TH

NEW YORK, June 29 (Canadian Press)—The Yanks defeated the Athletics in the last of their six-game series here yesterday by 9 to 8, giving New York an even break and enabling the Yanks to regain the ten-game lead with which they started.

The Athletics sprung a surprising rally in the 9th, scoring eight runs while it took almost the entire regular New York pitching staff to retire the side. Five runs were scored on straight hitting off Shocker and Moore before Pennock retired the first man. After three more runs came in, Thomas was sent into the box and he retired Simmons and Cochrane. The New York sluggers knocked Walberg off the slab in two innings and continued to pile up runs on Johnson, Rommel, and Pate, his successors. Gehrig got his 23rd circuit drive with Pascal on base in the third. It was also his 100th hit of the season.

Plays Hero Role

Lena Blackburn who, 12 years ago, starred as a White Sox infielder, played the hero role at Chicago in defeating Cleveland, 8 to 7, by a thrilling ninth inning finish. With the tieing run on second base, and one out, Blackburn inserted himself as a pinch hitter for Cole, in the absence of Manager Schalk, who had been put off the field by Umpire Owens for protesting a decision. Lena cracked a single which sent Peck home from second, tying the score. Hudlin replaced Shaute and Sheely greeted him with a single which sent Blackburn to third. Kamm followed with a long fly to Jacobson, which scored Blackburn with the winning run.

Alvin Crowder was the hero as Washington shut out Boston 4 to 0. Crowder held the Red Sox to two hits, both singles, and his double to left centre in the third inning scored the Senators' first two runs. It was the tenth straight defeat for the Boston club.

The Tigers captured both ends of a doubleheader from the St. Louis Browns at Detroit, taking the first game 9 to 3 and the second 6 to 3. The Tigers won the opening contest by hitting two lefthanders, Zachary and Falk, freely and they annexed the second with a three-run rally in the eighth at the expense of another lefthander, Wingard. This attack on Wingard settled a pitchers' battle between him and Rip Collins.

Wright Completes Training Schedule

HENLEY-ON-THAMES, Eng., June 29 (Canadian Press Cable)—Joe Wright, Jr., young sculler from Toronto, yesterday completed the training schedule he went through in preparation for his race today against T. D. Collett, noted English oarsman, in the first heat for the Diamond Sculls. It is the first step leading to the final on Saturday, and the world's amateur sculling championship.

Light work comprised Wright's workouts yesterday. The first time he paddled with Arlett, his trainer, to Fawley, and there practiced two starts. He reached 13 strokes to the minute within fifteen seconds each time. In the afternoon he again got quickly off the mark, getting his sell running fast in the first few strokes.

STAPLES TWIRLS BETHANY TO WIN OVER CRESCENTS

Ryley Hits First Homer of League and Tom Staples Has Triple.

SCORE IS 7 TO 3

BETHANY, June 29.—By introducing some long distance hitting and playing smart ball behind Staples' good pitching, Bethany defeated the league-leading Crescents here last night by the score of 7 to 3. Coming out of a bad slump, the home team found themselves, and, taking an early lead, outhit and outplayed the visitors to win their first game in four starts.

Billingsley opened for the Crescents and fanned the side in the first frame, but Bethany solved him in the second and fourth for four runs, Ryley getting the first home run of the league. Armstrong, who took the mound in the fifth also failed to hold the homesters in check.

Staples held Crescents to six hits, none of them being extra base wallops, and he struck out ten batsmen.

MISS JOAN FRY ENGLAND'S HOPE

Only Home Player Left in the Ladies' Singles at Wimbledon.

MEETS MISS WILLS.

WIMBLEDON, June 29. — Canadian Press. — Joan Fry remained last night as the sole hope of England in the woman's singles of the famous Wimbledon tournament. Yesterday she defeated Betty Nuthall, the conqueror of the United States champion, Mrs. Molla Bjurstedt Mallory. The defeat of Miss Nuthall, who has been looked upon as a likely semi-finalist, came as a blow to British hopes, which were further undermined by the defeat of Mrs. Kitty McKane Godfree, the 1926 Wimbledon champion. Mrs. Godfree went down before the racquet of Elizabeth Ryan, the Californian.

Another Californian Miss Helen Wills, disposed of Mrs. Peacock, of South Africa in straight sets.

Went to Front.

Joan Fry's victory was something of a surprise. Miss Nuthall actually started off like a winner, but her fellow country girl, who had been showing excellent form, went to the front in the second set and by brilliant play won ou by the score 1-6, 6-3, 6-4.

The match between Miss Ryan and Mrs. Godfree was pleasant to watch, for they played as though they enjoyed it, chatted and smiled as they crossed over and halted under the umpire's stand. But in the end fatigue overcame the English girl; she was playing in dejected fashion in the last seven games of the third set, of which she only won two.

Mrs. Godfree had the better of the contest in the first set, where the scoring followed service for the first four games. Miss Ryan used the chop stroke and made more errors than her opponents, and Mrs Godfree captured the set, 6-3.

The American player came back very strong in the second set and in the third had things almost entirely her own way, the match ending 3-6, 6-4, 6-4.

Made no Emotion.

The victory of Helen Wills created little emotion: it was a day's work for the businesslike Berkeley girl. The score was 6-3 6-1, her powerful stroking from the start indicating a speedy conclusion of the match.

The British found much cheer in the men's doubles. Thousands remained until dark and were rewarded by the overthrow of Borotra and Lacoste in the doubles by G. R. Crole Rees and C. J. Eames. The victory was cheered long and loud. Both Frenchmen had appeared in the singles matches during the day, and played listlessly in the doubles.

As the shades of night were falling the American-Japanese pair, Washburn and Harada, were having a spirited battle against E. D. Higgs and H. K. Lester of England, for the privilege of reaching the quarter finals. Washburn and Harada won the first two sets but the Englishman retaliated and the day closed with another British victory.

Five pairs have now reached the quarter finals in the men's doubles, four British and one American, Tilden and Hunter.

Perhaps Henri Cochet has never shown better tennis than he displayed against Francis T. Hunter yesterday. Hunter won the first two sets by brilliant play. Then Cochet came into action and in the last three sets was almost superhuman.

Snatched Victory.

Match ended in favor of Cochet, 3-6, 3-6, 6-2, 6-2, 6-3. Cochet pulled off a stunt losing the first two sets and then snatching victory out of defeat. Such is the faith in the reputation of Cochet as the greatest five-set player in the world that many bets at even money were made in the stands when the former little Lyons ball boy was behind, two sets to none.

Rene Lacoste, France, had an easy passage into the semi-finals, defeating Karl Koseluh, Czechoslovakia, without the loss of a set, 6-4, 6-3, 6-4, while Jean Borotra lost his usual set to Hans Timmer of Holland, before gaining the right to meet Lacoste.

Thus three Frenchmen and one American, Tilden, remain qualified for the semi-finals, and in the women's singles, two American women, Miss Wills and Miss Ryan, in addition to Senorita de Alvarez and Miss Fry.

Senorita de Alvarez had the hardest time of any semi-finalist in reaching that honor position. Mrs. P. Holcroft Watson of England, had the Spanish girl twice within a point of defeat in the last set, when leading 5-4 but was unable to see it through, and the senorita won 6-3, 3-6 8-6.

CANADIAN TEAM SHOOTING DAILY

Trying Weather Does Not Prevent Constant Practice at Bisley.

CADETS DOING WELL.

BISLEY CAMP, Eng., June 29. — (Canadian Press).—Since Monday the team of Canadians has experienced trying weather conditions on the rifle ranges here, but nevertheless the men have continued to get in useful practice work on the Century and Stickledown ranges. The team is shaping promisingly. Every one of the twenty members, including Commandant Duff Stewart of Vancouver and Adjutant Major D. T. McManus, of Belleville, are fit and well. They commence shooting in earnest with the N.R.A. tournament next week.

On Friday, Dominion Day, the team will attend service in Westminster Abbey, commemorating the diamond jubilee of Confederation.

The cadet team of five members from Hamilton, Ont., has been shooting splendidly all the week.

CRICKET NEWS.

LONDON, England, June 29 (Canadian Press Cable).—Another cricket record went by the board yesterday when, playing for the North in a Test Match trial against the South, Sutcliffe and Holmes, the great Yorkshire opening pair, both made centuries in a first wicket stand. This was the forty-first time that this pair have accomplished this sensational feat and yesterday they passed the previous best record held by Hobbs and Hayward of Surrey, who played together in a double century first wicket innings on forty occasions. Apart from this broken record the cricket matches which ended yesterday for the most part in a downpour of rain, were rather dismal affairs owing to wet wickets.

The M.C.C.-Cambridge University, Surrey-Somerset and Derby-Lancashire matches were abandoned as no play was possible yesterday. Kent won from Yorkshire on the first innings, as did Hampshire from Northants and Nottingshire from Gloucestershire. Oxford scored a win over H. D. G. Leveson-Gower's eleven by seven wickets, while the Leicester versus Warwickshire and the South versus the North fixtures were both drawn. The New Zealanders and the Scottish Counties match, in which there was more play than the English matches, was a drawn battle.

Scores in matches were:

M.C.C. versus Cambridge University at Lords: M.C.C., 295; Cambridge, 288.

Surrey versus Somerset at the Oval: Surrey, 133 for six wickets.

Hampshire versus Northamptonshire at Southampton: Hampshire, 347; Northants, 131 and 338 for nine wickets (Timms 59, Adams 154 not out).

Nottinghamshire versus Gloucestershire at Nottingham: Notts 264 for six wickets declared (Whosall 117 not out, Walker 52, Parker six wickets for 101); Gloucester, 149 and 11 for one wicket.

Oxford versus Leveson-Gower's eleven at Eastbourne: Oxford 158 and 158 for three wickets (Holmes 136 not out); Leenson-Gower's XI, 205 and 206.

Leicester versus Warwickshire, at Leicester: Warwick 193; Leicester, 60 for two wickets.

South versus North at Leeds: South 235 (Jardine 57, Chapman 70, Jupp six wickets for 90 runs); North 269 for no wickets (Sutcliffe 131, Holmes 127).

New Zealanders versus Scottish Counties: New Zealand 344; Scottish Counties 287 (Haigh 115, Wood 50, Merritt seven wickets for 74 runs); New Zealand, 103 for eight wickets, declared (Halloy four wickets for 31 runs; Scottish Counties, 72 for four wickets). Match drawn.

Derby versus Lancashire, at Manchester. No play.

Kent versus Yorkshire at Tonbridge Yorkshire, 131; Kent, 243.

LON CHANEY HAS MANDARIN ROLE IN "MR. WU"

The inscrutable Oriental—enigma of the ages—this is the latest role of Lon Chaney, "man of a thousand faces"—who had literally to learn a new psychology to play his latest part on the screen. This is the mysterious mandarin, Wu, in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's new drama of Oriental intrigue and revenge "Mr. Wu", which comes tomorrow to the Capitol Theatre.

Although not his first venture into Oriental roles, it is the first picture in which Chaney played an Oriental clear through the picture, and the first in which he was allowed full sway in plumbing the depths of such possibilities.

The character is that of a powerful mandarin, third man of power in the Empire, whose uncanny lore of centuries is agumented by the knowledge of Oxford; whose strange power almost suggests sorcery, and whose character is both lovable and sinister.

"For years," says Chaney, "I have longed to play the real Oriental—the actual product of China's countless ages of introspection. In his story I was given the opportunity. Written by an author who knows every intricacy of the Orient and its psychology, it is the most nearly perfect pen-picture of mysterious China ever done—although the story is laid in ultra-modern times."

The play deals with the uncanny revenge plot of the mandarin when a member of an English family in the Orient dishonors his daughter. It illustrates perfectly the strange code of morals of the Orient, whereby life of a human being is held absolutely valueless against the traditions built up through centuries of custom.

The play is staged on a gorgeous scale with a cast that includes Renee Adoree as the mandarin's daughter, Louise Dresser as the English mother, Gertrude Olmsted, Claude King, Ralph Forbes, Anna May Wong and others of note. William Nigh, the director of "The Fire Brigade", directed the new story.

Chaney's facial disguise is one of the most intricate he has ever attempted, and Miss Adoree wears a make-up no less difficult as his daughter in the strange play.

TOM MIX GIVES CAST REAL THRILLS WHILE FILMING SCENES

Actors who appear in the final scenes of "The Broncho Twister," Fox Films new production starring Tom Mix, escape death by the jingle of the spurs on their boot heels. These striking scenes will be shown at the Regent Theatre from Thursday to Saturday.

The closing sequence pictures a desperate gun battle at a ranch house. The desperadoes have Tom surrounded and his fortress is shot full of holes. He finds a barrel of powder to which he attaches a lighted fuse. Then he rolls the barrel from a higher tower over the roofs of several lower structures. It hits the ground and explodes just as the desperadoes are dashing from one structure to another. The side of the house is ripped off by the through the doorway.

In filming these scenes many old troopers in the cast had the thrill of their lives, as they later told Mix blast just as the last of the gang dive.

The British Empire is the world's peacemaker, Sir Cecil Hurst, local adviser to the British Ministry of Foreign Affairs, declared in an address before the English Speaking Union and the Chicago Council of Foreign Affairs in Chicago this week. Above Lord Cecil is shown in caricature.

CHAPTER XXIX

Vilak turned his blackened face from his rifle an instant, shot a glance at the chemist, squeezed his shoulder affectionately. "Hard luck, Nanny," he said cheerily. "Work for you, Elise."

He swung his head back to his rifle and began to redouble the rate of his already rapid fire. "Cheer up, Nanny. Needed another wounded man to keep me company. You with your arm and I with the wrist I got the other night will go around singing with a grind organ after we get out of this. Make more that way than you do with chemistry."

Elise had hastened forward to examine the wound. Nunnally tried to prevent her, "No....er....No," he stammered. "It isn't anything.... Just a scratch....A splinter of steel—a—er—splinter. Fix it myself....Need you at the window."

Elise did not heed him. She looked at the floor, now in places covered with an inch or two of water from the spring trickling in the corner. She found a clear pool and in one instant had brought water from it and washed the wound, in the next had torn a strip of cloth from her dress and tied it in a tight bandage checking the flow of blood.

The gray silk appeared like a great butterfly which had settled on his wispy arm. A bell began to ring in some far off part of the house. The dog bayed loudly. Prentiss' cadaverous body writhed, his angular face contorted with fear, his eyes were the eyes of a trapped beast. "They've gotten in...." he panted. "Gotten in.."

Vilak shook his head. "No. Sure they haven't. I can see too plainly. A bullet must have cut one of the electric wires around the lock." A man's silhouette appeared on the barbed wire which overtopped the wall. Vilak fired. The silhouette toppled. "Good idea that extra wire. Makes them perfect targets. Don't think they'll try that again even if they do know now that is isn't carrying high voltage."

The besiegers' firing became desultory. Vilak took advantage of the interval of inaction to stretch his cramped muscles and light a cigaret. The match sputtered into the water at his feet. He gazed at it philosophically. "Hope none of you are susceptible to pneumonia, with all this water on the floor. Seems to me I've been living in the liquid for the past month."

He splashed over to the box of cartridges, which for security against a stray bullet had been put behind a heavy wooden chest. He fingered the bullets thoughtfully.

"No use losing our heads, but the cold, fact has to be admitted that we're in a pretty situation. Our ammunition's running very low, our enemy is superior in numbers, at least four times ourselves, I should say judging by the rifle bullets. At the most, even with no change of tactics on their part and with everything in our favor, we can hold them off only two hours or so while it will be morning before anyone learns that the report of the flood is false and returns to Porto Verde. So we can expect no help there. A beautiful job this. Perfectly planned. I extend our friends outside my compliments."

He flicked the ash from his cigaret. "If any of you have any ideas, they'll be welcome."

Elise and the old man looked at him and shook their heads. Prentiss kept his eyes fixed now on the gate, did not turn from his window, but now on the house. Vilak stretched again, then returned to his post. A sound of chopping rose up from the creek, followed soon after by the rumble of a falling tree.

Elise glanced at Vilak questioningly. "A battering ram, probably," he said. "About time they thought of it. They'll try to break down the gate. And at the loss of a few men they'll undoubtedly do it, for most of them can keep in the shelter of the wall."

A few moments later they heard the dull, muffled booming of wood against iron as a log struck the gate. They fired. The muffled thunder continued, in short, regular intervals like the reports of some distant artillery regiment practicing on the range. The pile of cartridges grew smaller.

The old man despite his wounded arm, had resumed firing. His rifle jammed. Vilak cleared it. "Gate can't last much longer," he muttered.

The spring in the corner gurgled softly, the water rose an instant, then trickled noisily over stone door-sill. A brilliant green caterpillar, irritated by the acrid smoke of the guns, crawled out of a crack in the rocks and began climbing the wall. Some frightened, unseen nightbird dashed against the window; a juguar howled far off in the jungle.

Vilak took betel. He became absorbed in contemplation, his finger mechanically pressing the trigger of his rifle; his eyes became the dull, dreaming eyes of a philosopher in some Tibetan lamasary; the thin film like a bord's inner eyelid crept slowly over the white eyeballs again.

Suddenly he put down his rifle. "A perfect idiot," he flashed, as he hurried to the other side of the tower and began surveying the low plateau back of Prentiss' house. "Completely losing my imagination. For the second time in a week I've ignored the means of escape when it was crying to be used. Any powder or dynamite here, Prentiss?"

The other whipped away from the window. The mark on his forhead quivering. "Dynamite?....Not much ....A little," he whispered feverishly. "Left over....Blasting....for wall." His face was flaming. "Got a plan? Got a plan?"

Vilak nodded quickly. "Where is it?"

"Little shed.....few feet back here....."

"Let's get it."

They crept out the door, keeping to the shadows. They were not perceived by the attackers; in a moment they had returned to the tower room with two packages wrapped in dirty newspapers. These Vilak untied and, exposing a number of sticks of dynamite, examined them closely. "Still good all right. Not touched by dampness." He shot a glance toward the old man and the girl. Fire fast as you can. Delay them. Time's the important thing now."

The log boomed monotonously against the gate. He took the piece of twine in which one package had been wrapped and rubbing it with the explosive to make a fuse. "What's your plan? What's your plan?" Prentiss panted.

"Not mine. Nature's. Should have thought of it at once, with that spring gurgling there and soaking our shoes all the time. The water up in those little lakes on the high ground all around you is doing its best to break through and come down on us. We'll give it a little assistance."

He searched among the newspapers for a detonator. "Blow up part of that retaining wall I noticed damming that first fairly large lake back of your house. Do it with a pick if we have to, but the dynamite's quicker. Our friends outside said there was a flood. We'll give them one. Nothing original. The Dutch did it all the time when the country was invaded. Cut the dykes, if you remember."

He tied the sticks in series of three's. "Not so safe here. Taking chances. A lot of water up there. Don't know exactly how much. And we're only ten feet or so higher than the creek bed. Perfectly apt to get us as well as the others. But it's the only chance we've got."

The booming of the log ceased, probably to allow the attackers to rest. Prentiss stared at Vilak, half fearful, half incredulous. Going to ....let the lakes....down on us"

"Yes."

CORNS
Quickly relieved from painful corns, tender toes and pressure of tight shoes.
Dr Scholl's Zino-pads
At drug and shoe stores everywhere

"Wash us away.....everything away."

"If you have a less dangerous plan we'll be delighted to take it."

Prentiss shook his head sullenly.

Vilak swiftly rebundled the explosive in a newspaper and started toward the door. He turned to Prentiss. "Any way I can get through the wall? Don't want to climb over unless I have to. Almost sure to be seen."

"There's a place. Old drainage sewer. Barred up now. But can get through if you know how. Straight line from kitchen."

"Better come and show me. Save time."

"All right. Want to get outside anyway." The two men disappeared into the darkness. Elise and Nunnally turned their back, sweating faces an instant to watch them go, then silently resumed their vigil at the windows. The battering of the log recommenced. The two defenders renewed their fire. Once more the battering ceased.

WEDDING BELLS.

FERGUSON—MARTIN

A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Monday, June 27th, at 4 p.m., at All Saints' Church, Rev. J. D. Paterson officiating, when Ruth Elliot, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Martin, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Ernest C. Ferguson, youngest son of Mrs. W. Ferguson, Margaret Island, Rice Lake, and the late Mr. W. Ferguson.

The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her father, to the strains of the Wedding March, looked charming in a dress of powder blue georgette, leghorn hat, blonde shoes, stockings and gloves to match, with bouquet of sweetheart roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Dorothy Hill of Toronto, cousin of the bride, carrying a bouquet of carnations, was lovely in yellow georgette, white silk corded hat, blonde stockings and black patent shoes. The groom was assisted by Mr. George Remnant of Toronto.

Following the ceremony a reception to about forty guests was served at the home of the bride's parents.

The young couple were the recipients of many beautiful presents. They will reside in Hamilton.

HANCOCK—STOREY.

A quiet but pretty wedding took place at high noon to-day in George street United church, decorated for the occasion with ferns and peonies, when Margaret Irene, younger daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Storey, of this city, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Melville George Hancock, son of Mr. and Mrs. George T. Hancock, of Port Hope. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. E. Todd. Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by Reginald Storey, who also played the "Lohengrin" bridal music during the signing of the register.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Merton J. Storey, wore an exquisite gown of ivory satin-faced crepe, made in sleeveless style with tight bodice and bouffant skirt of Spanish lace flounces over the satin. A circlet of orange blossoms caught the flat ivory ribbons which fell from the waistline to the hem of the skirt in front. With this was worn a hat of ivory grosgrain silk, with georgette brim and flat silk embroidery, also white kid slippers and white silk hose. The bride, who was unattended, carried a shower bouquet of sweetheart roses and lily of the valley.

After the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Hancock left by motor to spend the First of July in Ottawa, thence to Montreal, where they will take a boat trip down the St. Lawrence to Quebec City. The bride travelled in a lovely three-piece suit of frost silk crepe. The short coat ,with all-over French chiffley (cut work) embroidery effect, and the pleated skirt were developed in morning glory blue and the top in heavy ivory silk crepe. A hat of the same shade of blue was of silk crochet straw, with flat raffia ornaments in pink, yellow and green, similar shades appearing on the blue raffia purse which was carried. Kid shoes and hose of rosewood shade were worn ,also the gift of the bridegroom, an amber fox fur scarf. The bride's travelling coat was of natural colored kasha cloth with deep hem and ornamental motifs of black.

Mr. and Mrs. Hancock will reside in Port Hope.

O'BRIEN—O'BRIEN.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at eight o'clock this morning at St. Peter's Cathedral, when Margaret Anne, eldest daughter of Mrs. Winifred O'Brien and the late William O'Brien, became the bride of Dr. James Francis O'Brien, of Peterborough. Rev. P. Costello performed the ceremony.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Dr. J. M. O'Brien, entered the church to the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Hurley. She wore a lovely gown of ivory satin-faced crepe, made in period style, with long sleeves and bouffant skirt draperies. Pearl embroidery ornamented the bodice and outlined the points of the hem of the skirt, which was inset with motifs of point lace. A veil of Brussels lace was worn, made in Spanish coronet style, with garniture of orange blossoms. A string of pearls, white kid slippers with buckles of orange blossoms, white silk hose, and a bouquet of butterfly roses completed the bride's costume.

The bridesmaid, Miss Mary Harrison, of Toronto, wore a French frock of shell-pink georgette, in bouffant style, the skirt made with alternating rows of frilled pink satin ribbon. Rhinestones trimmed the bodice and skirt. The hat was a large picture shape of shell-pink mohair, banded with velvet. Miss Harrison wore kid slippers and white silk hose, and carried a bouquet of Columbia roses.

Little Doris Fahey, of Toronto, niece of Miss Harrison, was a charming flower girl, in a frock of yellow organdie trimmed with blue ribbons and tiny French flowers. She wore a bandeau of yellow roses and carried a basket containing yellow roses and carnations, centred by a large white lily.

Dr. M. Crough acted as best man, and ushers were Messrs. V. McCabe and B. Hickey.

During the Mass, Miss Ernestine McManus, wearing a figured dress of Japanese crepe and hat to match, sang an Ave Maria and the hymn to the Sacred Heart.

After the ceremony a wedding breakfast and reception was held at the home of the bride. Her mother, Mrs. O'Brien, assisted the wedding party in receiving, wearing black and gold crepe, with white hat and corsage bouquet of sweet peas. The bride's table was centred by the wedding cake, surrounded by pink tulle sprinkled with rose leaves. Pink candles were in silver holders.

Later, Dr. and Mrs. O'Brien motored to Port Hope, en route to a boat trip down the St. Lawrence and the Saguenay, to Ste. Anne de Beaupre. On their return, they will reside at 228 McDonnel Street.

The bride travelled in a dress of rose beige crepe, with grosgrain hat to match, blonde shoes and hose, and amber fox fur scarf. Her coat was of natural coloured kasha cloth

May Broadcast Services at Westminster Commemorating Canada's Diamond Jubilee

LONDON, June 29 (Canadian Press Cable). — It is understood that plans are being made for broadcasting the service in Westminster Abbey on Friday, commemorating the Diamond Jubilee of Canada's Confederation, but it is not yet certain that this will be done.

As already announced, the Duke of Connaught will represent King George at the service, and it is expected that the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London will be among the clergy present. The Abbey choir will be assisted by the choir of St. George's, Windsor. The congregation will include almost every member of the British Cabinet and the Diplomatic Corps. Also present will be Princess Louise, Lady Patricia and Captain Ramsay, the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, the Marquis and Marchioness of Aberdeen, Viscount and Viscountess Byng, Hon. James Malcolm, Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce, Hon. Robert Forke, Canadian Minister of Immigration, and Hon. P. C. Larkin, Canadian High Commissioner in London.

Every available seat in the Abbey has already been allotted. It is interesting to recall that it was within a stone's throw of the Abbey that the Dominion really came into being ,for at the Westminster Palace Hotel the Fathers of Confederation hammered out the details of the plan during the winter of 1866-1867. For Sir John A. MacDonald that winter was notable for two reasons—his second marriage to Miss Bernard at St. George's, Hanover Square, and his narrow escape from burning to death when his bedclothing caught fire while he was reading in bed. His injuries necessitated his spending Christmas in bed.

In Coronation Year, 1911, a tablet was unveiled in the room where the Fathers of Confederation deliberated by Sir Charles Tupper, the last surviving Father, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in London for the Coronation and the Imperial Conference, was also present. The Hotel Westminster Palace failed to survive the war, being converted into suites of offices, but care was taken to preserve the tablet.

Celebrate July 1st in Peterboro

Seven years ago, Thursday, June 30th, we started in business at 168 Charlotte street. To mark our 7th Anniversary and give our employees a chance to enjoy the Confederation celebration, our Stores will close at 1 p.m., Saturday, July 2nd.

We want to take this opportunity of thanking the people of Peterborough and vicinity for their hearty support in the past, and trust we may merit a continuance of the same in the future.
